PREFACE TO THE LONDON EDITION.

THE extensive spread of general knowledge among the middle and lower classes, is one of the most auspicious features of the present age, and will raise the next generation considerably in the scale of society; but while every other branch of useful science is brought within their grasp, it would be much to be lamented if the knowledge of Religion and the Scriptures should be neglected. "The art of holy living and dying," as it has been called, is the most important of all arts; and the knowledge of the true God through Jesus Christ will be found of supreme importance, when all other knowledge will be useless.

There are many persons, both in early and advanced life, who take great pleasure in searching the Scriptures, according to our Lord's command, and in exploring with great industry those sacred mines of truth and righteousness; but for want of an acquaintance with the original languages, with ancient history, and oriental manners, they are impeded and discouraged; especially when they meet with men who not only reject the Bible themselves, but delight to depreciate and degrade it; thus perplexing and discouraging those who wish to make it, not only their study, but their directory through life.

From a desire to assist such persons, both in studying the Scriptures and in repelling their opponents, the COTTAGE BIBLE was projected. To the execution of his plan, the Editor brings no pretensions of ability, but that of having studied the Scriptures for half a century, and formed a collection of books the most necessary and suitable to assist him in the design. The substance of these works, which, taken together, are both voluminous and expensive, he has endeavoured to compress into the smallest compass, and to add, in the most concise form, such practical suggestions and remarks as appeared to him the proper improvement of each subject, in order to render it as well useful as instructive.

The Title of this work, which is addressed to Cottagers, has been differently construed. While some have commended its modesty, others, by confounding cottages with hovels, have thought the term degrading. Cottagers, according to Johnson, are "the inhabitants of small houses," whether mechanics or manufacturers, agriculturists, fishermen, or shepherds, (Zeph.

ii. 6. ;) among which classes were ranked the AUTHOR of our salvation, and his first disciples; and such indeed form, in all ages, the great mass of Bible readers. But if, as has been intimated by some learned friends, the work is no less calculated to gratify persons in the superior classes, it will afford the Editor additional satisfaction to have been thus honoured, and excite deeper gratitude to Him, "from whom every good," as well as every "perfect gift, descends."

As the work commenced anonymously, so it was the Editor's wish, had not the partial kindness of his friends prevented, to have remained unknown. On that account, and not from any affectation of consequence, he adopted the plural number in his Address, as is usual in anonymous publications. It seemed also more suitable for one who affected not to be original, but chiefly to collect and condense the remarks of others. That he has sometimes adverted to sciences connected with religion, to the relations and remarks of travellers in the Holy Land, and to some of "the curiosities of sacred literature," will not, he supposes, be thought out of character, now that philosophical lectures are delivered to the working classes, not only in the metropolis, but in several other great towns. The Editor has, however, purposely avoided the introduction of Hebrew and Greek characters; and even the critical Notes will require nothing but a common English education to render them intelligible.

With regard to the religious sentiments expressed in these volumes, it has been the Author's aim to follow the inspired writers, and by no means to bend them to his preconceived opinions, or to any human system. He has never shunned (and trusts he shall not) fearlessly to express what he conceives to be their meaning; at the same time he ventures to hope, that he has expressed himself with becoming modesty, imploring, both for himself and for his readers, that "wisdom" from above, which is "profitable," and even necessary, "to direct" us in all cases, and particularly in Theological inquiries. For, though human industry may be thought sufficient for a merely critical knowledge of any writings, it is only by the assistance of the Holy Spirit that we can taste the evangelical savour, or feel the purifying influences, of the sacred Scriptures.

PREFACE TO THE AMERICAN EDITION.

WHILST the Editor cannot subscribe to every sentiment in the Cottage Bible, he is, nevertheless, happy in bearing testimony to its decidedly Evangelical tone and spirit. The Author, with commendable impartiality, has stated what he conceived to be the meaning of the Scriptures, "without bending them to his preconceived opinions, or to any human system." Upon a careful examination, very little has been found that was sectarian, or that could justly give offence to any Christian denomination. The essential doctrines of the Gospel are clearly exhibited and illustrated. Particular attention has been given to passages, against which objections have been made.

The original plan of the work commended itself generally, whilst there were some things, however, decidedly objectionable. Some alterations have been made in the present Edition, which, it is hoped, have added materially to its value. In the London Edition, some words in the text, "esteemed objectionable," were "exchanged for others more suitable to the present state of our language and of society." These, though they were carefully pointed out in the Notes, have been rejected, and the language of the authorized version retained. A new division of the chapters into paragraphs was also introduced "for the convenience of family reading;" these have been rejected, and the usual divisions followed. Considerable portions of the text were printed in smaller type, to denote, that they were "unsuitable for reading in families;" Upon these, the Author furnished no exposition. In the present edition, the type of the text is uniform throughout, and with the exception of the books of Chronicles, an Exposition has been supplied, by selections from the judicious commentary of Thomas Scott.

Instead of placing small sections of chronology at the commencement of a few books, a full and complete table of Chronology will be found at the close; whilst the year of the world and the year before Christ, are always placed at the top of the centre column. Only a small part of the Introductory Essay, showing the divinity of the Scriptures, has been retained: whilst copious selections have been made from the very able and valuable dissertation, on the same subject, which forms the introduction to Bagster's Comprehensive Bible, enriched also by additions from other sources. This constitutes the Introduction to this edition, and presents a full yet condensed defence of the claims of the Bible to be the word of God. Bagster's introductory and concluding remarks upon the several books of the Old and New Testaments have been examined, and in general incorporated. The centre column, containing the marginal readings and references of the Polyglott Bible, have been added, as have also very full contents of the chapters. Many of the notes, in the London edition, were mere references to parallel passages, or stating the marginal readings; these, and much more, being found in the centre column, are omitted in the notes. Some new matter has been introduced into the Exposition, either to explain things local, or to enlarge the list of different interpretations. The Notes are considerably increased, by selections from Bagster's Comprehensive Bible, the works of Dr. J. Owen, Dr. J. Pye Smith, Dr. Watts, Bishop Lowth, A. Keith, President Edwards, and the like; also from the Commentaries of Willet, Pool, Henry, Scott, Stewart, and others. Free use has been made of authors illustrating the historical facts, natural history, and geography of the Bible; also the manners and customs of Eastern and ancient nations. The Cottage Bible, as now presented to the public, probably contains more to illustrate the Scriptures, from travels, than can be found in the same compass and expense, in any other Commentary. By consulting the marginal references, the reader will often find notes illustrating manners and customs, geography, and the like, which, for economy of room, it was not judged expedient frequently to repeat. Where the notes of Bagster and those of the Cottage Bible contained different solutions, or have exhibited different opinions of the same passage, the Editor has preferred to insert both, that each reader may make his own selection. Where the notes of Bagster and of the Cottage Bible were extracts or compends of the same author, the one the most full has been retained. The Maps accompanying the present edition have been prepared with great care, after an extended comparison of authorities, and, it is hoped, will be found well calculated to aid the student of the Bible in obtaining accurate geographical knowledge. The plates are designed not merely to ornament the work, but to illustrate important portions of the word of God.

PREFACE TO THE AMERICAN EDITION.

The critical student will find, in the notes, extensive references to works of standard merit, by consulting which he may pursue his investigations. It has, however, been a leading object of the Editor, to render the work GENERALLY AND EXTENSIVELY USEFUL. In family worship, it will be found interesting and instructive, since the exposition seizes upon the current events of the chapter, or presents prominently those of most practical importance. Particular attention has been paid to make it valuable to Sunday school teachers and Bible classes, especially by the light which it throws upon many passages, from its illustrations of geography, and the manners and customs of former times.

It is not pretended, that the Cottage Bible contains every thing that could be desired, or that it is free from defects; still, it is believed, that it presents a very large amount of valuable matter, in a small compass, and at a small expense.

Encouraged by the increasing demand for judicious commentaries upon the word of God, this book, with its modest though pleasant title, is now committed to the world, with the prayer, that the HOLY SPIRIT may ever accompany its perusal, and by it make many wise unto salvation.

DIRECTIONS TO THE READER.

The arrangement of the various portions of the Work is as follows: the REFERENCES are adverted to by Superior letters. In the References, the order followed is this: Those in the first column extend down the page in regular order, as far as the dash —; then follow the References in the second column—each chapter commencing with the alphabet, which is repeated as often as is necessary: the Verses are first introduced that belong to the chapter to which the Verse under consideration belongs; then the Chapters in the Book itself, after which, all the References are arranged from Genesis to Revelation. A period (.) is placed between chapter and verse; a comma (,) between verse and verse; and two dots (..) show 17.23. to mean 17 to 23. The CHRONOLOGY at the top of a column denotes the proper date of the beginning of the column of text to which it refers; and the Chronology lower in the column refers to the date of the transaction which is detailed in that verse before the references of which it is placed.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Sacred Volume, which we term the BIBLE, or the BOOK, by way of eminence, consists of two grand parts, the Old Testament and the New Testament: containing conjointly a variety of different compositions, historical, poetical, and judicial, moral, preceptive, and prophetic, written at various times by different persons, through a space of fifteen hundred years, and afterwards collected into a volume.

GENUINENESS.

That these books are genuine, that is, were written by those persons whose names they bear, we have the most satisfactory evidence; and have no more reason to doubt, than that the histories which we have under the names of HERODOTUS, XENOPHON, or TACITUS, were written by those authors. For,

1. The books of the Old Testament have always been received as genuine by the Jews, and those of the New Testament by Christians, from the earliest period to the present time; and, in addition to the earlier books being cited or alluded to by subsequent sacred writers, we have ample evidence afforded of the genuineness of the Old Testament by Jewish Translators and Writers, and of that of the New, by a regular succession of Christian Writers, who quote or allude to a number of passages as we now read them, from the times of the Apostles to the present hour; nor was their genuineness ever impugned by the most determined and acute Jewish or heathen adversaries, or heretics.

2. The language and style of writing, both in the Old and New Testaments, prove them to have been composed at the time and by the persons to whom they are ascribed. Their diversity of style proves them to have been the work of various authors; and competent Hebrew scholars have shown, that the difference of character and style of the language in the Old Testament, as well as the introduction of certain foreign words, can only be accounted for by the supposition that they were composed at different and distant periods, and by the authors to whom they are attributed; while the Greek, in which the New Testament is written, which is intermixed with many Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, and Latin words and idioms, accords only with the time, situation, country, and circumstances, of the persons to whom it is ascribed.

3. The moral impossibility of their being forgeries is an additional evidence of their genuineness; for, it is impossible to establish forged writings as genuine in any place where there are persons strongly inclined, and well qualified, to detect the fraud. Now, if the books of the Old Testament be forgeries, they must have been invented either by Gentiles, Jews, or Christians. But they could not have been invented by the Gentiles, because they were alike ignorant of the history and sacred rites of the Hebrews, who most unquestionably would never have given their approbation to writings invented by them, nor yet to any fabrications of the Christians, by whom, it is evident, they could not have been forged, as they were extant long before the Christian name had any existence; and it is equally certain that they were not invented by the Jews, because they contain various difficult laws and precepts, and relate all their idolatries, crimes, and punishments, which would not have been inserted if they had been forged by them. Equally impossible is it, that the books of the New Testament were forged; for the Jews were the most violent enemies of Christianity; they put its founder to death; and both Jews and Gentiles persecuted his disciples with implacable hatred. Hence, if the New Testament had been forged, the Jews would certainly have detected the imposture; and the inhabitants of Palestine would not have received the Gospels, nor the churches of Rome and Corinth acknowledged the epistles addressed to them, if they had not had sufficient evidence of their genuineness. In fact, these arguments are so strong, that if we deny the genuineness of the Sacred Writings we may, with a thousand times more propriety, reject all the other writings in the world as spurious.

UNCORRUPTED PRESERVATION.

That the Sacred Writings are not only genuine, but have been transmitted to us entire and uncorrupted, and that they are, in all essential points, the same as they came originally from the hands of their authors, we have the most satisfactory evidence that can be required. That, in the various transcripts of these writings, as in all other ancient books, a few letters, syllables, or even words, may have been changed, we do not pretend to deny; but that there has been any designed or fraudulent corruption of any considerable part, especially of any doctrine, or important part of history or prophecy, no one has ever attempted to prove.

1. With regard to the Old Testament, the original manuscripts were long preserved among the Jews, who were always remarkable for being most faithful guardians of their sacred books, which they transcribed repeatedly, and compared most carefully with the originals, of which they even numbered the words and letters. That the Jews have neither mutilated nor corrupted these writings, is fully proved by the silence of the prophets, as well as of Christ and his apostles, who, though they bring many heavy charges against them, never once accuse them of corrupting one of their sacred writings; and also by the agreement, in every essential point, of all the versions and manuscripts (amounting to nearly 1150) which are now extant, and which furnishes a clear proof of their uncorrupted preservation. In fact, the constant reading of their sacred books, (which were at once the rule of their faith, and of their political constitution,) in public and private; the numerous copies of the originals, as well as of the Septuagint version, which was widely spread over the world; the various sects and parties into which the Jews were divided after their canon was closed; as well as their dispersion into every part of the globe, concurred to render any attempt at fabrication improbable and impossible before the time of Christ; and after that period, the same books being in the hands of the Christians, they would instantly have detected the fraud of the Jews, if they had endeavoured to accomplish such a design; while the silence of the Jews, (who would not have failed to notice the attempt if it had been made,) is a clear proof that they were not corrupted by the Christians.

2. Equally satisfactory is the evidence for the integrity and incorruptness of the New Testament. The multiplication of copies, both of the original, and of translations into a variety of foreign languages, which were read, not only in private, but publicly in the religious assemblies of the early Christians; the reverence of the Christians for these writings; the variety of sects and heresies which soon arose in the Christian church, each of whom appealed to the Scriptures for the truth of their doctrines, rendered any material alteration in the sacred books utterly impossible; while the silence of their acutest enemies, who would most assuredly have charged them with the attempt if it had been made, and the agreement of all the manuscripts and versions extant, are positive proofs of the integrity and incorruptness of the New Testament: which are farther attested by the agreement with it of all the quotations which occur in the writings of the Christians from the earliest age to the present time. In fact, so far from there having been any gross adulteration in the Sacred Volumes, the best and most able critics have asserted and proved that, even in lesser matters, the Holy Scriptures of the New Testament have suffered less from the injury of time, and the errors of transcribers, than any other ancient writings whatever; and that the very worst manuscript extant would not pervert one article of our faith, or destroy one moral precept.

AUTHENTICITY.

It is no less certain that the Sacred Writings are authentic, that is, relate matters of fact as they really happened; and consequently, that they are entitled to the fullest credit, and possess the greatest authority. For,

1. The Sacred Writers had the very best means of information, and could not be deceived themselves. They were, for the most part, contemporary with, and eye-witnesses of the facts they record; and those transactions which they did not see, they derived from the most certain evidences, and drew from the purest sources. Thus, in the four last books of the Pentateuch, Moses had a chief concern in all the transactions there related; and the authors of the subsequent historical books, as Joshua, Samuel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, as well as the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, relate those events of which they were witnesses; and, when they relate events that took place before their own times, they refer to certain public documents and annals, then extant, which might be appealed to by their readers. - In like manner, the writers of the New Testament, as Matthew, John, Peter, James, and Jude, were the immediate disciples of our Saviour; his constant attendants and companions throughout his ministry; eye-witnesses of the facts and miracles, and ear-witnesses of the discourses they relate; and the other sacred writers, as Mark and Luke, though themselves not apostles, yet were the contemporaries and companions of apostles, and in habits of society and friendship with those who had been present at the transactions they record; as St. Luke expressly affirms in the beginning of his Gospel: 'Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of these things which are most surely believed amongst us; even as they delivered them unto us, which, from the beginning, were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, it seemed good to me, also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee, in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed.'

2. As the sacred writers could not be deceived themselves, so they neither could nor would deceive others. They were so many in number, and lived at such a distance of time and place from each other, that it was utterly impossible for them to carry on any forgery or fraud without being detected; and the writers of the New Testament, in particular, were plain, honest, artless, unlearned men, in very humble occupations of life, and utterly incapable of carrying on such a refined and complicated system of fraud, as the Christian religion must have been, if it was not true. The principal facts and events themselves are of such a nature as totally precludes the possibility of imposition; facts which appeal to the very senses of the men to whom the histories were first addressed. Thus Moses could not have persuaded a body of six hundred thousand men (to whom he appeals for the truth and reality of those facts, De. xi. 2) that they had seen rivers turned into blood,—frogs filling the houses of the Egyptians,—their fields destroyed by hail and locusts,—their land covered with palpable darkness,—their first-born slain in one night,—the Red Sea forming a wall on the right hand and left for the passage of the Israelites, but overwhelming their enemies,—a pillar of cloud and fire conducting them,—manna falling down from heaven for their food,—water gushing out of the rock to quench their thirst,—and the earth opening and destroying his opponents,—if all these things had been false. Nor could the Evangelical historians have succeeded in persuading their countrymen and contemporaries, that a man, whose death was public and notorious, was risen again from the dead,—that darkness had covered the land at the time of his execution,—and that there had been an earthquake at the moment of his decease,—if all these events had not taken place. And, as it is thus evident, that the sacred writers could not possibly impose upon others: so it is equally certain that they would not make the attempt. The whole tenor of their lives demonstrated, as even their bitterest enemies have confessed, that they were men of piety and integrity; and they could have no possible motive to induce them to propagate a deliberate falsehood. They sought neither riches nor glory; and their writings bear the most unequivocal marks of veracity, candour, and impartiality. They use no panegyric or flattery; they offer no palliation for their own frailties and follies; they conceal nothing; they alter nothing, however disgraceful to their heroes and sovereigns, to their own nation, or to themselves. How then can they be supposed capable of so gross an imposition as that of asserting and propagating the most impudent fictions? The writers of the New Testament especially could gain by it neither pleasure, profit, nor power. On the contrary, it brought upon them the most dreadful evils, and even death itself. If, therefore, they were cheats, they were cheats without any motive, and without any advantage; nay, contrary to every motive and every advantage that usually influence the actions of men. They preached a religion which forbids falsehood under pain of eternal punishment and misery; and yet, on this supposition, they supported that religion by falsehood; and, whilst guilty of the basest and most useless knavery themselves, they were taking infinite pains, and enduring the greatest labour and suffering, in order to teach mankind honesty. This is a mode of acting so contrary to all experience, to all the principles of human nature, and to all the motives of human conduct, as to exceed the bounds of belief, and to compel every reasonable being at once to reject such a supposition as absurd and monstrous. Hence the facts related in the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, especially, even those evidently miraculous, must be true; for the testimony of those who dite for what they assert, and of which they are competent judges, is sufficient evidence to support any miracle whatever.

3. Such a multitude of minutely particular circumstances of time, place, person, &c., is mentioned in the books of the Old and New Testaments, as affords a clear and unquestionable proof both of their genuineness and authenticity. No forged or false accounts of things thus superabound with particularities, and no forged, or relater of falsehoods, would mention so great a number of particulars, since this would put into his reader's hands so many criteria by which to detect him; nor, in fact, could he produce such a minute detail of circumstances. It is easy to conceive how faithful records, kept from time to time by persons concerned in the transactions, should contain such a minute account of things; but it would be a work of the highest invention, and greatest stretch of genius, to raise from nothing such numberless particulars as are almost every where to be met with in the Old and New Testaments,—particulars, the falsehood of which would most assuredly have been detected by the persons most interested in detecting them, if they had been forged or false. These accounts were published among the people who witnessed the events related by the historians, and who could, with the greatest ease, have exposed any fraud or falsehood, if there had been any, in the details of such transactions: but they did not attempt to question either the reality of the facts, or the fidelity of the narrators; and their acquiescence with them, as well as their obedience to the injunctions contained in these books, are conclusive evidence in favour both of their genuineness and authenticity, abundantly sufficient to convince every candid inquirer.

4. The authenticity of the Old and New Testaments is farther attested by the principal facts contained in them, being confirmed by certain commemorative ordinances of great celebrity, which have existed among the Jews and Christians from the time the events took place, which they are intended to commemorate, to the present day, wherever Jews or Christians are to be found. Such, among the Jews, is circumcision, the seal of the covenant with Abraham, their great progenitor;—the passover, instituted to commemorate the protection of the Israelites, when all the first-born of the Egyptians were destroyed, and their deliverance from bondage in Egypt, which was the immediate consequence;—the feast of tabernacles, instituted to perpetuate the sojourning of the Israelites for forty years in the wilderness;—the feast of Pentecost, which was appointed fifty days after the passover, to commemorate the delivery of the Law from Mount Sinai;—and the feast of Purim, kept in memory of the deliverance of the Jews from the wicked machinations of Haman. Now all these institutions, which have been held sacred among the Jews in all ages since their appointment, and are solemnly and sacredly observed among them to this day, in whatever country they sojourn, bear the most unequivocal testimony to the truth of the facts which they are designed to commemorate, and which facts are inseparably interwoven with the history and laws, and even morality and prophecy, of the Old Testament. In like manner, the principal facts of the Gospels are confirmed by certain institutions which subsist to this day among Christians, and are the objects of men's senses. Such is the initiatory rite of Baptism, which is performed in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, by which those submitting to it renounce every other religious institution, and bind themselves to the profession of the Gospel alone;—the Lord's supper, kept in commemoration of the life, sufferings, death, resurrection, and the promise of the second coming of the Founder of their religion;—and the observance of the First day of the Week, in honour of Christ's resurrection from the dead. Now, as these monuments perpetuate the memory, so they demonstrate the truth, of the facts contained in the Gospel history beyond all reasonable doubt; because, unless the events, of which the Christian rites are commemorations, had really taken place, it is impossible to conceive how these rites could have come into general use. If Jesus Christ neither lived, nor taught, nor wrought miracles, nor died, nor rose again from the dead, it is altogether incredible that so many men, in countries so widely distant, should have conspired together to perpetuate such a series of falsehoods, by commencing the observance of the institution of Baptism, the Lord's supper, and the Lord's day: and it is equally incredible that, by continuing to observe them, they should have imposed these falsehoods on posterity.

5. The wonderful establishment and propagation of Christianity is a most convincing proof of the authenticity of the New Testament; and, consequently, of that of the Old Testament, with which it is intimately and inseparably connected. Before the second century was completed, the Christian doctrine,—unaided by any temporal power, protected by no authority, assisted by no art, not recommended by the reputation of its author, not enforced by eloquence in its advocates, but by the force of truth alone,—had triumphed over the fiercest and most determined opposition, over the tyranny of the magistrate, and the subtleties of the philosopher, over the prejudices of the Gentiles, and the bigotry of the Jews, and extended its conquests over the whole Roman empire, which then comprised nearly the whole known world. Nothing, indeed, but the plainest matter of fact could induce so many thousands of prejudiced and persecuted Jews, to embrace the humiliating and self-denying doctrines of the Gospel, which they had held in such detestation and abhorrence; nor could any thing but the clearest evidence arising from undoubted truth, make multitudes of lawless and luxurious heathens receive, follow, and transmit to posterity, the doctrines and writings of the apostles; especially at a time when the vanity of their pretensions to miracles, and to the gift of tongues, could have been easily detected, had they been impostors; and at a time when the profession of Christianity exposed persons of all ranks and ages to the greatest contempt, and to the most imminent danger.

6. In addition to the above evidence of the authenticity of the Sacred Scriptures, it is to be observed, that many of the facts and circumstances recorded in them are confirmed by the accounts of ancient heathen authors, which demonstrates their perfect agreement with the most authentic records extant. Thus, in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, the first origin and creation of the world out of chaos; the completion of this great work in six days; the formation of man in the image of God, and his existence in a state of innocence; his fall, and the introduction of sin into the world; the longevity of the antediluvians; the destruction of the world by a deluge; the circumstance of the ark and the dove; the building of the tower of Babel; the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; many particulars relating to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and Moses; the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, and their miraculous passage of the Red Sea; the giving of the law, and Jewish ritual; the fertility of Palestine; the destruction of the Canaanites by Joshua and the Israelites; Jephthah's devoting his daughter; the history of Samson; the history of Samuel and Saul; the slaying of Goliath by David; many remarkable circumstances respecting David and Solomon; the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser, and deportation of the twelve tribes; the destruction of Sennacherib's army; the defeat of Josiah by Pharaoh-necho; the reduction of Jerusalem, and captivity of Jehoiachaz: these facts, and others of the same kind, are confirmed by the testimony of profane authors, and even some of them by traditions, which still exist among heathen nations, and others by coins, medals, and other monuments. Not less striking and decisive is the testimony of both Roman historians and Jewish writers to the truth of the principal facts detailed in the New Testament; such as Herod's murder of the infants, under two years old, at Bethlehem; many particulars respecting John the Baptist and Herod; the life and character of our Lord; his crucifixion under Pontius Pilate; and the earthquake and miraculous darkness that attended it; the miserable death of Herod Agrippa; and many other matters of minor importance related in these writings. Nay, even many of the miracles which Jesus himself wrought, particularly in curing the blind and lame, and casting out devils, are, as to matter of fact, expressly owned and admitted by Jewish writers; and by several of the earliest and most implacable enemies of Christianity; for, though they ascribed these miracles to magic, or the assistance of evil spirits, yet they allowed that the miracles themselves were actually wrought. And this testimony of our adversaries, to the miraculous parts of the sacred history, is the strongest possible confirmation of the truth and authority of the whole. Add to this, that in the sacred history, both of the Old and New Testaments, there are continual allusions and references to things, persons, places, manners, customs, and opinions, which are perfectly conformable to the real state of things in the countries and ages to which they stand related, as represented in the most authentic records that remain; while the rise and fall of empires, the revolutions that have taken place in the world, and the grand outlines of chronology, as mentioned or referred to in the Scriptures, are coincident with those stated by the most ancient and creditable writers extant.

Such are the principal evidences, both external and internal, direct and collateral, of the authenticity and credibility of the Sacred Scriptures; and when the number, variety, and extraordinary nature of many of them are considered, it is impossible not to come to the conclusion, that the Sacred Writings contain a true relation of matters of fact as they really happened. If such a combination of evidence is not sufficient to satisfy every inquirer, to truth, it is utterly impossible that any event, which passed in former times, and which we did not see with our own eyes, can ever be proved to have happened, by any degree of testimony whatever.*

INSPIRATION.

The Scriptures are not merely entitled to be received as perfectly authentic and credible, but also as containing the revealed will of God, in other words, as divinely inspired writings. By inspiration is meant such a complete and immediate communication, by the Holy Spirit, to the minds of the sacred writers, of those things which could not have been otherwise known; and such an effectual superintendence and guidance, as to those particulars concerning which they might otherwise obtain information; as was amply sufficient to enable them to communicate religious knowledge to others, without any error or mistake, which could in the least affect any of the doctrines or precepts contained in their writings, or mislead any person, who considered them as a divine and infallible standard of truth and duty. Every sentence, in this view, must be considered as 'the sure testimony of God,' in that sense in which it is proposed as truth. Facts occurred, and words were spoken, as to the import of them, and the instruction contained in them, exactly as they are here recorded; but the morality of words and actions, recorded merely as done and spoken, must be judged of by the doctrinal and preceptive parts of the same book. The sacred writers, indeed, wrote in such language as their different talents, tempers, educations, habits, and associations suggested, or rendered natural to them; but the Holy Spirit so entirely superintended them, when writing, as to exclude every error, and every unsuitable expression, and to guide them to all those which best suited their several subjects: they are the voice, but the Divine Spirit is the

INTRODUCTION.

SPHAKET. Now, that the Sacred Writings are thus inspired, we have abundant evidence of various kinds, amounting to a moral demonstration. For,

1. The sacred writers themselves expressly claim Divine inspiration; and unhesitatingly and unequivocally assert that the Scriptures are the Word of God. All the prophets, in the Old Testament, speak most decidedly of themselves, and their predecessors, as declaring not their own words, but the word of God. (2 Sa. xxiii. 1, 2. Ne. ix. 30. Ps. xix. 7, 11. Is. viii. 20. Je. xx. 7, 9. xxi. 3, 4. xxi. 12, 19. Eze. i. 1, 3. xxxviii. 16, 17. Da. ix. 12, 13. Mi. iii. 8, 12. Zec. i. 5, 6.) They propose things, not as matters for consideration, but for adoption: they do not leave us the alternative of receiving or rejecting: they do not present us with their own thoughts, but exclaim, Thus saith the LORD, and on that ground claim our assent. The Apostles and writers of the New Testament, also speak respecting the prophets of the Old Testament, 'as holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.' (2 Pe. i. 19, 21. He. i. 1, 2.) These writings are expressly affirmed to be 'the Oracles of God,' (Ro. iii. 2.); and it is declared that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.' Our Saviour himself expressly recognizes them, on various occasions, as the infallible Word of God, and of Divine authority. (Mat. iv. 4, 11. xii. 1, 5, 41, 42. xv. 1, 14. xxii. 29, 32, 41, 46. Mar. vii. 1, 9. Lu. iv. 33, 27. xvi. 29, 31. Jn. v. 39, 47.) The sacred writers of the New Testament also adopt language, which, in its most obvious meaning, claims the attention of their readers to their own instructions as to the Word of God; and they also thus adopt and sanction one another's writings in the most unequivocal manner. (1 Co. vii. 39, 40. 1 Th. iv. 6, 8. 2 Pe. iii. 1, 4, 14, 16.) Now, admitting the veracity of the writers, (which, we have seen, is absolutely unimpeachable,) we must admit that the Scriptures are the inspired and infallible word of God. If they were wise men, (and every man must perceive that they were neither ignorant nor void of sense,) they could not have been deluded into the imagination that they, their predecessors and contemporaries, were inspired; and, if they were good men, (as they certainly must have been, for bad men, if they could, would not have written a book which so awfully condemned themselves,) they would not have thus confidently asserted their own inspiration, and sanctioned that of each other, unless they had been inspired; they would not have ascribed their own inventions to inspiration, especially as such forgeries are so severely reprobated in every part of them. Consequently, the Bible must be the word of God, inspired by him, and thus given to man.

2. A great many wise and good men, through many generations, of various nations, and in different countries, have agreed in receiving the Bible as a Divine revelation. The Jews have unquestionably in all ages acknowledged the Scriptures of the Old Testament as the word of God; and Christians, from the earliest ages to the present time, have not been less backward in testifying their belief in the inspiration of both the Old and New Testament. Many of them have been distinguished for piety, erudition, penetration, and impartiality in judging of men and things. With infinite labour and patient investigation, they detected the impostures by which their contemporaries were duped; but the same assiduous examination confirmed them in believing the Bible to be the word of God; and induced them, living and dying, to recommend it to all others, as the source of all true wisdom, hope, and consolation. Now, although this does not amount to a demonstration, yet it is a strong presumptive proof, of the inspiration of the Scriptures; and it must be allowed to be a consideration of vast importance, that the whole company of those who 'worshipped the living God in spirit and in truth,' including those who laid down their lives as a testimony of their unshaken belief, and who were the most pious, holy, and useful men in every age, have unanimously concurred in handing them down to us as a divine revelation, and have very little differed about the books which form that sacred deposit.

3. The matter contained in the Scriptures requires a Divine inspiration. Setting aside, for a moment, the prediction of future events, and the excellency of its doctrines and morality, and merely admitting the veracity of the sacred writers, (which we have every reason to do,) we must admit that much of the information contained in the Bible absolutely required a Divine revelation. The history of the creation, part of that of the flood, &c. as related in the Scriptures, could have been known to God alone. Mysteries relative to a Trinity of persons in the Godhead,—the nature and perfections of God,—the covenant of grace,—the incarnation of the Son of God,—his mediatorial offices, and redemption through his blood,—justification, adoption, sanctification, and eternal blessedness in him,—and the offices of the Holy Spirit the Comforter,—these, and many others of a like nature, God only could either comprehend or discover. Mysteries, therefore, in the Scriptures, rather confirm than invalidate their inspiration: for a book, claiming to be a revelation from God, and yet devoid of mystery, would, by this very circumstance, confute itself. Incomprehensibility is inseparable from God and his works, even in the most inconsiderable, such, for instance, as the growth of a blade of grass. The mysteries of the Scriptures are sublime, interesting, and useful: they display the Divine perfections; lay a foundation for our hope; and inculcate humility, reverence, holiness, love, and gratitude. What is incomprehensible must be mysterious; but it may be intelligible as far as it is revealed; and though it be connected with things above our reason, it may imply nothing contrary to it. Hence, it may be confidently inferred, from these matters contained in the Scriptures, that they were given by inspiration of God.

4. The scheme of doctrine and morality contained in the Bible is so excellent, pure, and benevolent, that God alone could either devise or appoint it. In the Scriptures alone, and in such books as make them their basis, is the infinite God introduced as speaking in a manner worthy of himself, with simplicity, majesty, and authority. His character, as there delineated, comprises all possible excellence, without any intermixture; his laws and ordinances accord with his perfections; his works and dispensations exhibit them; and all his dealings with his creatures bear the stamp of infinite wisdom, power, justice, purity, truth, goodness, and mercy, harmoniously displayed. While the Supreme Being is thus described as possessed of every perfection, unbounded and incomprehensible in his essence and nature, and as the Creator Governor, and Benefactor of his creatures, the Scriptures represent man in a lapsed state, a rebellious and fallen being, alienated from God and goodness, averse by nature to all that is good and amiable, and prone to every thing that is sinful and hateful, and consequently exposed to the eternal wrath of God. The Scriptures, however, do not leave us in this wretched state; but they propose an adequate remedy for all our diseases, and an ample supply for all our wants. They show us how to be delivered from the dominion and awful consequences of sin, and how human nature may be truly improved and perfected, through the obedience, death, and mediation, of the only begotten Son of God, by receiving him as made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption—as an effectual root and principle of holiness; and by walking in him by faith, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, setting our affections on things above, where Christ is, and mortifying, through the Holy Spirit, every sinful and corrupt affection. We are taught to love the Lord our God with all our heart and all our soul; to love our neighbours as ourselves; to fulfil perfectly the particular duties of every relative station; to lay aside all malice, envy, hatred, revenge, and other malevolent dispositions or passions; to love our enemies; to render good for evil, blessing for cursing; and to pray for them who despitefully use us. These laws of universal purity and benevolence are prescribed with an authority proper only to God, and extended to such a compass and degree as God alone can demand; and those sins are forbidden which God alone could either observe or prohibit. The most powerful motives to duty and dissuaves from vice, are wisely proposed and powerfully urged; motives drawn from the nature and perfections, the promises and threatenings, the mercies and judgments of God, particularly from his overflowing benevolence and mercy in the work of our redemption, and from advantages and disadvantages, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. And, while the most excellent means of directing and exciting to the exercise of piety and virtue are established in the most excellent forms and authoritative manner, the most perfect and engaging patterns of holiness and virtue are set before us in the example of our Redeemer, and of God as reconciled in Him, and reconciling the world to himself. Now, all these things were written at a time when all the rest of the world, even the wisest, and most learned, and most celebrated nations of the earth, were sunk in the grossest ignorance of God and religion; were worshipping idols and brute beasts, indulging themselves in the most abominable vices, living in envy, hatred, and strife, hateful, and hating one another. It is a most singular circumstance, that a people in a remote, obscure corner of the world, far inferior to several heathen nations in learning, in philosophy, in genius, in science, and in all the polite arts, should yet be so infinitely their superiors in their ideas of a Supreme Being, and of every thing relative to morality and religion. This cannot be accounted for on any other supposition than that of their having been instructed in these things by God himself, or by persons commissioned and inspired by Him; that is, of their having been really favoured with those Divine revelations which are recorded in the sacred books of the Old and New Testaments. Indeed, both the doctrines and morality of the Sacred Scriptures infinitely transcend the abilities of the penman, if they were not inspired. Men of the best education, far less men of no education, could not of themselves form such exalted schemes of religion, piety, and virtue; and wicked men, as they must have been if they were impostors, would not publish and prosecute such a scheme of mystery, holiness, and morality.

5. The harmony of the sacred writers fully demonstrates that they wrote by the inspiration of the Spirit of God. Other historians continually differ from each other: the errors of the former writers are constantly criticised and corrected by the latter; and it even frequently happens that contemporary writers contradict each other in relating a fact that happened in their own time, and within the sphere of their own knowledge. Should an equal number of contemporaries, of the same country, education, habits, profession, natural disposition, and rank in life, associating together as a distinct company, concur in writing a book on religious subjects, of even less extent than that of the Bible, each furnishing his proportion without comparing notes, the attentive reader would easily discover among them considerable diversity of opinion. But the writers of the Scriptures succeeded each other during a period of nearly sixteen hundred years; some of them were princes or priests, others shepherds or fishermen; their natural abilities, education, habits, and occupations, were exceedingly dissimilar; they wrote laws, history, prophecy, odes, devotional exercises, proverbs, parables, doctrines, and controversy, and each had his distinct department; yet they all exactly agree in the exhibition of the perfections, works, truths, and will of God; of the nature, situation, and obligations of man; of sin and salvation; of this world and the next; and, in short, in all things connected with our duty, safety, interest, and comfort, and in the whole of the religion which they have promulgated: they all were evidently of the same judgment, aimed to establish the same principles, and applied them to the same practical purposes. One part of Scripture is so intimately connected with, and tends so powerfully to the establishment of another, that one part cannot be reasonably received without receiving the whole; and the more carefully it is examined, and the more diligently it is compared, the more evident will it appear, that every part, like the stones in an arch, supports, and receives support from the rest, and that they unitedly constitute one grand and glorious whole. In both the Old and New Testaments, the subsequent books, or succeeding parts of the same book, are connected with the preceding, as the narrative either of the execution of a plan, or of the fulfilment of a prediction. If we receive the history, we must also receive the prediction; if we admit the prediction, we must also admit the history. Every where the same facts are supposed, related, or prepared for; the same doctrines of a gracious redemption through Jesus Christ exhibited or supposed to be true; the same rules or exhortations of piety and virtue; the same motives and inducements to the performance of duty; the same promises of mercy, and threatenings of just misery to persons, societies, or nations, without a single contradiction. Apparent inconsistencies may indeed perplex the superficial reader; but they vanish before an accurate and persevering investigation; nor could any charge of disagreement among the sacred writers ever be substantiated; for it could only be said that they related the same facts with different circumstances, which are perfectly reconcilable, and that they gave instructions suited to the persons they addressed, according to various circumstances of time, place, and manner without systematically showing their harmony with other parts of divine truth. They did not write in concert, and they bestowed no pains to avoid the appearance of inconsistency; yet the exact coincidences plainly perceptible among them,—not only in their grand, primary, and general objects, which are written as with the beams of the sun, but in particular subjects comprehended in their plan, and even in particular words and expressions, (though they evidently borrowed nothing from one another,)—is truly astonishing, and cannot be accounted for on any rational principles, without admitting that they all wrote 'as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,'—that all their writings were indited under the influence of the same Spirit, and flowed from the same infallible Source.

6. The multitude of miracles, which only the infinite power of God could effect, wrought in confirmation of the divine mission of the writers of the sacred Scriptures, afford us a most convincing proof of their inspiration. It has been already seen, that the narrations of these miracles were published very soon after the time, and at the places, in which they were said to have been wrought; that they were performed in the most conspicuous manner, before very great multitudes, enemies as well as friends; that they were of such a nature,—appealing to the very senses of men,—as totally precluded the possibility of deception; that public ceremonies were instituted in memory of several of them, which have been observed in all ages; that the reality of them, as facts, was admitted even by the most determined enemies of Divine revelation; that the witnesses, from whom we have received the accounts of them, were many in number, unanimous in their evidence, of unquestionable good sense, undoubted integrity, and unimpeachable veracity, who showed the sincerity of their own conviction by acting under the uniform influence of the extraordinary works to which they bore witness, in opposition to all their former notions and prejudices, and in contradiction of every worldly honour, profit, or advantage, either for themselves or friends, and at last by laying down their lives in confirmation of the facts which they attested; and that vast multitudes of their contemporaries, men of almost all ages, tempers, and professions, were persuaded by them that they really were performed in the manner related, and gave the strongest testimony which was in their power of the firmness of their belief, by foregoing every worldly advantage, and suffering every temporal evil which was endured by the original witnesses. To this it may be added, that the number of the miracles is almost incalculable; that they were all calculated to answer some great and benevolent end, every way worthy of the infinitely wise and beneficent Creator; that they were wrought in attestation of nothing but what was agreeable to reason, so far as reason could apprehend it, and in confirmation of a religion the most holy, pure, and benevolent; and performed by persons of the greatest moral worth, and the most eminent patterns of every virtue. Now, admitting the reality of the miracles related in the Sacred Writings, (as every unprejudiced mind must be constrained to do,) and rationally believing, that the Supreme Being, the God of truth, wisdom, and goodness, can never give his testimony to falsehood, it irresistibly follows that the Scriptures are, as they unequivocally claim to be, the Word of God, written by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

7. The astonishing and miraculous preservation of the Scriptures from being either lost or corrupted, is an overwhelming instance of God's providential care, and a constant sanction and confirmation of their truth and Divine authority, continued by Him in all ages of the church. While the histories of mighty empires, and innumerable volumes of philosophy and literature, in the preservation of which the admiration and care of all mankind seemed to conspire, have been lost and forgotten in the lapse of time, the Sacred Scriptures, though far more ancient, and though hated and opposed by Satan and his agents in all ages, who sought with the deadliest hatred to cause their very memory to perish from among men, have come down to our own time entire and genuine, free from every material error, and nearly in their original purity. With great wisdom, God, for their preservation, ordered an original copy to be deposited in the holy of holies, (Deut. xxxi. 26); appointed the careful and frequent reading of them, both in public and private; and that every Hebrew monarch should write out a copy for his own use, (Deut. xvii. 18). With astonishing kindness and wisdom has he made the various contending parties who had access to the Scriptures,—such as the Jews and Israelites, the Jews and Samaritans, the Pharisees and Sadducees, the Jews and Christians, and the various sects and parties of Christians,—mutual checks upon each other for almost three thousand years, that they might not be able either to extirpate or corrupt any part of them; and by quickly multiplying the copies both of the original and translations, as well as the readers of the Scriptures, he rendered it absolutely impossible to falsify them in any thing important, without causing the corruption to start up in every copy dispersed through the world, and in the minds of almost every reader—than which supposition nothing can be more absurd and monstrous. By what tremendous judgments did he restrain and punish Antiochus Epiphanes, the Syro-grecian king, Dioclesian, the Roman emperor, and others, who attempted to destroy the Sacred Scriptures, in order to extirpate the Jewish or Christian religion! And he has bestowed amazing support and consolation on such as have risked or parted with their lives rather than deny the dictates of Scripture, or in the least contribute to their destruction or misinterpretation. During the profanation of Antiochus, whoever was found with the book of the law was put to death, and every copy that could be found, burned with fire; and Dioclesian, after the most barbarous havoc of the Christians, issued an edict, commanding them, on pain of death under the most cruel forms, to deliver up their Bibles; though many complied with this sanguinary edict, yet the greater part disregarded it; and notwithstanding these, and numberless other calamities, the Sacred Volumes have survived pure and uncorrupted to the present day, and doubtless will exist as long as there is a church in the world—till the end of time and the consummation of all things—a monument of God's unceasing and providential care, and an unquestionable attestation of their inspiration and Divine authority.

8. The prophecies contained in the Sacred Scriptures, and fulfilling to this day, which form a species of perpetual miracles, challenging the investigation of men of every age, fully demonstrate that they are divinely inspired. Almost every historical passage of the Bible is a narrative of something antecedently foretold; and the New Testament is little else than a relation of the fulfilment of the predictions and types of the Old Testament, relative to Jesus Christ and his church. According to the prophecies in these books, the latest of which was delivered 1700 years ago, and some of them 2000 years ago, the descendants of Shem and Japheth are 'ruling' and 'enlarged,' and the wretched descendants of Ham are still 'the servants of servants,' (Ge. ix. 25. 27.);—the posterity of Ishmael have 'multiplied exceedingly,' and become 'a great nation' in the Arabians; yet living like 'wild men,' and shifting from place to place in the wilderness, 'their hand against every man, and every man's hand against them,' and still 'dwelling,' an independent and free people, 'in the presence of all their brethren,' and in the presence of all their enemies, (Ge. xvi. 10. 12. xiv. 20.);—the family of Esau have become extinct, 'cut off for ever,' so that there is none 'remaining of the house of Esau,' (Je. xlix. 17, &c. Eze. xxv. 12, &c. Joel iii. 19. Am. i. 11, &c. Ob. 10, 18, &c.);—the sceptre has departed from Judah, (Ge. xlix. 10.) though the Jews still 'dwell alone, and are not reckoned among the nations,' while 'the remembrance of Amalek is utterly put out from under heaven,' (Nu. xxiii. 9. xiv. 20.);—Nineveh is so completely destroyed, that the place thereof cannot be known, (Na. i. III.);—Babylon has been swept with the besom of destruction, and is made 'a desolation for ever, a possession for the bittern and pools of water,' 'a dwelling place for dragons, an astonishment and hissing, without an inhabitant,' (Isa. XIII. XIV.);—Tyre has become 'like the top of a rock, a place for fishers to spread their nets upon,' (Eze. xxvi. 4, 5.);—Egypt, 'a base kingdom, the basest of the kingdoms,' still tributary and subject to strangers, so that it has never been able to 'exalt itself above the nations,' (Eze. xxxix. 14, 15.);—the fourth and last of the four great empires, which was greater and more powerful than any of the former, has been divided into ten lesser kingdoms; and among them has arisen a power 'with a triple crown diverse from the first,' with 'a mouth speaking very great things,' and with 'a look more stout than his fellows, speaking great things against the Most High, wearing out the saints of the Most High, and changing times and laws,' which did 'cast down the truth to the ground, and prosper, and practice, and destroy the holy people, not regarding the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any god,' but 'honouring the god of forces,' or Mauzzim, gods-protectors, and causing the priests of Mauzzim 'to rule over many, and divide the land for gain,' (Da. xi. 37. 39.) Jerusalem has been destroyed, with all the circumstances related in the Evangelists, and the Jews have been 'led away into all nations, and Jerusalem trodden down by the Gentiles,' through a long series of ages, (Lu. xxi. 24.);—for their infidelity and disobedience to their great Prophet like unto Moses, they have been 'plucked from off their own land, and removed into all the kingdoms of the earth, and scattered among the heathen, among the nations, among all people, from one end of the earth even to the other,' sifted 'among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve,' having been 'left few in number among the heathen,' have 'pined away in their iniquity in their enemies' lands,' have 'become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations,' 'a reproach, a taunt, and a curse,' have found 'among these nations no ease, and the sole of their foot has had no rest; but the Lord has given them a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind, and sent a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies, so that the sound of a shaken leaf has chased them,' and they have been 'many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim,' (Le. xvi. 38, 39. Deut. xxix. 62. 67. Eze. v. 10. 15. Ho. iii. 4); and yet, while their mighty conquerors are every where destroyed, they are miraculously preserved a distinct people, and neither swallowed up nor lost among the various nations amidst whom they are dispersed, but are reserved 'until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled,' when they shall 'seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days;'—in the mean time, the Gentiles have been advanced in their room, and God has given to the Messiah 'the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession,' (Ps. ii. 8.), and the gradual, but progressive, and steadily advancing conversion of heathen nations in our own days, prepares us to expect the speedy arrival of the time when Jehovah shall be worshipped 'from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same,' and when his 'name shall be great among the Gentiles,' (Mal. i. 11.);—the grand apostasy from the Christian faith has already taken place, which consists 'in giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, (or demons, worshipping angels and departed saints, and is promoted through) speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth,' (1 Ti. iv. 1. 3.) The seven churches of Asia lie in the same desolate state that the angel signified to St. John, (Re. II. III.) their 'candlestick removed out of its place,' their churches turned into mosques, and their worship into superstition;—and the characters of 'the beast and false prophet,'—to whom 'was given to make war with the saints, and to overcome them,' and power 'over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations,' so that 'all that dwell upon the earth worshipped him,'—have been exemplified in every particular, and also those of 'the whore of Babylon,' 'mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth: with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication,' while she herself has been 'drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus,' and she 'is that great city (seated upon seven mountains) which reigneth over the kings of the earth,' (Re. XIII. XVII.) These, and many other events, fulfilling ancient predictions, very many ages after they were delivered, can never be accounted for, except by allowing, that He who sees and 'declares the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done,' (Isa. xlv. 21.), thus revealed his secret purposes, that their accomplishment might prove the Scriptures to be His word. The prophecies also, though written by different men, in different ages, have yet a visible connexion and dependency, an entire harmony and agreement with one another; forming altogether a prophetic history of the world, as to the grand outlines, from the beginning of time to the consummation of all things; and accompanied with such a distinct notation of order, place, and time, as has been justly termed the geography and chronology of prophecy. As one prediction received its accomplishment, others were given, connecting prophecy with history, till the Revelation of St. John concluded the whole; and events have hitherto, in every age and nation, exactly corresponded with these reductions. So many extraordinary and improbable events, which have occurred through so many ages, and in so many nations, as foretold in the Scriptures, could only have been made known by the Omniscient God himself; and must convince every rational mind, that 'the prophecy came not of old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.' 2 Pet. i. 20, 21.

9. The extraordinary success which has attended Christianity, which is founded on the Sacred Scriptures, while it proves the truth of the facts which they detail, and demonstrates the fulfilment of the prophecies they contain, is a continued miraculous proof of their divine origin. Other religions have owed their extension and prevalence to the celebrity of their founders, to the learning of their advocates, to their conformity to the prejudices and passions of men, to the energy of the secular arm, or even to the power of the sword; but Christianity was totally destitute of all these advantages (if such they may be termed,) either to recommend or enforce its exception in the world. Its founder was put to an ignominious death by the common consent of his countrymen; its original promulgators were twelve illiterate men, wholly devoid of every kind of worldly influence; its doctrines were opposed to the principles and practices of the whole world, deeply rooted by inclination, and firmly established by extensive custom, by long confirmed laws, and by the high and universal authority of nations. Yet, by the simple preaching of the Gospel, Christianity triumphed over the craft, rage, and power of the infuriated Jews,—over the haughtiness, policy, and power of the Roman empire,—over the pride of learning, and the obstinacy of ignorance, hatred, prejudice, and lust,—over the hardened inclinations, deep-rooted customs, and long-established laws of both Jews and Pagans,—so that, notwithstanding every conceivable form of opposition, within a few years after Christ's ascension, it prevailed, in a greater or less degree, in almost every corner of the Roman empire, and in the countries adjacent; and multitudes, at the hazard of every temporal loss or punishment, readily believed, constantly adhered to, and cheerfully and strictly practised its pure and holy precepts. Nor has the success of Christianity been confined to the early ages only; for, during the period of eighteen centuries, notwithstanding innumerable persecutions, together with the wickedness of professors, and the inconceivable villanies and base indifference of the clergy, it has been more or less successful in reforming the hearts and lives of multitudes in almost every nation under heaven; and we may assert, that even at present, there are many thousands, who have been reclaimed from a profane and immoral course of conduct, to sobriety, equity, truth, purity, and piety, and to an exemplary behaviour in the relative duties of life. Having been 'made free from sin, and become the servants of God, they have their fruit unto holiness;' and, after 'patiently continuing in well-doing,' and cheerfully bearing various afflictions, they joyfully meet death, being supported by the hope of eternal life, 'as the gift of God through Jesus Christ;' while they who are best acquainted with them, are most convinced, that they have been rendered more wise, holy, and happy, by believing the Bible; and that there is a reality in religion, though various interests and passions may keep them from duly embracing it. This would, indeed, be far more apparent were the Gospel more generally, or fully believed and obeyed. Did all men believe and obey the Bible, as a divine revelation; were repentance, and renunciation of all vice and immorality, universal or even general, combined with the spiritual worship of God, faith in his truth and mercy, through the mediation of his Son, and the fruits of the Holy Spirit, as visible in every true believer,—they would form the bulk of mankind into such characters, and would produce such effects, as the world has never yet witnessed. Men would then habitually and uniformly do justice, speak truth, show mercy, exercise mutual forgiveness, follow after peace, bridle their appetites and passions, and lead sober, righteous, and godly lives. Murders, wars, slavery, cruel oppressions, rapine, fraud, and unrestrained licentiousness, would no more desolate the earth, nor fill it with misery, nor would bitter contentions ever more destroy domestic comfort; but righteousness, goodness, and truth, would bless the world with a felicity far exceeding all our present conceptions. Such has been the extraordinary success and happy effects of the religion of the Bible; and such is doubtless the direct and legitimate tendency of its doctrines, precepts, motives, and promises. To what cause, then, can we attribute the success which has attended Christianity in the absence of every thing else to recommend or enforce it, but to an Almighty influence accompanying the preaching of the 'Gospel'—to its being 'preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven?' And is not this one of the strongest possible attestations made by the God of truth himself, to the truth and Divine inspiration of the Sacred Volume? And, while its extraordinary success and effects thus constrain us to admit the Divine authority of the Scriptures, the holy and happy tendency of its doctrines proves, that they could not have originated either with bad angels or men, since they are so diametrically opposite to their vicious inclinations, interests, and honour; nor yet with uninspired good men, who would not have dared thus to personate God, and to ascribe their own inventions to inspiration. It remains, therefore, that God must be their author; and that 'holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;' not in the way which men's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth.' 1 Co. ii. 13.

10. Lastly, Though these arguments are abundantly sufficient to silence objectors, and to produce a rational conviction of the Divine origin and authority of the Scriptures, yet it is only the effectual application of them to the mind, conscience, and heart, in their self-evidencing light and power, which can produce a cordial and saving persuasion that they are indeed the word of God. But when thus applied, then 'He that believeth hath the witness in himself,' (1 Jn. v. 10.) 'The discoveries which he has made by the Divine light of the Scriptures; the sanctifying and abiding effects produced on his judgment, dispositions, and affections; the comfortable experience which he has had, that God fulfils the promises of His word to them who trust in them; and the earnestness of heaven enjoyed by him in communion with God, put the matter beyond all doubt; so that there is no shutting the eyes, nor hardening the heart against them,—no possibility of continuing stupid and unconcerned under them; but the whole faculties of the soul are necessarily affected with them, as indeed stamped with divine evidence, and attended with almighty power. And, though many real

Christians are not at all qualified to dispute with infidels, yet they are enabled, through this inward testimony, to obey the Gospel, and to suffer in its cause; and they can no more be convinced by reasonings and objections, than uninspired men wrote or invented the Bible, than they can be persuaded that man created the sun, whose light they behold, and by whose beams they are warmed and cheered.

TESTIMONY TO THE CORRECTNESS OF THE AUTHORIZED TRANSLATION.

The venerable Bede seems to have been the first person who attempted the translation of the Scriptures into Anglo-Saxon. He translated the Psalter, and afterwards the Gospel of John. This was in A. D. 734. In the latter part of the next century, Alfred the Great ordered the whole Bible to be translated into Anglo-Saxon, and himself undertook to translate the Book of Psalms, but died in A. D. 900, before it was completed. Little or nothing was done in the next 400 years, till the time of Wickliffe, who, in 1380, completed the whole Bible. In the fifteenth century printing was invented, and immediately employed for multiplying copies of the Scriptures. In 1526, William Tyndal (a Welshman) printed his first New Testament at Antwerp, and was soon after burned for heresy in Flanders. He expired praying, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes!"

Henry VIII. was long averse to having the Scriptures in English; but as soon as Cramer could get permission, he divided the New Testament into nine parts, and sent it to as many learned divines for a new translation, who all performed their parts except Toustalt, Bishop of London, who sent word to the Archbishop, he would have no hand in it. The work was, however, finished; and, after much difficulty, printed and published. In 1539, Lord Cromwell procured from Henry VIII. license for the people to read the Word of God; and the permission was most joyfully received. The first Bible thus tolerated was called Coverdale's, because he superintended the publication. During the next reign, that of Edward VI. Bibles were placed in all the churches; but were again displaced at the accession of the cruel Queen Mary, and every person endangered his life who was found reading it.* Great numbers of the clergy, and other friends to the Reformation, now fled to Geneva, where the edition called the Geneva Bible was printed, in 1560. Eight years afterwards, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was printed the Bishops' Bible; so called as being prepared and published under the care of Archbishop Parker, with the aid of seven other Bishops.

At the Hampton Court Conference, in 1603, Dr. Rainolds suggested the propriety of a new translation, which being approved by the King, fifty-four learned divines, of Westminster and the two English Universities, were appointed to the task, though forty-seven only appear to have engaged in it. The divines of Westminster translated the historical books of the Old Testament, from Genesis to Chronicles, and also the Apostolical Epistles; those at Cambridge took the rest of the Old Testament to the end of Ecclesiastes, and the Apocrypha; and the divines of Oxford, the Prophets, the Gospels, the Acts, and the Apocalypse.

Among the Westminster divines were Drs. (afterwards Bishops) Andrews and Overall. The former said to be acquainted with fifteen languages, and a most excellent divine; the other, unquestionably a man of learning, and Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Dr. Seravia, who had been Professor of Divinity at Leyden, and, after coming to England, Prebend of Westminster. He was the bosom friend of the immortal Hooker, who actually died in his arms. And Mr. Bedwell, a great Arabic scholar. The University lists included the Professors of Greek and Hebrew, Archbishop Abbot, and Dr. Rainolds, with whom the work originated, and other divines, of eminent learning and great respectability. When the work was gone through, three copies were sent to Stationers' Hall, London, and revised by two divines from each University, and two from Westminster. The whole was again reviewed by Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Myles Smith; these prefixed arguments to the several books, and the latter wrote the preface to the whole. In 1611, the work was published, dedicated to the King, and ordered to be read in churches.

Messrs. Thompson and Orme, from whom many of these particulars are taken, give it the following character:—"Like every thing human, it is no doubt imperfect; but, as a translation of the Bible, it has few rivals, and no superior. It is in general faithful, simple, and perspicuous. It has seized the spirit, and copied the manner of the divine originals; it seldom descends to meanness or vulgarity, but often rises to elegance and sublimity; it is level to the understanding of the cottager, and fit to meet the eye of the critic, the poet, and the philosopher. Its phraseology is now familiar to us from our infancy; it has had the most extensive influence on the style of religious works of every description, and has contributed much to fix the standard of the English language itself. No work has ever been more generally read, or more universally admired; and such is its complete possession of the public mind, that no translation differing materially from it can ever become popular."

Selden, a very learned lay member of the Westminster Assembly of Divines, in his "Table Talk," says, "The English translation of the Bible is the best translation in the world; taking in for the English translation the Bishops' Bible, as well as King James'."

Bp. Walton, author of the Polyglot Bible, says, "The last English translation, made by diverse learned men at the command of King James, may justly contend with any now extant, in any language of Europe."

L. Capellus, Professor of Divinity and the Oriental languages at Saumur, and author of the "Critica Sacra," bears witness to our translation as "both true and agreeable, as well to the original words as to the analogy of faith."

Dr. Durell, a celebrated Hebrew critic, was of opinion, that "the chief excellency of the version now in use, consists in its being a closer translation than any that had preceded; in using the properest language for popular use."

* The late Dr. Franklin relates of his pious great-grandfather, in the reign of this Queen, that, having an English Bible, which was then a mark of heresy, they were obliged to conceal it under the lid of a night-stool. When he read it, one of the family was set to watch, lest an officer of the Spiritual Court should be on the listen; and when he had done, he restored it to its hiding-place, till another opportunity occurred of reading it.—Franklin's Life.

INTRODUCTION.

Dr. Gray says, "The present translation is, indeed, highly excellent, being in its doctrines uncorrupt, and in its general construction faithful to the original."

Dr. Doddridge observes, "On a diligent comparison of our translation with the original, we find that of the New Testament, and I might also add that of the Old, in the main, faithful and judicious."

Dr. John Taylor, author of the Hebrew Concordance, though an Arian in sentiment, assures his readers—"You may rest fully satisfied, that, as our translation is in itself by far the most excellent book in our language, so it is a pure and plentiful fountain of divine knowledge, giving a true, clear, and full account of the divine dispensations, and of the gospel of our salvation; inasmuch that whoever studies the English Bible, is sure of gaining that knowledge and faith, which, if duly applied to the heart and conversation, will infallibly guide him to eternal life."

Dr. Geddes, a Socinian Catholic priest, though the author of a new translation and commentary, bears this testimony to our authorized Protestant version:—"If accuracy, fidelity, and the strictest attention to the letter of the text, be supposed to constitute the qualities of an excellent version, this, of all versions, must in general be accounted the most excellent."

Dr. Middleton, late Bishop of Calcutta, and author of a celebrated work on the Greek Article, thus commends the same version:—"Its general fidelity has never been questioned; its style is incomparably superior to any thing that might be expected from the finical and perverted taste of our own age. It is simple; it is harmonious; it is energetic; and, which is of no small importance, use has made it familiar, and time has rendered it sacred."

The Rev. Professor Stewart, of the Theological Seminary of Andover, Massachusetts, gives the following decided testimony:—"Out of some eight hundred thousand various readings, about seven hundred and ninety-nine thousand are of just about as much importance to the sense of the Hebrew Scriptures, as the question in English orthography is, whether the word honour shall be spelled with the u or without it. Of the remainder, some change the sense of particular passages or expressions, or omit particular words and phrases, or insert them; but not one doctrine of religion is changed; not one precept is taken away; not one important fact is altered, by the whole of the various readings collectively taken. There is no ground, then, to fear for the safety of the Scriptures, on account of any legitimate criticism to which the text may be subjected."

DIVISIONS AND MARKS OF DISTINCTION IN THE SCRIPTURES.

1. THE SCRIPTURES are so termed as being the most important of all Writings; and are also called Holy or Sacred, because composed by holy or inspired men; and Canonical, either because they are the rule of faith and practice, or because they were received into the ecclesiastical canons or catalogues, and thus distinguished from those which were apocryphal, or of uncertain authority.

2. The most common and general division of these Sacred Books, is that of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENT, an appellation derived from 2 Co. iii. 6, 14, where the Greek words are rendered by the Latin translators, Antiquum testamentum, and Novum testamentum, and from them by our translators, The Old Testament, and The New Testament, would be more correctly rendered, The Old Covenant, and The New Covenant. The divisions of the Old Testament which now generally obtain are, 1. The Pentateuch, or the five books of Moses. 2. The Historical Books, comprising Joshua to Esther, inclusive. 3. The Poetical, or Doctrinal Books, from Job to the Song of Solomon, inclusive. 4. The Prophetical Books, from Isaiah to Malachi. The New Testament is usually divided into, 1. The Historical Books, containing the four Gospels and the Acts. 2. The Doctrinal Books, comprising all the Epistles written by the Apostles, from Romans to Jude. 3. The Prophetical, being the Book of the Revelation of St. John.

3. The Jews, at an early period, for the sake of convenience, divided the five books of Moses into sections, equal to the number of Sabbaths in their year. The division of chapters and verses was first attempted A. D. 1240, by Cardinal Hugo, for the purpose of forming a concordance to the Vulgate version. Rabbi Nathan, in 1438, adopted a similar plan in arranging a concordance of the Hebrew Bible. The division of the New Testament into verses was made by Robert Stephens, 1551.

MODES OF COMPUTING TIME.

1. The Hebrews, in common with other nations, distinguished their days into natural, containing day and night; and artificial, from sunrise to sunset. They reckoned their natural days from sunset to sunset, according to the original arrangement,—'the evening and the morning were the first day,' (Ge. i. 5.) The artificial day, which began at sunrise and ended at sunset, consequently varied in its length according to the season of the year, though Canaan being situated much nearer the Equator, the difference was not so great as in our country; the longest day being only fourteen hours and twelve minutes of our time, and the shortest, nine hours and forty-eight seconds.

2. The day was divided into twelve hours, which were equal with respect to each other, but consequently unequal with respect to the different seasons of the year. These hours were computed from about six in the morning to six in the evening; the first hour corresponding to our seven o'clock, the second to our eight, the third to our nine, &c.

2. The night among the Hebrews was anciently divided into three parts or watches, (Ps. lxxiii. 6. xc. 4.) though the division of it into twelve hours, like those of the day, also afterwards obtained. The first was called the beginning of the watches, (Lu. ii. 19.); the second, the middle watch, (Ju. vii. 18.); and the third, the morning watch, (Ex. xiv. 24.) Subsequently, in the time of our Saviour, the night was divided into four watches; a fourth having been introduced by the Romans, who derived it from the Greeks. The first watch commenced about six and continued till nine; the second (Lu. xii. 38.) began at nine and ended at twelve; the third lasted from twelve to three; and the fourth (Mat. xiv. 25.) began at three and closed at six. All these are distinctly mentioned in Ma. xiii. 35.

3. Seven natural days constituted a week. This division of time appears to have been observed by all nations, probably from the beginning of the world; and, it originated with God himself, who, after he had created the world in six days, 'rested on the seventh,' or Sabbath, and blessed and sanctified it. It does not appear that the Hebrews had any names for the days of the week; but they numbered them in their order, the first, the second, &c., the seventh, or last day of the week, being the Sabbath.

4. The months of the Hebrews, which were lunar ones, took their name from the moon, because their months began with the new moon. As the synodical lunar month is about 29½ days, they made their month consist alternately of 29 and 30 days, according as the new moon appeared sooner or later; and by this mean their months were made to keep pace nearly with the lunations. In this manner the Jewish calendar was regulated by the law of Moses, which appointed the day of the new moon, or rather the first day of its appearance, to be a solemn festival, and the beginning of the month. But it appears that in the time of Noah, the year consisted of twelve months, each of thirty days; for in the account of the deluge, 150 days are mentioned as equivalent to five months. (Ge. vii. 11, 24. viii. 3, 4, 13, 15.) From these passages it appears the months originally had no particular names, but were called the first, second, third, &c. Afterwards, however, they acquired distinct names; as Abib, (Ex. xiii. 4.); Zif, (1 Ki. vi. 1, 37.); Ethanin, (1 Ki. viii. 2.); and Bul, (1 Ki. vi. 38.) These names, after the Babylonian captivity, were exchanged for others of Chaldean, Syrian, or Persian origin: thus Abib was termed Nisan; Zif, Iyar, &c.

5. The Jewish year consisted of twelve lunar months, amounting to 354 days; but, as this falls eleven days short of the solar year of 365 days, it would have produced an entire change in the seasons, and with it a total derangement of the fasts and festivals. In order to remedy this inconvenience, they added a whole month to the year, as often as it was necessary; commonly once in three years, and sometimes once in two years. The intercalary month was added at the end of the ecclesiastical year, after the month Adar, and was therefore called Veadar, 'and Adar,' or a second Adar. At first the Jews began the year with the autumnal equinox, or the month Tisri, because it was believed the world was created at that time; and from it they continued to compute their jubilees, and to date contracts and other common occurrences, whence it was termed the civil year. But after their departure from Egypt, which happened in the month Abib or Nisan, in commemoration of this deliverance, they afterward began their year from the beginning of that month, which usually happened about the time of the vernal equinox; and according to this form, which was termed the sacred or ecclesiastical year, they celebrated the fasts and festivals, and other ecclesiastical matters.

The Jewish year being composed of months purely lunar, and the intercalations being made of one whole lunar month at once, the commencement of their months cannot be fixed to any certain day in the Julian calendar, but they fall within the compass of thirty days sooner or later. The following table exhibits the Jewish months in the order of the sacred year, with the corresponding months of the Julian year within the compass of which the Jewish months fell:

	days.
1. Nisan or Abib, the 7th month of the civil year, . . .	30	March and April
2. Zif or Iyar, the 8th month of the civil year, . . .	29	April and May.
3. Sivan, the 9th month of the civil year, . . .	30	May and June.
4. Tammuz, the 10th month of the civil year, . . .	29	June and July.
5. Ab, the 11th month of the civil year, . . .	30	July and August.
6. Elul, the 12th month of the civil year, . . .	29	August and Sept.
7. Tisri or Ethanin, the 1st month of the civil year, . . .	30	Sept. and October
8. Marchesvan or Bul, the 2d month of the civil year, . . .	29	October and Nov.
9. Chisleu, the 3d month of the civil year, . . .	30	Nov. and Dec.
10. Tebeth, the 4th month of the civil year, . . .	29	Dec. and Jan.
11. Sebat, the 5th month of the civil year, . . .	30	Jan. and Feb.
12. Adar, the 6th month of the civil year, . . .	29	Feb. and March.

The thirteenth month, Veadar, answered mostly to the end of March, it being only intercalated when the beginning of Nisan would otherwise be carried back into the end of February. In the above table, we have given the corresponding months of the Julian calendar as usually reckoned; but it is highly probable, if not certain, that the Jewish calendar has been corrupted, at some period subsequent to the dispersion, and that every month originally commenced one month later: thus Nisan instead of March should begin in April; Iyar instead of April should begin in May, &c. For evidence in support of this opinion see MICHAELIS on the Hebrew months.

THE FIRST BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED GENESIS.

THE Jews call this Book Beresith, its first word in Hebrew, which signifies, "In the beginning." The Syriac and Arabic versions have called it the Book of the Creation, because it furnishes us with an account of the original formation of all things. The Greek translators meant to express by the word Genesis, which means the origin of all things, and which has been universally adopted. It is indeed the most ancient, important, and exact record of history, and affords information which cannot be derived from any other source. It comprises a period of about 2369 years. It gives us a detailed account of the order of creation; the primeval state of our first parents; their apostasy from God; the prevalency of sin in the world; and of the general deluge produced by the wickedness of mankind. We are also informed how the earth was re-peopled; of the origin of sacrifices; and are furnished with an account of the lives, actions, and genealogies of the patriarchs till the death of Joseph.

This book is the fountain of every historical document, and the basis upon which both tradition and history are built; and the principles and facts which it exhibits and narrates, are referred to in many other passages of Scripture.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. In the beginning, &c.—This verse, which forms the title of the book of Genesis, is so full of matter for observation, that every word of it demands our distinct attention.

In the beginning, namely, "of the creation which God created." (Mark xiii. 19.) This word carries us back into the vast ocean of eternity; for hither does St. John refer us, when he says, "In the beginning was the Word, (or Logos), and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, the same was in the beginning with God." And then it follows, as in this book of Genesis, "All things were made by Him," and without Him was not any thing made that was made." Thus by comparing the Old and New Testament together, we see that they explain and illustrate each other.

God created.—The awful name of God, which is introduced in the first sentence of the Bible, and afterwards very frequently, requires us here to make a momentary pause, and investigate its meaning. Indeed, this holy name demands at all times our reverence; but here we are called to inquire into the meaning of the original term, Elohim, of which there are three principal opinions of the learned, which we shall mention, without presuming to decide between them. 1. The greater number of Jewish and Christian writers derive it from El, (mighty), as meaning the Almighty. 2. Many divines, among whom were Bishops Horne and Horsley, Rev. Messrs. Romaine, Parkhurst, &c. derive the word from a Hebrew root, signifying to swear, as alluding to the oath which God hath sworn, to establish his covenant with his people. 3. Drs. Pococke, Adam Clarke, and others, derive it from the Arabic word Allah, "the object of worship;" or "the judge" and "defender" of his people. In either view of its meaning, the Hebrew word affords matter of "strong consolation;" and they may all be united in this paraphrase—The Almighty object of our worship—our helper and our judge—who hath made a covenant for the redemption of his people; and hath confirmed that covenant with his oath, "that they might have strong consolation who have fled for refuge to the hope set before us." (Heb. vi. 13—18.)

It is generally agreed, however, except by modern Jews and Unitarians, that the word Elohim is plural, and refers to the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity, or "Three in One." So Rabbi Simeon ben Jochai (as quoted by Ainsworth's) says, "Come, see the mystery of the word Elohim. There are three degrees, and every degree by itself alone, (i. e. distinct;) and yet, notwithstanding, they all are one, and joined together in one, and are not divided one from another." This idea will be much confirmed by the plural terms used in the following part of this chapter, "Let us make man," &c. ver. 26.

God created.—It was a current opinion among the ancient heathen, as it is now among modern infidels, that the world had no beginning; and they found it easier to believe in the eternity of the creatures than of the Creator. Thus men, to avoid the difficulties of divine revelation, plunge themselves into the absurdity of Atheism. So it was with the philosophers of the Pagan world, who, "professing themselves to be wise, became fools." But we may hope it was not so universally with the common people: "For the Most High left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave them rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling their hearts with food and gladness." (Acts xiv. 17.) We have, indeed, instances of this kind on record. A converted Greenlander informed their Missionary, that though they knew nothing of a Saviour before he came, they were not without some idea of a Creator. He himself had reasoned from looking at a canoe, that certainly it could not make itself, much less a man, who is so much more complicated. And though they could trace one generation back to another, still there must be a first man; that man must have a Maker, and that Maker must be great, and wise, and good; and, "Oh! (thought he,) did I but know him, how would I love and honour him!" This appears to agree with what St. Paul says of the heathen "feeling after God, if haply they might find him—who is not far from every one of us;" and will ever be found of them "that seek him with a perfect heart," that is, in sincerity and truth. (Acts xvii. 27.—1 Chron. xxviii. 9.)

We now come to the subject matter of the creation,—"the heaven and the earth." Whether this intend the first matter, the elements of which the world was made, as some think, or includes the work of the six days' creation, as afterwards described, is not important; in the one case, it may be called the "title page of creation;" in the other, "its contents." That this great work included the whole of our planetary system, is generally thought, though the inspired writer seems purposely to avoid mentioning more of the universe than we are immediately concerned with, the sun and the moon, and the globe on which we live. The Scriptures were not written to gratify our curiosity, but to excite us to admire and to adore. "Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty! Who shall not fear thee, and glorify thy name?" (Rev. xv. 3, 4.)

Ver. 2—5. The first day's creation.—The rudiments of the brought forth abundantly." See also Psal. cii. 18. civ. 30. Isa. lxv. 17. Ezek. xxi. 30. The heaven and the earth.—The Hebrew word for heaven is plural, and should have been so translated, as in the first verse of chap. i. The participle Elohim, annexed to both words, is considered by many as emphatical, and meaning the substance of which they were formed. So Augustine, Bibliotheca Biblica. Parkhurst, Heb. Lex. in At. Too much stress, however, must not be laid on this, since the same phrase is often used as answering to the accusative case; and sometimes as a preposition, for with, from, &c. Perhaps the most accurate translation would be, "These heavens and this earth;" as confining the account to our own system. Even this, however, is not exact, and the astronomers inform us, the orbits of some of the planets of our own system, (the Georgium Sidus, for instance,) extend more than 1900 millions of miles all around us. C. Taylor's Script. Illustrat.

Ver. 2. The Spirit of God moved.—Dr. Boothroyd, and other learned commentators, both Jewish and Christian, understand this of "a mighty wind;" but we reject this interpretation, for three reasons. 1. Though the Hebrew Ruach is often rendered "wind," we know of no instance in which it is so understood in connexion with the name of God. 2. The atmosphere (or firmament) was not yet formed, and therefore could not be agitated into wind. 3. The word Rachaph means rather a tremulous motion, like that of an eagle fluttering over her young, or like that of the bones trembling with fear. Deut. xxxii. 11. Jer. xxiii. 9. See Dr. Hurst's Remarks on Genesis. The rabbins have explained this word as an incubation, brooding; and it is probable in allusion to a tradition of this nature, that we read of the Orphic egg, which burst and produced all things. See Engel's Hist. of Philos.

In allusion to the agency of the Spirit of God in creation, Sir Wm. Jones notices a remarkable passage in the Institutions of Menu. "The waters are called Nara, or the Spirit of God;" and he is hence called, "He who moves upon the waters."

Ver. 5. God called the light day.—That is, the time of bustle and activity; but in the latter part of the verse, and indeed generally, it is used in a more extensive sense, for the whole 24 hours, beginning with the evening; as we custom the custom, not only among the Jews, but other nations. present world are here presented to us in that state which the Greeks call a chaos, "without form, and void;" that is, not reduced to any regular shape, nor furnished with luminaries, plants, or animals; and at the same time involved in darkness, impenetrable to any eye but that of the Creator.

— "Darkness profound
Cover'd th' abyss; but on the watery calm
His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspread."—Milton.

A fine allusion this to the use of the same word by Moses in Deuteronomy (xxxii. 11), where Jehovah is represented as having found Israel "in a waste, howling wilderness;" and then, "as an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings," &c. so he raised up and protected his people.

Ainsworth gives us the sense of the ancient Rabbins on this text thus: "The Jerusalem Targum here saith, 'The Spirit of Mercies from before the Lord;' and Rab. Menachem interprets it, 'The Spirit of Wisdom, called the Spirit of the living God;' and the author of Zoar calleth it 'The Spirit of the Messiah.'"

But the word of God is now heard calling into being the most magnificent of all created objects, Light. "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light," a passage which the celebrated rhetorician Longinus, having seen in the Greek translation, marks as an instance of the true sublime. The original expression is also remarkably concise and spirited—"God said, Let light be! and light was."

"And God saw the light that it was good, and he separated between the light and between the darkness," by giving to our globe that rotatory motion which still separates day and night. Thus (saith the Psalmist) "by the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth," which furnishes us with another most sublime idea—He speaks, and a world is made; he breathes, and it is quickened, and put in motion. (Psalm xxxiii. 6.)

But we must not leave this subject without adverting to St. Paul's beautiful allusion to the analogy between the old and new creation. "God, who commanded light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ:" (2 Cor. iv. 6.) wherein we have not only an allusion to the creation of light, but also to the formation of the sun—all the light of the gospel being now concentrated in the face of Jesus Christ, "the Sun of righteousness." (Mal. iv. 2.)

Ver. 6—8. The second day's creation.—God speaks again, and now calls into being what our translators call, "the firmament;" and we, usually, the atmosphere; that is, a sphere of air and vapour which surrounds our globe, and supports a considerable body of water, which descends in mists and showers to fructify the earth; and which is replenished by the sun drawing up vapours both from earth and sea, and that to an extent of which few conceive. "There is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends (boundaries) of the earth. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud is not rent under them." (Jer. x. 13. Job xxvi. 8.) So also he compasseth the sea with bounds, and sets bars and doors, and saith, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther." (Psalm xxiv. 1, 2.—Job xxxviii. 9—11.)

Such is the beautiful and effective manner in which the Creator hath provided against both drought and flood, neither of tions the Athenians, the Romans, the ancient Germans, and the British Druids.

Ver. 8. The firmament.—The Hebrew Rakiath, says Ainsworth, and the learned in general, signifies "a thing spread abroad, an expansion;" referring to the elastic properties of air, by which it is supposed to extend more than 40 miles above the earth, but to gravitate to the earth with a weight of 15lbs. on every square inch of the earth's surface! Thus it is carried with our globe in its annual path round the sun.—Dick's Christian Philos.

Ver. 14. Let there be lights.—The word here used differs from that used ver. 8, and signifies luminaries; that is, instruments for giving light.—Dr Pagnine, Mercer, and all the modern translators.—Let them be for days.—Dr Kennicott contends, that the term days, used thus absolutely, means weeks, which can happen but by his special providence. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" (Psalm cvii. 8.)

Ver. 9—13. The third day's creation. On the same day that the dry land first was seen, it appeared clothed with verdure. Dr. Watts hath beautifully remarked in this a pleasing instance of the divine goodness. "Common experience, (says he), as well as philosophy, tells us, that bodies of blue and green colours send out such rays of light to our eyes, as are least hurtful or offensive: we can endure them longest; whereas the red and yellow, or orange colour, send more uneasy rays in abundance, and give greater confusion and pain to the eye. . . .

"Colours that charm and please the eye,
His pencil spread all nature round;
With pleasing blue he arch'd the sky,
And a green carpet dress'd the ground.
Let ev'ry atheist's neck complain
That Nature wants or skill or care;
But turn their eyes all round in vain
To avoid their Maker's goodness there."

Miscel. Thoughts, No. 8.

It appears, also, that whatever God made, he made in a state of maturity and perfection, which is perhaps the meaning of the term good, used here and in the context. The herbs were bearing seed, and the trees fruit. God did not make an animal till he had provided food for its support, and the means of continuing that provision; much less man, whose creation was deferred till the globe was completely furnished for his reception. It appears, also, by this account, that the world was created at the autumnal equinox, and from thence, therefore, the Hebrews began their year.

Ver. 14—19. The fourth day's creation.—This opens with a scene of glory indeed!—the creation of the sun. Moses tells us nothing concerning the heavenly bodies but their design and use. Many generations supposed the sun to be a ball of fire, the source of all the light and heat in the universe; but this is the philosophy of past ages. Herschell, the greatest astronomer of our age and country, thinks it most probably an opaque (or dark) body, surrounded with an immense atmosphere of light; so that after all the jests of infidels, on the formation of light before the sun, Moses wrote like a philosopher; and the light created on the first day, might, on the fourth day be formed into an atmosphere about the sun, and fit him for his station as the great light, or rather luminary, of our system; and the finest material image of his Creator, who is "clothed with light." The moon is a less and reflected light, which borrows its mild beauties from the other. So the church of God, "fair as the moon," derives all her light and splendour by reflection from the Sun of righteousness!

It is added, "He made the stars also;" and it is a certain fact, that God made all things; but as the verb, he made, is printed in Italics, the reader is honestly admonished, that there is no word to answer it in the Hebrew. Many, therefore, are of opinion that the words were better omitted; and then the text reads, "The greater light (or luminary) to rule the day, and the less (that is, the moon) to rule the night, with the stars." But it is said that these luminaries were specially designed "for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years." They were signs of weather to the husbandman; and, while the load-stone was unknown, they were signs also to the mariner; and by

(as we shall further notice on chap. iv. 3.) and Dr. Boothroyd translates the term "weeks." The Jews, it should be remembered, calculated by lunar months, or moons.

Ver. 16. Two great lights.—The enemies of revelation object that the moon is not a great light; but it certainly is so to us, for it yields us, through the greater part of the month, more light than all the stars taken together, though some of them may be immensely larger.—The stars also—The word made not being in the original, stars may be construed more accurately with the verb "to rule," as by Dr. Anselm Bayley, Dr. A. Clarke, &c.; "and the less luminary to rule the night with the stars." So the Psalmist David, "the moon and stars which thou hast ordained," namely "to rule the night." Psal. viii. 3.

20 ¶ And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

22 And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas; and let fowl multiply in the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

31 And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

their rising and setting, and various apparent revolutions, they marked out the seasons, and limited the days and years.

David improved this subject, by giving to the heavenly bodies each a tongue to instruct man. "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge;" (Ps. xix. 2.) which is thus beautifully paraphrased by Addison:

"Th' unwearied Sun from day to day
Doth his Creator's power display;
And publishes to every land
The work of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The Moon takes up the wondrous tale;
And nightly, to the list'ning earth,
Repeats the story of her birth.

Whilst all the Stars that burn their burn,
And all the Planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole."

Ver. 20—23. The fifth day's creation.—We now come to creatures that have animal life, and are therefore one degree superior to the vegetable creation; and the work begins with the smallest and apparently most contemptible, the "moving" creature: the reptile that crawls beneath our feet; the fishes that swim in the waters; and the fowls, or birds, that fly above our heads. It is not for us to say in which of the inferior creatures God has displayed most of his power and skill; but those who have had the opportunity to examine some species of insects, and of flies, in a microscope, (or by any strong magnifying glass,) must confess the delicacy of their form, and the beauty of their colours, to exceed all previous conception. God is great in his smallest works; and these, if not the most splendid, seem the most marvellous. But in nothing are the works of God more remarkable than in their variety, from the whale to the insect and animalcule. "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! In wisdom hast thou made them all." (Ps. civ. 24.)

Verse 24—31. The sixth day's creation.—Animals and man. The earth is now represented as bringing forth—no doubt, in the same miraculous way as the waters, by creation—the like variety of living creatures as the seas: but it is the creation of man that calls chiefly for our notice and admiration. God is represented as holding a council on this occasion: "Let us make man." But with whom does he hold a council? "With the angels," say the modern Jews and Unitarians: but the following words, "in our image," seem totally to exclude this sense; for in whose image was man made? "In the image of God created he him." Besides, "With whom took he counsel?" saith the prophet Isaiah; "And who instructed Him?" (See Isaiah xl. 14.)—"The Father addresseth the Son," saith Dr. Boothroyd, far more consistently. And thus the Logos, the Word and Wisdom of God, is represented by Solomon, (Prov. viii. 23, 30.) "When he (God the Father) appointed the foundations of the earth: then was I by him, as one brought up with him: I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him." But because the Holy Spirit is represented as having also taken an active part in creation, "moving on the face of the waters," &c., Trinitarians generally consider this as a council between the Sacred Three: and they very properly infer from this circumstance the dignity of man in his state of innocence. The creation of the inanimate world, or even the animal world, required no deliberation, no council; but "Man (as Rev. Mr. Fuller observes) was to be the lord of this lower world, under the great Supreme. On him would depend its future well-being. Man was to be a distinguished link in the chain of being; uniting the animal with the spiritual world; the frailty of the dust of the ground with the breath of the Almighty; and possessing that consciousness of right and wrong, which should render him a proper subject of moral government."

But wherein consisted this image? 1. In authority: 1 Co. xi. 7. he was to be God's vicergerent upon earth, and hold dominion over the creatures around him; "and let them [mankind] have dominion—over all the earth." 2. In knowledge: the knowledge of animals being restrained to what is necessary to their preservation, and that of a posterity: man only was endowed with intellectual powers, and favoured with communion with his Maker. 3. Moral freedom: for in this, more than in mere intellect, is man superior to the brute creation. God is glorious in his moral freedom—having the uncontrolled power of choice. 4. Man was made holy, upright in mind as well as body; and, as in the work of regeneration, we are "created anew in righteousness and true holiness," (Ephes. iv. 23, 24,) it evidently implies, that this was distinctively the divine image in which man was originally made, for it includes intelligence and moral freedom.

Man was created male and female; but the creation of woman being distinctly stated in the next chapter, is here only hinted and implied in the blessing pronounced upon them, to "replenish," or rather fill "the earth, and subdue it;" not that the earth was yet in rebellion, but it was to be kept in subjection by cultivation and dressing. A grant is also now made of proper food, both to Adam and the inferior creatures. To the animals were given herbs only, (though nothing was forbidden,) but to Adam both herbs and fruits; but animal food could not be

Ver. 20. Moving creature.—This is translated by the Greek, "creeping creature;" and these are certainly included, for the sens abound with them; but Ainsworth justly remarks that "the word Shereis, includes also things moving swiftly in the water, as fishes, &c." Levit. xi. 10. Moving creature that hath life.—The Hebrew, as our margin notes, reads, "a living soul;" on which see chap. i. 7. (Let fowl fly.—This marginal reading is more conformable to the original, and reconciles this passage with chap. 2. 19. The word fowl, from the Saxon fleom, to fly, exactly corresponds to the original, which denotes every thing that flies, whether bird or insect.)—Bagster.

Ver. 21. And God created great whales.—Hebrew Tanninim, that is, sea monsters; including not only whales, but especially the leviathan, the great sea dragon described in the Book of Job, chap. xli.: the crocodile, or straight serpent, and the crooked sea-serpent, whose existence has been long denied, but has lately re-appeared on the American coast. See Isa. xxvii. 1. —The waters brought forth abundantly. It has been remarked, that fishes are the most prolific of all creatures. "A tench lays 1000 eggs, a carp 30,000, and Leuvenhoek counted in a middling sized cod, 9,384,000." And so small are some animalcules, that 30,000 have been counted in a drop of water.—Dr. A. Clarke.

Ver. 24, 25. Beasts of the earth, refer to wild beasts, which, it cannot be doubted, were made at this time, though under the restraint of man, so long as he continued his obedience. [Cattle denotes domestic animals, living on vegetables; Beasts of the earth, wild animals, especially such as live on flesh; and Creeping things, reptiles, or all the different genera of serpents, worms, and such animals as have no feet.]—Bagster. The same variety appears in the terrestrial or aquatic animals—from the mighty elephant to worms and vermin.

Ver. 26. Let us make.—Some persons supposing that this may be an allusion to the language of royalty, it may not be amiss to remark, that no such language occurs in Scripture: "I make a decree," said Darius. Dan. vi. 26. Melchizedek, Abimelech, Pharaoh, and Balaak, speak all in the singular number; and we find Saul, David, and even Solomon, in all his glory, delivering themselves in the same style. Kennicott, Man, in Hebrew, Adam, probably so called either from the red earth of which he was formed, or from the hush or flesh-tint of the human countenance: the name is intended to designate the species.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. So God created man in his own image.—A tradition of this nature prevailed among the heathen. Ovid says, "Prometheus formed man after the image of the gods, who govern all things." Burder's Orient. Lit. Probus says, "The mind that is in us, is an image of the first mind." Ainsworth.—Male and female.—Some Rabbin hence conjectured, that Adam was made at first an hermaphrodite; but the fact seems to be, that Eve was virtually in Adam at his first formation; and her being taken from him was no more a new creation, than was the birth of Cain or Abel, in the ordinary course of nature.

2 And <sup>a</sup>on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.

3 And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created <sup>b</sup>and made.

4 These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in introduced before sin, because it implied the previous introduction of death. It was a general tradition among the heathen, that, in the first and golden age, men lived on herbs and fruits only; and that even the wild animals were not carnivorous. (See Burder's Orient. Liter.)

"God having finished his work, now pronounced it not only "good," but very good, since, by the formation of Adam, it was complete. God having made the great house of this world, and furnished it, now puts in a tenant to possess and govern it.

"He spake, and it was done.—Eternal Night, At God's command, awaken'd into light; He call'd the elements, Earth, Ocean, Air, He call'd them when they were not—and they were: He look'd through space, and kindling o'er the sky, Sun, moon, and stars, came forth to meet his eye: His Spirit mov'd upon the desert earth, And sudden life through all things swarm'd to birth. Man from the dust he rais'd, to rule the whole; He breath'd, and man became a living soul; Through Eden's groves the Lord of Nature trod; Upright and pure, the image of his God."—Montgomery.

CHAP. II. VER. 1-3. The first Sabbath.—The great Creator, "who fainteth not, neither is weary," is yet represented, in condescension to our weakness, resting himself, as on the cloud of his glory—surveying the whole system which he had just formed, "these heavens and this earth, with all the host of them," and pronouncing them "very good," as delighting in this display of his wisdom, power, and goodness; blessing and sanctifying the day which saw them all completed. For, as man seems to have been created on the after part of the sixth day, before sun-set, no sooner does the glowing luminary withdraw, but the shades of evening advance, and are at once consecrated to devotion and to rest: no sooner was the sixth day completed, than the seventh, or sabbath day, commenced, as it does with the Jews to this day.

"God blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it;" (Exod. xx. 11.) When God blesteth any man, it is by making him a blessing, as he did Abraham. (Gen. xii. 2.) So when he blessed the sabbath day he made it a blessing to mankind; not only by affording time for rest, but opportunities for devotion; by opening a communication between earth and heaven. "It is good for me, (said the Psalmist,) to draw near to God." (Ps. lxxiii. 28.) Let us, therefore, bless the day that God hath blessed, and consecrate it to his service!

God not only made the heavens and earth, but "all the host of them."—What are they? The term host means an assemblage; and, as applied to earth, must intend the various vegetables and animals with which it was furnished and adorned; but when applied to heaven, it means, 1. "The sun, moon, and planets, and all the host of heaven;" with which "by his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens," as well as illumined the earth. (2 Kings xxiii. 5.) 2. The holy angels. "And Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him: And when Jacob saw them, he said, This is God's host." (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2.) And the Psalmist includes both when he says, "Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts. Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light." (Ps. cxlviii. 2.) It is not necessary to include either stars or angels in the work of the six preceding days; but they are beautifully represented as coming forward in the close of creation, and joining in a chorus of universal praise: for when Jehovah "laid the foundations of the earth," himself tells us, "The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." (Job xxxviii. 7.)

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Thus.—So the particle nam may certainly be rendered; but it might, with equal propriety, be rendered now, and frequently is so.

Ver. 2. On the seventh day God ended.—The Samaritan text with the LXX. and Syrian versions, read, "On the sixth day." (Kerenscott.) But many critics prefer the present text, rendering it, "God had ended," or, as Anscom, "had finished," both amount to the same meaning as the above version. [Rested, or, rather, ceased, as the Hebrew word is not opposed to weariness, but to action; as the Divine Being can neither know fatigue, nor stand in need of rest.]—Bagster.

It has been often asked, whether the formation of angels, of whom we read frequently in the Scriptures, formed any part of the six days' creation, and if so, of which? But the most judicious commentators seem to think with Dr. John Edwards, "that Moses designed not to include the creation of angels" in this account. Excellency of the Scrip. Nor does this appear to be a modern idea; for when the Emperor Julian asked why nothing is said of the creation of angelic spirits, and of the invisible world? Cyril of Alexandria asked in reply, "What occasion is there for us to be informed respecting the history of things, of which we could form no just conception?" Biblia Biblica. That, however, angels were previously created, we may infer from the following texts. 1. Man was made "a little lower than the angels." Ps. viii. 5. Angels, therefore, previously existed. 2. In the passage above quoted, "the morning stars" and "the sons of God," who could be no other than angels, praised God on the occasion. See Doddridge's Lect.

Ver. 4-7. Creation reviewed.—By the generations of the heavens and the earth is evidently meant their origin by creation, as in the preceding chapter; but the word day in this place is taken in a wider sense than in that chapter, namely, as equivalent to the word time. So it is often used in Scripture, and by our Lord himself: "Abraham saw my day," that is, the time of my incarnation. (John viii. 56.)

In the day that the Lord God made. In the Hebrew it is, "JEHOVAH ELOHIM," or the God JEHOVAH. This awful name means the eternal and self-existent Being; or, as John explains it, "He that is, and was, and is to come, the Almighty." (Rev. i. 8.) In the Old Testament, when this word is translated Lord, it is printed as here, in capital letters, to distinguish it from another Hebrew word, Adonai, also translated Lord.

He "made the earth and the heavens." Thus, "by faith" in the divine testimony, we learn that "the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." (Heb. xi. 3.) That is, this visible creation was not formed of an eternal pre-existent matter, as the heathen philosophers vainly supposed; but was, both in matter and form, the production of the Supreme Being. And this is the subject rather of faith than reason; for He only who made the world can tell us how he made it. "He spake, and it was done: He commanded, and it stood fast." (Ps. xxxiii. 9.)

We may farther observe, that though God formed all his works with infinite ease, for he spake them into being, yet he chose to form them gradually: first the chaos, without form and void; then the light, springing out of darkness; the firmament, atmosphere, or great body of air which every where surrounds us; the waters and the land, each of which hath its boundary; the sun and moon, plants and animals, and lastly Man: then he brought the system to perfection, and pronounced it "very good."

In this recapitulation two new circumstances are added: 1. The world, we are told, in its first state of existence, was not watered, as at present, by showers of rain, but by a mist; or, as others render it, a flood. So we are told, (ver. 10.) that a river, which may also be rendered stream or flood, went up from Eden, watered the garden, and was then divided into four heads, or rivers. If so, Eden was watered like the land of Egypt, by the Nile, God having not yet caused it "to rain upon the earth." 2. As to the creation of Man, before, we were only informed that he was made male and female; now we have his component parts: his body was formed "of the dust of the ground;" but he was inanimate as that dust, till God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life;" or lives, as in the original. Thus was Adam constituted "a living soul." And, as Job says, "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." (Job xxxii. 8.—xxxiii. 4.) What a wonderful compound then is man!—a compound of sordid dust and an immortal mind.

"How poor, how rich! how abject, how august!"—Young.

Ver. 3. God created and made.—English margin, "created to make." This is generally considered as a Hebrew pleonasm; but Parkhurst renders it, "which God created to act;" i. e. to actuate the vast machinery of nature. Hervey explains it to mean, "the production of a continued succession of animals, vegetables, &c. by means of the "prolific instruments and principles" now established.

Ver. 4. In the day.—a time; for other instances of this larger use of the term day, see also Ps. xxxvii. 13. Heb. iii. 11. Rev. xviii. 8. This was the day of creation; so we read also of the day of affliction and of death; the day of redemption, salvation, and of judgment. See also John's larger Dictionary.

The Lord God.—JEHOVAH, (or as the Jews pronounce it, Yehovah) was the distinctive proper name of the God of Israel. Hence Jovis Pater, or Father Jove, afterwards corrupted to Jupiter.

Ver. 6. A mist.—The Hebrew word ala, is evidently used for "a flood," like the flood of Egypt. Amos viii. 8. So the LXX. Aquila, Jerome, &c. which idea is adopted by Dr. Boothroyd, Dr. Geddes, and C. Taylor, the editor of Calmet.

Ver. 7. Dust.—Margin, "Dust or Mould." Some moderns explain this of the minute corpuscles of elementary bodies," which savours too much of modern science. Moses, probably, meant only to state our humble origin.—Some critics divide the chapters here, and begin chap. ii. with the verse following.

8 ¶ And the LORD God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed.

9 And out of the ground made the LORD God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 And a river went out of Eden to water the garden: and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the first is Pison: that is it which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold;

12 And the gold of that land is good: there is bdellium and the onyx stone.

13 And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia.

14 And the name of the third river is Hiddekel: that is it which goeth toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river is Euphrates.

15 And the LORD God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it.

16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat:

17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day

18 ¶ And the LORD God said, It is not good that the man should be alone: I will make him a help meet for him.

19 And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof.

20 And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field: but for Adam there was not found a help meet for him.

21 And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof:

22 And the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man.

23 And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man.

24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

25 And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed.

Since, then, says, Henry "the extraction of the soul is so noble, let us not be of the number of those who, by refusing (divine) instruction, show that they despise their own souls.

Ver. 8—17. Paradise described.—Much learned inquiry has been spent to ascertain the situation of Paradise, to which, no doubt, the description of Moses was a sufficient key when he wrote, if not now. It has been placed in Syria, in Chaldaea, and in Armenia; but the latest, and perhaps the best supported hypothesis, is that which places it in the district of Bamiyan, in the neighbourhood of Mount Caucasus.

It is in vain, however, to look for a Paradise on earth since the fall; nor is it necessary, since we are directed to a better country, where the tree of life grows more abundantly, and bears better fruit. (Rev. xxi. 18—22.) But as whatever God has revealed becomes a proper subject of our attention, we may with propriety inquire into the design of this garden, and its very remarkable furniture.

1. Adam was placed in the garden of Eden, which evidently means pleasure or delights; and it was situated eastward of the country in which Moses wrote, and probably in one of the situations already named. But, as Bishop Horne and others argue, it was also probably a garden of instruction as well as pleasure; pointing out the nature of Adam's situation, as in a state of probation, and the reward of his obedience. In this garden grew every tree that was "pleasant to the sight and good for food, and a tree of life," for man was not to live without food: "and in the midst of the garden, also, the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." So Dr. Kennicott reads the text, by a slight correction in the pointing, which preserves the distinctive character of the tree of knowledge: "Of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat," &c. (Chap. iii. 3.) The latter tree was doubtless so called, because it was the test of man's obedience, and would produce good or evil, happiness or misery, according as he regarded or disobeyed the prohibition. Whether there was any thing in the nature of this tree to effect the evil it threatened, is not expressly said; but it is very possible, and very analogous to the course of divine providence, to suppose that sin should produce its own punishment.

2. Adam was placed in paradise "to dress it and to keep it." We have no reason to believe the ground required laborious cultivation, as at present, but, on the other hand, from the luxuriance of vegetation, it might require more dressing and trimming than even now. He was also to keep this elegant and consecrated spot from the trespasses of those animals which (though not yet ferocious) might not be suitable inhabitants for gardens, and especially for such a garden. Thus man, from his first creation, was taught to abhor idleness.

3. The covenant God made with Adam in paradise. Here we must be cautioned against supposing any thing like a bargain between the Creator and the creature. God's covenants are dispensations of benevolence or of mercy; enjoining obedience, and promising reward: man's part was only to obey, and thankfully to acknowledge the blessing, which, after the fall, was done by sacrificing. The condition here was, the refraining from one particular tree, while of all the others he might eat without restraint. And this restraint was laid on man merely as a test of implicit obedience, when he had every ground to believe, that there must be wise reasons for a prohibition guarded with so severe a penalty.

Ver. 18—25. The naming of animals, and formation of Eve.—The former may very naturally be supposed a work requiring some time and attention, as the Hebrew names are allowed to be striking and appropriate; some, particularly of die." The LXX. render it, "Thou shalt die the death." What that meant, will be best seen in the sequel. See on chap. iii. 18.

Ver. 18. A help meet.—Margin, "A help as before him;" i. e. a female, as in the animals he saw before him. Parkhurst, "A counterpart," says Hutchinson, very properly; one that shall supply all his wants.

Ver. 21. A deep sleep.—The LXX. render this an ecstasy; and some have ingeniously imagined, that in his sleep Adam might have a view of Eve, and such information as prepared him to say, "This is now bone of my bone," &c. See Taylor's Exposit. Index.

Took one of his ribs.—From this, some have supposed that Adam had been furnished with an extra rib for this purpose at his creation; but this is all conjecture: God is never at a loss for means to accomplish his designs, though they may not always be approved by man.

Ver. 22. Made he woman.—The Hebrew term, as the margin intimates, signifies builded; a hint honourable to the female sex. Man was formed like clay in the hands of the potter; but she who was to build up his house, had the honour to be built up by God.

Ver. 23. She shall be called woman.—The Hebrew name is the feminine, not of Adam, but of Ish—man; denominated, not from his origin, but his sex, a male; whence Ishah, which we render woman, is the female, the feminine of male. The same word is rendered wife in the next verse, and the terms are used interchangeably throughout the Scriptures.

Ver. 24. Therefore.—Because she is nearer to man than any other relation of life. She is part of man: "his counterpart;" the partner of his heart. These are evidently not the words of Adam, but of Moses; and as he wrote by inspiration, therefore, our Lord cites them as the words of God, Matt. xix. 5. Mark x. 7. But he quotes a word not now in the Hebrew text: "They twain (or two) shall be one flesh." The same passage with the word in question, is twice referred to by St. Paul, 1 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. v. 31. and it is remarkable, that though dropped in the Hebrew, it is still found in "the Vulgate, the LXX., the Syriac, the Arabic and the Samaritan."—Dr. A. Clarke

Ver. 8. The last hypothesis as to the situation of paradise, is that of Major Wilford, first published in "the Asiatic Researches," of which large extracts are given in C. Taylor, in his "Scripture illustrated." Here the Major finds rivers, &c. exactly answering the description of Moses, except the names, which he supposes to be appellatives.

Ver. 9. Dr. Kennicott labours, with much ingenuity, to prove that the tree of life was not a single tree, but a species; and it is remarkable that Ezekiel speaks of "very many trees on one side (the river) and on the other;—that they are all trees for meat (food): whose leaf shall not fade;" and "it shall thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." Ezekiel xlvii.

7—12. Compare St. John's account of "the tree of life on either side of the river in the New Jerusalem." Rev. xxii. 2. And see Dr. Kennicott's Dissertation on the Tree of Life. Ver. 12. Bdellium (pronounced Delilium).—The pearl oyster, from whence the Bazar and Dr. Clarke. Bdellium is a transparent aromatic gum; but the Hebrew word probably denotes either pearl or crystal. The onyx is a precious stone, so called from a Greek word signifying a man's nail, to the colour of which it nearly approaches.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. [Gihon: the Araxes, which runs into the Caspian sea: both words denote rapidity.]—Bagster. Ethiopia.—Hebrew and English margin, Cush; but there are four countries which bear this name in Scripture, from the sons of Cush having at different times claimed their residence. If we adopt the hypothesis of Major Wilford, this must be Balk, or Bactria. See Gen. x. 7, 8.; and Taylor's Map of Paradise.

Ver. 14. Hiddekel: the Tigris.—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Shalt not eat of it.—Many have speculated upon the species of this tree, but as it was a single tree, and paradise was, after the fall, shut up for ever, the probability is, that its existence was neither preserved nor perpetuated. All inquire therefore useless.

Thou shalt surely die.—Hebrew and English margin, "In dying thou shalt 6 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was <sup>h</sup>pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

the birds, being named from their respective notes, and many of the animals from properties, which seem to have required attentive examination: but among all these was not one suited to be man's companion—"There was not found a help meet for him." Now, if it was after an examination of all the brute creatures that Eve was formed, her production must have been some days at least posterior to that of man. But Dr. Lardner supposes the naming of the animals here introduced by way of anticipation; perhaps some might already have passed before him; and it is certain, that a very cursory view might be sufficient to convince Adam, that there was no help meet for him among them.

Let us now attempt to arrange the facts already mentioned. Adam was created in the latter part of the sixth day, and received from God an immediate communication, as to his situation and destiny. The same evening he might be brought into paradise, where probably the divine presence resided in the Shechinah, this being the commencement of the first Sabbath. In the same night he is cast into a deep sleep, and, on awaking in the morning, beholds the fair companion taken from his side, who is now introduced to him as his bride. When informed of her origin, he affectionately exclaims, "This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman," the female of man, "because she was taken out of man." This hypothesis admits of her joining with Adam in the grateful devotions of the first sabbath, from which she seems necessarily excluded, if we suppose the naming of all the animals and birds to have preceded Eve's formation.

It is here, according to Bishop Warburton, and other learned men, that we are to look for the origin of language, of which names seem the necessary elements. But did not Adam converse with his Maker, and even with his partner in felicity, before this? If so, language must have been intuitive, as Milton represents it:

"——To speak I tried, and forthwith spake;
My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
Whatever I saw." Par. Lost, b. viii. l. 272.

We shall now conclude this section with two or three practical remarks.

1. Marriage was sanctioned of God in paradise—"It is not good for man to be alone," much less is there any merit in a state of constrained celibacy. "Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled." (Heb. xiii. 4.)

2. The object of marriage is not merely to gratify the passions; but mutual aid and comfort, and the virtuous and religious education of children.

3. Revelation alone places woman in her proper sphere. She was "made out of man;" which, says Fuller, should lead men to consider their wives as part of themselves, and to love them as their own flesh. "The woman was not taken from the head," to rule; "neither was she taken from the feet," to be trodden upon; "but from somewhere near the heart," where she should always remain.

4. We have here the great law of matrimony laid down, not by Adam, but by Moses, under the influence of divine inspiration, and therefore quoted by our Lord as a divine oracle. (Matt. xix. 5.)

Lastly, we see here the first authorized type of Christ. St. Paul, quoting these words, adds, "This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the Church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband." (Ephes. v. 32, 33.)

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—6. Eve seduced by the serpent.—The sagacity of the serpent is proverbial; and our Lord himself sanctions the idea, when he directs his disciples to be "wise as CHAP. III. Ver. 1. The term Nachash, here used for serpent, does not mark the species, for it is applied not only to land and sea serpents, but also to the fiery serpents in the wilderness. (Numb. xxi. 7.) [Serpent: the Samaritan copy, instead of nachash, 'a serpent,' reads cachash, 'a liar, or deceiver,' which is in harmony with the language of our Saviour. John viii. 44.]—Bagster. But two or three circumstances may be inferred from it. 1. From its derivation we infer its subtlety and keeness: "a serpent's eye" was proverbial among the Greeks for keeness, penetration, and fascination: hence Minaechesh (Deut. xviii. 10.) is an augur, particularly by means of serpents; and hence Balaam practised enchantments, probably of this nature. (See Numb. xxiv. 1. in Heb.) 2. The noun feminine is used for native brass, i. e. copper; and many serpents are said to resemble this metal in their colour. (Parkhurst). Taylor also tells us of the Nachah, (or spectacled serpent) that in the sun its scales glitter like "the most resplendent gold;" and other serpents there are most beautifully variegated. (Calmet, Natural Hist.) So Milton describes this serpent.

"With burnish'd neck of verdant gold."—Par. Lost, ix. 501.
Is it any wonder that such a creature, and harmless, (as all the creatures were serpents, and harmless as doves." (Matt. x. 16.) But the beauty of the serpent—its piercing, fascinating eye; its smooth, variegated, and shining skin; its gentle, insinuating manner (winding itself round the tree, as an ancient Rabbins suggests, to court her attention):—these probably were the means of the first seduction, as they have often been of seduction since; and were the more powerful, as, in paradise, all the creatures were innocuous. But, alas! here was another tempter, who, from the disguise now worn, is known throughout the Scriptures as the "Old serpent, the Devil, and Satan." (Rev. xii. 9, 14, 15.; xx. 2.)

We may here remark, that though neither the creation nor the fall of angels are mentioned by Moses, yet both must be understood to render the scriptures intelligible. We have quoted a text from Job, respecting the holy angels, as rejoicing in the creation of our world, and therefore as previously existing; and there is another passage in the same book, which implies that there were others fallen and depraved. "There was a day," we are told, (Job i. 6.) "when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord." Now, as in the other instance, we explained "sons of God," of holy angels, so here the term seems to admit of no other interpretation; and so it is understood by the Chaldee paraphrast, and commentators in general. But "Satan came also among them"—not here in the disguise of a serpent, but rather of "an angel of light," which we are told he can assume. By Satan, then, we understand "the Prince of Devils;" and by devils, those "angels which kept not their first estate;" and were therefore cast out of heaven. (2 Cor. xi. 14. 2 Peter ii. 4. Jude 6.)

Now, it has pleased "the only wise God," for reasons which we cannot fathom, to permit Satan to tempt and torment mankind; at the same time, maintaining his own superiority, "he takes the wise in their own craftiness," and produces "good out of evil;" as in the case before us—in the fall of man originated his redemption.

We now come to a conversation between the serpent and our first mother, Eve, which many have attempted to reduce to mere allegory; the frequent reference, however, of the New Testament writers to this event, as pure matter of fact, forbids our attempt to explain it away in that manner. But, could a serpent thus reason and converse? The old serpent might; and it is only on the principle of his being the real tempter, that the history can be explained. The first question recorded seems to imply something previous, as if the woman had been looking and longing, and lamenting that she might not eat. "Yea!" said the serpent, is it true, that God hath said, "Ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden?" This brings out the woman's statement of the divine prohibition, which she perhaps carries beyond the truth, by adding, "neither shall ye touch it," of which we find no mention in the charge of God to Adam.

The tempter now speaks out, and charges their great benefactor with prevarication—with a design to abridge their happiness, and to deter them from what had an immediate tendency to promote it. "Ye shall not surely die;" or, in the terms of the original, "Dying, ye shall not die:" that is, the consequences will be very different from what you fear, for your eyes will be opened to further knowledge—you will be like God himself, or at least like his angels, "knowing good and evil." Here Eve was completely deceived; and "when she saw that the tree was good for food," probably by the tempter himself eating of it; "and that it was pleasant to the eye," and, especially, "a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband; and he did eat." In these few words, especially the last, we read the dreadful history of man's fall. At first, it should seem that Adam was not present, for he takes no part in the diain paradise) should attract the attention of a woman? But, 3. It was naked: for the word rendered "more subtle," is literally "more naked," being the same that is used in the preceding verse for the nakedness of our first parents: (and the reader should bear in mind that the division of chapters is a modern invention.) Now Eve could not but observe, that the cattle were clothed with hair, and birds with feathers; but here was a creature, like herself, without either, and with a skin exquisitely beautiful. If it should be objected that serpents have scales, so have we, as the microscope demonstrates; and the scales of some serpents may be as little perceptible to the naked eye as ours. It was then the beauty of the serpent that first attracted Eve's notice.

Ver. 4. The serpent said—It may seem strange that the woman was not startled when she first heard the serpent speak; but, in this early stage of her life, it is possible that she might not know that speech was confined to man. Milton, however, supposes, that the wily serpent made circumstance an argument in his favour, pretending that it was the forbidden tree that had endowed him both with speech and reason. b. ix. l. 680, &c.

7 And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked: and they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves aprons.

8 And they heard the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden.

9 And the LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou?

10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself.

11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?

12 And the man said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the LORD God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

14 And the LORD God said unto the serpent,

"Of that forbidden tree,
Brought death into the world, and all our woe."—Milton.

Ver. 7—13. The consequences of the fall.—It is fruitless to inquire what might have been the effect as to us, if Eve only had eaten of the forbidden fruit, and not Adam, for it was with him alone that the first covenant was made; but infinite Wisdom foreseeing all consequences—"the end from the beginning"—provides accordingly. "Adam was not deceived," as St. Paul assures us, and himself confesses; "but the woman," being the weaker vessel, she "was deceived," and transgressed. (1 Tim. ii. 14.) But what were the consequences?—"The eyes of them both were opened." Whether the fruit of this tree had any power of creating irregular sensations, we know not; but certainly, though "their eyes were opened, their minds were much confused." "They were ashamed"—not of having been so ungrateful to God, or so credulous to the serpent, but of being seen by their Maker in the state in which he had formed them! And then they attempt to hide themselves from the eye of Omniscience among the trees; or, still more ridiculous! by a few leaves sewed or plaited together as aprons or girdles. How nearly allied are sin and folly! So much is sin against our own interest, that the greatest sinner is always the greatest fool.

"They heard the voice of the Lord God walking." From this it has been inferred, that the Deity in communion with Adam, assumed a human form; but this is not certain; the term "walking" is elsewhere used by Moses, in reference to sound only, as at Sinai, (Exodus xix. 19.) the voice waxing louder, appeared to come nearer. Perhaps it was a voice of tempest and of thunder, like that which was addressed to our Lord when he was upon earth, and the Jews said it thundered; (John xii. 29.) and thunder is often in scripture called "the voice of God." (See Psalm xxix. 3—5.) But the Hebrew reads, literally as in the margin, "in the wind of the day," and we know that "God walks upon the wings of the wind," and "makes the clouds his chariot." (Ps. civ. 3.) We need not wonder, therefore, that our first parents attempted to fly the divine presence, however vain and silly the attempt.

And, I. Hear now the momentous inquiry—"Adam, where art thou?" And we may observe, that when God makes inquiries of his creatures, it is not for his information but for ours. It is important often to put such inquiries to ourselves—Where am I? and what am I about? If we were thus to judge ourselves, we should "not be judged," at least not condemned. (1 Cor. xi. 31.)—2. The sure consequences of guilt are fear and shame: "I was afraid, because I was naked;" and thus fear and shame often betray our guilt as they did Adam's.—3. Remark his vain subterfuge, "I hid myself." So guilty children hide themselves, by placing their hands before their eyes. Alas! that man should ever think of hiding himself among a few trees, when, if even rocks and mountains were to fall upon us, they could not screen us from the All-seeing Eye. (Rev. vi. 15, 16.) Lastly, our unhappy first parent is brought to conviction: yet his confession is not candid and ingenuous, but equivocating and reluctant. "I did eat" which should have been his first words, are placed last, and preceded by an apology which only aggravated the crime, "The woman that thou didst give me." But she was given for a help meet, and not a tempter. This was ungrateful to his Maker, thus to throw back in his face his greatest earthly gift—it was ungenerous and unkind to her, as she was the weaker vessel. "She gave me!" But it was his office to control, and not to obey: the man was the head of the woman, not the woman of the man. And supposing that she fell before he came to the fatal scene, he should rather have been her advocate and apologist, than her accuser. "She gave me!"—then he should have refused, and not have joined her in the transgression. But why did Adam eat? He was not deceived. He must have instantly perceived she had done wrong, and the only apology offered by him was an aggravation of his crime—he "loved the creature more than the Creator," which was the great source of idolatry from the beginning. (Rom. i. 25.)

But the woman is now called, and she also, (such is the nature of sin!) wishing to shift the fault from herself, throws it upon the serpent. "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." "Sin (says Henry) is a brat that nobody is willing to own."

Those that are willing enough to take the pleasure and profit of sin, are backward enough to take the blame and shame of it.

Ver. 14—19. The offenders sentenced.—We may here observe, that though the serpent was the last accused, he was the first condemned: in fact, the old serpent himself had been con-

Ver. 7. Eyes were opened.—Eyes of their mind and conscience, to see and feel their guilt; for they had been deluded, thus blinded by the subtlety of the serpent. There is no evidence that they had lost their natural vision. They sewed.—The word means simply fastened together, and here, by twisting or plaiting:—Aprons. The margin is literally, "things to gird about;" girdles. As the leaves of this tree were broad and near at hand, they formed the most natural covering of their nakedness.

Ver. 8. Walking.—In Exod. xix. 19. this is rendered "waxed louder and louder." Pirle further remarks, that God "answered Job out of the whirlwind," chap. xxxviii. 1. See also 1 Chron. xiv. 15. Ezek. i. 4. Acts xxi. 2. Pirle's Works.

Ver. 11. Dr. Kennicott translates this verse more literally, and with more spirit. "What I of the tree which I commanded thee not to eat, hast thou eaten?"

Ver. 14. Most remarkable, as relates to this subject, is a tradition still prevalent among the Hindoos. They relate that the god Creshna, when incarnate, had a terrible conflict with Kali-naga, the black serpent with a thousand heads, and after being supposed destroyed, at length triumphed over him, and taking his heads one by one, tore them from his body, and casting them at his feet, trampled and danced on them. Another representation, founded on the same tradition, describes Creshna as treading on the serpent, which at the same time bites his heel. No worshipper of Vishnu, of any distinction, is without an image of this, in gold, silver, or copper.—Maurice's Hist. of Hindostan. Similar traditions may be traced in other ancient nations. See Burder's Oriental Customs.

To the same source must be attributed the worship of serpents among the Egyptians and other ancient nations: (see Gill on Gen. iii. 1.) and even the devil-worship among the Negroes, who worship him that he may not hurt them. Hence, also, were serpents considered sacred, a curious instance of which occurred in the close of the seventeenth century. A hog, which had by some means killed and swallowed one of those favourite reptiles, in the country of the Widahs, so provoked them, that the marbutis (or priests) procured a general slaughter of the swine; and if the king had not loved pork, a hog had not been left in Widah. See Hist. of Jamaica.

Ver. 15. "It," or rather "He."—So Ainsworth and Dr. Boothroyd. See also Polit. Synop. in loc.; the Assembly's Annotations, and Dr. A. Clarke's Comment. The word Zara (seed) is singular, and agrees in gender with this pronoun. And St. Paul teaches us to apply it primarily to Christ. Gal. iii. 16.

Ver. 16. Multiplying, will multiply.—The same Hebrew form of expression as is used chap. ii. 17, "Dying thou shalt die;" and if we render that properly, it should seem this should be rendered in like manner; "I will surely multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." It does not appear, however, that fertility was meant as a punishment; but, by a figure in rhetoric, (called Hendiadys) two substantives are here used for a substantive and an adjective; as we should say, "thy sorrowful conception." A figure "frequently made use of (says Dr. Kennicott) in sacred as well as profane authors."

Ver. 18. Thorns and thistles shall it (the ground) bring forth.—These, as Dr. Lardner observes, are not now to be supposed newly created; but, like the woman's sorrow in conception, were to be "greatly multiplied." So we have a familiar proverb, that "ill weeds grow apace."

evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of <sup>v</sup> life, and eat, and live for ever:

24 So he drove out the man: and he placed demned already. "He was both a liar and a murderer from the beginning." (John viii. 44.) He was already "under the curse," and having no excuse nor apology to offer, his sentence proceeds forthwith. But having, under the guise of a material serpent, effected the ruin of man, his sentence is couched under the same image; and the rather as the true character of the tempter might be yet unknown to our first parents. As to the material serpent, it is probable his original residence was in the trees, and his meat therefrom; but now he is degraded to move upon the earth, and to lick the dust. But how does this agree to the tempter himself? Doubtless figuratively: and it seems to imply, 1. Deep degradation. Satan, who had been numbered among principalities and powers above, having degraded himself in assuming the form of an animal, with the hope, perhaps, of thwarting the purposes of his Maker, is not only cast down from heaven, but "bound in chains of darkness;" and even reduced, in future, to beg of the seed of the woman a refuge in the filthy carcasses of swine. (Matt. viii. 31.) 2. It implies defeat, discomfiture, with utter mortification and despair. So it is said of the seed of the woman, "His enemies shall lick the dust;" and "dust shall be the serpent's meat." (Ps. lxxii. 9.; Isaiah lxxv. 25.) If it be inquired who are the serpent's seed, St. John the Baptist will point us to the Pharisees and Sadducees, whom he calls a "generation of vipers." (Matt. iii. 7.) And our Lord himself addresses them under the same appellation; and tells them they were of their father the devil, who was a liar from the beginning, alluding evidently to this eventful history. The enmity between the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman was never more evidently seen than in this instance. (Matt. xii. 24.; John viii. 44.) 3. The sentence of the serpent contains the first gracious promise to mankind. "I will put enmity," irreconcilable hatred, (which is true both literally and figuratively) "between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it, or <sup>He</sup>," (as it might be rendered) the woman's seed, doubtless referring chiefly to the promised Messiah, "shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." That is, thou shalt wound him in the conflict, but he shall conquer, and tread both thy cunning and thy power beneath his feet.

Though the Jews of our time appear not to understand the nature of this judgment upon the serpent, as including the promise of salvation by the Messiah, the Jerusalem Targum (as Ainsworth observes) refers its fulfilment expressly to "the last days, the days of King Messiah;" and farther adds, "The woman's seed shall be cured, but thou, O serpent, shalt not be cured."

We come next to the sentence of the woman, who had already received a promise of special mercy in the curse pronounced upon the tempter; the judgment pronounced upon her consists in two circumstances—her pains in child-bearing, and her subjection to her husband. As to the former, it should seem that some degree of pain and inconvenience might have followed the blessing, to "increase and multiply;" but now those sorrows were to be augmented. "I will greatly (or surely) multiply thy sorrow and thy conception;" meaning, "the sorrow of thy conception;" and so, though Adam, like his great antetype, had in all things the pre-eminence, as first formed, and made the head of his posterity, now her subjection was to be more marked. "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thy desire shall be (subject) to thy husband." In this, perhaps, may be an allusion to the nature of her offence, having an ambition to be wise, like God, or at least like a superior order of beings, she was made subject to her husband. "And he shall rule over thee." Still, however, mercy is associated with judgment; the woman in sorrow is to bring forth children; "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in child-bearing, if she continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety." (1 Tim. ii. 15.) Woman lost much by the fall, and the sex have been reduced to great degradation and many hardships, especially in heathen countries; but the Gospel restores her to her proper rank, and to an equal interest with man in all the blessings of the Gospel; for "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female." (Gal. iii. 28.) Nor is this all; for the mother of our Lord, in the honour of bearing the Son of God, has raised the sex to an honour that, but for the fall, they could never have enjoyed. This is no palliation of Eve's fault; but is mentioned to His honour, whose prerogative it is, to bring good out of evil.

Ver. 21. To the idea of sacrifice being now instituted, it has been objected, that but two animals of a species had been created, and there had been no time for their increase. For the former assertion, however, we know of no authority, nor of any reason why every species should spring from a single pair, as in the case of mankind. God hath made of "one blood all nations." Adam was the covenant head of his posterity; but nothing of this kind is said of animals, of whom, probably, at least as many were created as entered Noah's ark. See Gen. vii. 2.

Ver. 22. Lest he . . . take of the tree of life, and live for ever.—Another question arises here; had the tree such a property in the state of innocence? Though man might, in a certain sense, be created naturally immortal, yet from the very nature of matter, the body might be subject to accidents; as in the use, for instance, of sharp instruments, in pruning, &c. Now this cir-

The sentence of Adam now comes under our consideration, and several circumstances call for our attention.

1. The most remarkable circumstance to be noticed is, that no curse is pronounced either upon Adam or his wife; but upon the serpent and upon the ground. Surely this can only be accounted for, on the principle of salvation being provided through the seed of the woman, who was to bear the curse for them, and to extract even from "the accursed tree" the blessings of salvation.

2. They were not, however, exempt from punishment; and it is observable, as her sentence had a particular bearing upon the condition of her daughters, so had Adam's upon his sons, on whom, in almost all countries, agricultural labour principally devolves—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. There is mercy, however, mingled here; for, notwithstanding the thorns and thistles, the ground was to produce bread and vegetables; only it required now a more laborious cultivation than before, when man had only to trim the luxuriances of vegetation. (Chap. ii. 15.)

3. Still the penalty of mortality was not remitted, for "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

But here it is objected, the threatening was, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" whereas Adam lived more than 900 years. To this it may be answered, 1. That a reprieve had been received in the promise of a Saviour, "the seed of the woman;" and, 2. That though the term day, when connected or contrasted with night, is restrained to its more usual and proper sense, as in the first chapter of this book; yet it is often used, both in Scripture and in popular language, for an indefinite period, answering to the word time. So Dr. Boothroyd here renders it—"At whatever time thou eatest," &c. So it is used chap. ii. 4. as has been there shown. (See Note.) 3. It is in a sense true, that on the very day (in its most proper and restricted sense) on which Adam sinned, he also died.—(1.) The sentence of death was passed; and, in the eye of the law, a condemned man is a dead man. (2.) In that day a separation took place between God and his soul; he was cut off from the fountain of life. He, that in innocence enjoyed daily, perhaps hourly, communion with God, was now so estranged, that on the first signal of his approach he fled to hide himself! Nor is this all. (3.) Death seized upon his frame, as it were in execution of the sentence. His conduct, in attempting to flee, shows the hurried state of his mind, which must affect his nerves almost immediately.

"Death was the threatening: Death began
To take possession of the man:
His unborn race received the wound,
And heavy curses smote the ground."—Watts.

Death Eternal, was the main and distinctive meaning of the threatening; and but for the interposition of mercy, through a Saviour promised in the seed to bruise, &c., he would have instantly passed away, as did the rebel angels, to hell. Divine truth was gradually revealed. And it is highly reasonable to believe, that Adam was conscious of possessing a rational and immortal soul, which, at death, must return to God that gave it, by the dissolution of his body. We know, however, that "It is appointed unto all men once to die, and after death the judgment." (Heb. ix. 27.) This brings home the subject to our own bosoms, and makes it infinitely interesting to every individual of our race.

Ver. 20–24. The expulsion of Adam and Eve from paradise.—This chapter winds up with two or three important particulars, of which the one just mentioned forms the conclusion. These events are, 1. The naming of Eve. The name Woman was appellative, and belonged to the whole sex. The name now conferred might be called her proper name, as intending to distinguish her from all her daughters. Eve (in Hebrew, Chavah) signifies life; and it was given her "because she was [to be] the mother of all who should live;" that is, as the Chaldee paraphrase expresses it, "Of all the children of men." This name was therefore, in the first place, a pledge of her life being spared, and her race propagated. Others think the name had also a particular reference to the promised seed—"the living One," who has life in himself, and gives life to all who believe in him. The Hebrews express much in the gift of a name. 2. The Lord clothed our first parents with coats of skin. Most of the circumstances mentioned with regard to the early history circumstance seems alluded to by Ezekiel, in speaking of this tree in the future paradise. He says, "the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." And so St. John, "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Ezek. xlvii. 12. Rev. xxii. 2.

It is hinted, that the serpent might have suggested this. On looking into Lord Byron's "Cain," we find he makes him suggest this to Adam, to whom he blasphemously says,

"And wherefore pluck'd'st ye not the tree of life?
Ye might have then defied him."

Of this history of paradise, and of the fall, there are a variety of traces in the oriental writers, who preserve a tradition of many of the circumstances. See S. Burder's Oriental Customs, and Oriental Literature.

of mankind, were full of meaning and instruction, and none more than this. We have seen they clothed themselves with fig-leaves; these, however, were not adapted for permanent clothing, as they could not withstand the wintry season, which was now probably approaching, with all the evils attached to it by the fall. Skin dresses (very simply prepared) were therefore provided for them. The heathen, we know, covered themselves with the skins of various beasts, and some nations wear them to the present day; but many have thought, that this change was made to teach them a most important moral lesson; namely, that no voluntary penance was sufficient to make satisfaction for their sin; but that blood must be shed to make atonement; and the skin of the sacrifice was worn, as significant of his righteousness who made satisfaction for human guilt. So Milton beautifully explains it, speaking of God, in the person of his Son:

"As father of the family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts, . . .
And thought not much to clothe his enemies:
Nor he their outward only with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious, with the robe of righteousness
Arraying, covered from his Father's sight."

It is also highly probable that sacrifices were now first instituted; on which we shall have farther occasion to observe presently.

"And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us!" "On all hands, (says Dr. Clarke) this text is allowed to be difficult; and the chief difficulty seems to lie in ascribing irony to the Deity. Let us not, however, be wise above what is written: this is often done in the Scriptures. Of the scoffers who combined against the Lord and his Anointed, it is said, "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision." And of fools who "make a mock of sin," it is said, he "shall laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh." (Ps. ii. 4; Prov. i. 26.) It has been objected, that it would be cruel in a Judge to mock the criminals at his bar. But this is not addressed to the criminals; they are reprimanded, and hopes held out (at least) of pardon. But to whom then are the words addressed?—To the same to whom it was said above, "Let us make man in our image;" and the expression is recorded to show, that the plan of providence and of grace was not to be disturbed by the subtlety of Satan, or the folly of our first parents. It is upon the serpent only that the sarcasm is past, who had said to them, "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil;" and who had probably suggested, (though it is not recorded,) that if they did eat of the forbidden tree, they had then only to take of the tree of life and live for ever. But had this tree the power of conferring immortality on sinners? Certainly not; nor does the irony imply it, but just the contrary. This tree had as much power to confer eternal life, as the other to confer true wisdom.

"This ironical reflection," as it respects man, (says Fuller,) "is expressive both of indignation and pity. Man is become wonderfully wise! Unhappy creature! He has for ever forfeited my favour, which is life; and having lost the signified, let him have no access to the sign. He has broken my covenant: let neither him nor his posterity from henceforward expect to regain it by any obedience of theirs."

"Therefore," lest the man should delude himself a second time, and seek to this tree for life, as he had to the other for wisdom; "Therefore the Lord God sent the man forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken." In this he seems to have shown some reluctance, for it is added, "he drove out the man." It is remarkable that nothing is here said of the woman, who does not appear to have been driven, but to have followed voluntarily, though with tears and sadness. Adam, having lost his all for the love of her, (as we have supposed,) it is natural to conceive, that now, penitent and distressed, she was ready to follow him, wherever he might be sent, and to partake in the evils that she had brought upon him.

Finally, to prevent all hopes of returning to their earthly paradise, "at the east end of the garden," whence they doubtless issued, "God placed cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." The exhibition here named appears to have been that of the Shechinah, or tabernacle of the divine presence, with the same cherubim, whereof the figures were afterwards erected in the most Holy place of the Tabernacle, the form of which will appear when we come to Exodus xxvi. 1. In the mean time, two things may be observed, 1. There was enough exhibited in a sword of flame in continual action, to exclude the most distant thought of their ever recovering their former state of happiness, or, indeed, happiness at all, by their own merits and exertions; yet, 2. Here is an exhibition of cherubim, pointing out the residence of the divine presence, and the mercy-seat, to which they might direct their hopes and prayers.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1–7. The birth of Cain and Abel.—The first verse plainly intimates, that Eve was not in a state of pregnancy when she left paradise; and from this we may infer, considering the blessing of fertility pronounced, that their residence there was but of short duration, and perhaps their state of probation was intended to be but short: but revelation is here silent, and it becomes us to be so.

Eve was not more deceived in the forbidden fruit than she was in her first-born son, whom she called Cain, which means an acquisition; "because (said she) I have gotten a man," that is, a man-child, "from the Lord." Though the exact translation may be doubtful, the general sense seems unquestionable; she hastily concluded that this was the promised seed, who was to bruise the serpent's head; and, under this idea, he was probably brought up without correction or control; and in this circumstance (connecting it with his depraved nature) seems to have been laid the foundation of his awful character—perverse, obstinate, passionate, cruel, impious, and profane; of all which we shall find the evidences in his conduct. Alas! to this day, how often are parents deceived in their children! mistaking their vices for virtues, and throwing the reins upon their passions, whereby, instead of blessings, they become curses, both to their families and the world.

But Eve soon after has another child, and not seeing in him, CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. A man from the Lord.—The particle eth, here rendered from, appears to bear various significations. The Jewish grammarians say it denotes, under different circumstances, either the nominative or accusative case; but this is doubtful, and in the present instance it seems generally agreed to take the word as a preposition. Our translators render it from; but of this meaning we find no clear instance, except when connected with new, which of itself means from. 2. Ainsworth renders it of, or with; meaning "with his favour, and of his good will." The Greek is by; i. e. by the help of. Dr. Kennicott renders it, according to the Lord; i. e. according to his promise. But according to God, in the New Testament, sometimes means, after his image; like him. See Rom. xv. 5. Eph. iv. 24. So St. Stephen says of Moses, (Acts vii. 20. in the Greek,) he "was fair to God;" and divinely fair; and so, probably, was Cain. Parkhurst, however, and the Hutchinsonians, who take eth, (or at) to mean the very, read, "a man, the very Jehovah;" but we dare not found so important a doctrine on a mere criticism. Compare Note on chap. i. 1.

Ver. 2. She again bare.—But as it is not said she again conceived, Dr. Clarke says it is evident these brothers were twins, which aggravates the cruelty of Cain. So the Jewish doctors quoted by Ainsworth. "At the end of days." Our translators in the text take the expression generally; but most commentators (see Ainsworth, and Pool's Syn.) take it for the end of the year; i. e. of the Jewish year, which was the time of harvest. Dr. Kennicott, however, contends that it means (as seems very natural) the end of the week; i. e. the sabbath: other traces of which we shall find in this book, whether this be correct or not.—Kenn. Dissert. See Note on chap. i. 14.

Ver. 4. In process of time.—Hebrew, "Also brought." That animal sacrifices were of divine appointment, can hardly admit of a doubt with those who believe the Bible; and there appears to have been a general tradition to the same effect in almost all nations. See Kennicott's 2d Dissert. (on Cain and Abel) and Faber's Horæ Mosæicæ. Dr. K. contends, however, that Abel offered with his sacrifice a mincha, here rendered "meat offering," which he conceives always implied bread corn, or flour. See Exod. xxiii. 8, &c. Levit. ii. 1, &c. That it generally did is admitted, but other learned men think not always; and refer to the following passages to prove it a general term for a present, Gen. xxxii. 13; and sometimes at least including flesh, Judges vi. 18, 19. 1 Sam. ii. 15–17.

And of the fat thereof.—We have taken this expression in the sense of the fattest and best, on the authority of Maimonides, as quoted from Ainsworth. But it is also true that the fat of every animal sacrifice was particularly devoted to God, and to be consumed by fire. Levit. iii. 16, 17. That fire from heaven was the usual token of divine acceptance, (see Gen. xv. 17. Lev. ix. 24. Judges vi. 21. 2 Chron. vii. 1–3. Psal. xx. 3. marg.)

That animal sacrifices were adopted before the flood, there can be no doubt; and as the offering generally partook of the victim, we may infer the use of animal food,—or wherefore was Abel a keeper of sheep? says Dr. Lardner. In apology for Cain, it has been suggested that he had no flock; it does not appear, however, that there was as yet any private property, as all were one family; and certainly Cain makes no such excuse.

Ver. 7. Sin lieth at the door.—That the term chattah, used for sin, is used also for a sin-offering, the word offering being usually supplied, see Exod. xxxiv. 14. xxx. 16. Lev. iv. 3. and so frequently; also, Hosea iv. 8. 2 Cor. xxi. 1. and the verb rendered "to lie," is properly to couch as an animal, &c. Ainsworth and Parkhurst. Among the commentators who prefer the rendering "a sin offering," are Lightfoot, Pool, Ainsworth, Dr. Kennicott, A. Clarke, Boothroyd, &c.

8 ¶ And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and <sup>1</sup> slew him.

9 And the Lord said unto <sup>m</sup> Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's "blood" crieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand:

12 When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength: a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

13 And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment <sup>is</sup> greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face perhaps, the same promising appearance—the same countenance, the same bodily strength, she calls him Abel, that is, vanity. Calmet thinks this expresses a disappointment in her former conclusion; but as Cain was as yet but an infant of a year old, (if indeed the brothers were not twins, as some suppose) she could hardly so soon find out her error. It seems, therefore, more probable, that there was a marked difference between them in appearance; the elder, plump and hale; the younger, weak and puny. But Abel signifies also mourning; and he might have, as sometimes we say of children, "a look of grief." Agreeable to this difference in their appearance and constitutions, were the employments to which they were trained. The hardy, robust Cain, was brought up, in the sweat of his face, to till the ground; the meek, the gentle, and probably the weak and sickly Abel, was employed to tend and feed the sheep. From the character given of the latter, "the righteous Abel," there can be no doubt of his piety; and a retired and contemplative life seems to have been congenial with his disposition. "In process of time," at the end of the year, or perhaps the week, on the Sabbath day, "Cain brought of the fruit of the ground," the first fruits of his harvest, "an offering to the Lord." Cain was no Atheist, it appears, but was content to acknowledge the gifts of Providence, in crowning his rural labours with such success. And Abel, "he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering; but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect." And wherefore? There appear to be two obvious reasons—the difference of their characters and of their offerings. 1. Their characters differed. Abel was righteous; was a believer, and made his offering in faith, as saith the Apostle to the Hebrews. (Chap. xi. 4.) On the other hand, Cain was a child of the wicked one, the seed of the serpent, an unbeliever, and probably, as to the divine promise of Messiah, an infidel. (1 John iii. 12.) 2. As to their offerings. Abel brought, not only an animal sacrifice, which had reference to the atonement of CHRIST, but "of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof," that is, the fattest and best. "So the Hebrew Doctors teach, that a man should enlarge his hand, and bring his offering of the fairest and most laudable amongst those kind of things whereof he bringeth. . . . And this is a common law in every thing which is for the name of the good God, that it be of the goodliest and the best." (See Numb. xviii. 12.) But Cain appears to have paid no regard to this: he brought of the fruit of the ground, but it is not said of the first fruits. Decency seems to have induced him to make an offering, but he was not solicitous as to its quality; much less was he desirous to present an atoning sacrifice, as pointing to the Lamb of God, in whom it is evident he did not believe. A noble poet, who has entered too deeply into his spirit and temper, represents him as perfectly careless and indifferent, and makes him say on this occasion—

"I have nought to ask—nor ought to thank for."

"Unto Cain and his offering (therefore) the Lord had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell." He is now in a disposition to be angry with his Maker, who is represented as graciously reasoning with him. "If thou doest (or hast done) well, shalt thou not be accepted?"—By what token the acceptance of Abel's offering was expressed, we are not told; but Bishop Horne says, "It is hardly to be doubted, but that it was the same vouchsafed on most occasions afterwards, viz. the consumption of the offering by fire descending from heaven. Hereby it was declared, that the innocent was taken for the guilty, and the sacrifice sustained the vengeance that must otherwise have been inflicted upon the sinner."

As to the conduct of Cain, Bishop Hall observes—"It should have been Cain's joy to see his brother accepted; it should have been his sorrow to see that himself had deserved rejection; his brother's example should have excited and directed him. Could Abel have staid God's fire from descending? Or should he, if he could, reject God's acceptance, and displease his Maker, to content a brother? Was Cain any farther from a blessing, because his brother obtained mercy? How proud and foolish is malice, which grows thus mad, because God or Abel is not less good?"

"He was wroth." "The Hebrew word (saith Ainsworth) signifies to burn with anger, or grief"—perhaps rather vexation; as it is applied to Jonah, who was not only angry, but sore vexed at the loss of his gourd. (Jonah iv. 1, 9.) We have often heard of God being angry with sinners, but here is a sinner angry with God; and being vexed to the heart that he cannot have his revenge on him, resolves to have it on his brother.

Cain having returned home, the Lord, perhaps in a dream or vision of the night, (says Fuller,) expostulated with him. "Why art thou wroth, and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" Our margin reads, "Shalt thou not have the excellency?" Still more literally, "the pre-eminence," the right of first-born. From this it should seem, he was more concerned for his birthright than for his salvation; fearing that, as Abel's offering had been accepted in preference to his, he might also lose the rights of primogeniture. On this principle only can we account for the assurance, "Unto thee shall his desire be subject, and thou shalt rule over him." But it is added, "If thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door;" that is, in the general meaning of the expression, "the fault is all thine own."

The ablest commentators, however, are of opinion, that as the same word is frequently used for a sin-offering, under the Old Testament, as for sin itself, so the phrase should be here rendered, "a sin-offering is couching at thy gate." The way of salvation was yet open, and the means of atonement at hand; but his proud rebellious heart would not accept of mercy.

Ver. 8–10. Abel's murder.—Cain, we are informed, now spake to Abel, his brother, and perhaps might say, (as the Samaritan copies read,) "Let us go out into the field," in order to entice him to a distance from his father and family; and when they came into the field, and seem to have been sitting down together in conversation, Cain suddenly "rose up against his brother, and slew him." The facts here are very few, and briefly related, and it is useless to enlarge them by a poetic imagination: we may remark, however, that the murder, though it might be suddenly executed, was probably premeditated, and that the cause was hatred against his brother on account of his religion. "And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." (1 John iii. 12.)

Thus, as a very ancient writer tells us, "through the envy of the devil, Death came into the world;" and was exhibited, in the first instance, under the horrid form of murder—the murder of a brother! Oh! what a sight must this have been to Adam and his wife!—of their two first children, the one (of whom they had raised the highest expectations) proves a murderer, and the other is murdered!

Though Cain was probably careful that no human eye should see him commit the crime, there is an Eye that never closeth—a witness ever present. "He maketh inquisition for blood." (Psalm ix. 12.) But hark! the thunder speaks again, and the voice that cried, "Where art thou Adam?" now cries to Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" and the hardened reprobate answers with a lie—"I know not;" and, with an insult to his Judge, "Am I my brother's keeper?" And the Lord said, "What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." On this, Bishop Hall remarks: "No sooner doth Abel's blood speak unto God, than God speaks to Cain. There is no wicked man to whom God speaks not; if not to his ear, yet to his heart (his conscience).—Consciences that are without remorse are not without horror: wickedness makes men desperate. The murderer is angry with God, as of late for accepting his brother's oblation, so now, for listening to his blood. And he dares to answer God with another question—'Am I my brother's keeper?' Whereas he should have said, 'Am not I my brother's murderer?' Behold! he scorneth to keep whom he feared not to kill."

But we must not leave this scene without observing how beautiful a type Abel affords of the Messiah—meek and humble, harmless and undefiled; his life full of piety and benevolence: such was the Lord Jesus; yet is he murdered by his brethren, who hated him on the same ground that Cain hated Abel; and yet while his blood is flowing on the cross, it unites with his voice in saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

"Blood has a voice to pierce the skies;
Revenge! the blood of Abel cries;
But the dear stream, when Christ was slain,
Speaks peace as loud from every vein."—Watts.

Ver. 11–17. Cain's punishment.—"And now art thou cursed from the earth!" It may be observed here, that the sentence of death for murder (Gen. ix. 6.) was not yet announced. Few, however, will think his punishment lighter than death itself.

the equity of the divine judgments, which Cain blasphemed, and Abel justified, whence arose their quarrel.—Stackhouse's History of the Bible.

Ver. 13. My punishment, or my sin.—Ainsworth admits both. Boothro d prefers the former, and Clarke the latter, but is inclined to read it interrogatively; "Is my sin too great to be forgiven?" But this seems not to agree with the spirit of Cain.

Ver. 8. And Cain talked with Abel.—The verb is commonly rendered said, and the Samaritan text, the LXX. and other versions, supply the words, "Let us go into the field." Kennicott, Boothroyd, A. Clarke, &c. It seems, however, that the word must be sometimes rendered spake to. See Exod. xix. 25. 2 Sam. xiv. 4, &c. Parkhurst. The Targum, indeed, pretend to give the whole of the conversation between Cain and Abel, as relating to a or, to call themselves by the name of the LORD. De. 26. 17. Ps. 116. 17. Is. 44. 5. Joel 2. 32. 1 Co. 1. 2.

Let us consider it. The first ingredient in it is a curse—the curse of God; which falls not, as in Adam's case, on the earth only, but upon Cain himself; who, after spending his early life in cultivating the ground about Eden, was no longer suffered to reap its fruits, but is driven forth into the barren wilderness. 2. Here is a guilty conscience, which led him to expect vengeance from every one he saw, perhaps even from the brutes themselves. Some, indeed, supposing that Cain had no brothers, have jeeringly asked, Who was there to take vengeance on him? But the noble author already referred to, fully answers this, when he makes an angel say to Cain,

And who shall warrant thee against thy son?”

This supposes (what is not improbable) that his son Enoch was already born, though not mentioned till afterwards; but if not, there is no doubt but Eve had many other children, and some of them had also offspring, so that the idea was by no means chimerical. As the death of Cain was not, however, consistent with the plan of Providence, in giving him a posterity so renowned as artisans and warriors, as we find them in the next chapters, we read that his Maker “set a mark on him,” to prevent such a catastrophe; or rather, as most commentators now agree, gave him a “sign,” that he should be secure. 3. He was driven out from the presence of God, as well as from his father's family and his home, and cut off from all prospect of being permitted to succeed him, a thing which he appears to have much dreaded. It is true, that Cain seems to have had little sense of the value of the divine presence, or of public worship; yet to be excluded from its external rites was considered as a heavy punishment among the heathen, and excited horror. Beside this, he was an exile and vagabond, and gave name only to Nod, the land of vagabonds, as the name imports.

Such was the punishment of Cain, which, whatever it may appear to others, was to him insupportable: “My punishment is greater than I can bear!”—the language of despair and misery. The words, however, may certainly be rendered somewhat differently, as in the margin—“Mine iniquity is greater than that it may be forgiven;” which is no less the language of despair, but seems to manifest a deeper sense of sin than his history warrants. He felt more of his misery than his guilt.

After a while, indeed, Cain attempted to divert his melancholy, as many have since done, by schemes of business and aggrandizement. He built a city, or town, in the wilderness above mentioned, and called it after the name of his son Enoch; the first city mentioned in sacred history.

Ver. 18–26. The posterity of Cain.—Among these, we have the fullest account of Lamech, though not much to his honour; for it appears, 1st, That he was a bigamist, having two wives, and therefore first violating the original law of marriage. (Gen. ii.

Ver. 15. The Lord set a mark.—All the modern critics seem to prefer the other rendering; “the Lord gave him a sign,” or “token.” As he gave the rainbow for a token to Noah, Gen. ix. 12, so he wrought a miracle as a sign to Moses, Exod. iii. 11. See also Exod. x. i. 1 Sam. ii. 34. 2 Kings xix. 29. Isa. vii. 14. Jer. xiv. 29, 30. The word oth, “never signifies” (says Dr. Boothroyd) a mark, or brand.” Heb. Bible, Note on this verse.—“Vengeance seven-fold.” Much greater punishment than Cain's. See verse 24.

Ver. 20. Jabal.—Inventor or teacher: also see Dr. Edwards's Excellency of the Scriptures.

Ver. 21. Harp and Organ.—We must not here think of the complex instruments to which we give these names, but of the first simple stringed and wind instrument. The former, according to its shape, was either harp or lyre, being a few strings of wire or gut stretched and tuned to harmony: the latter, probably, resembling what we call the syrinx, or a kind of pipe or flute; or, some composed of several reeds joined together, like the Pandean pipes. Such were the first harp and organ. See Burney's Gen. Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 267.

Ver. 22. Tubal-cain.—From his name arose Vulcan, the god of smiths. He is said to have been an “instructor of every artificer in brass and iron.” This certainly implies considerable art in metallurgy to be able to fuse the of such as <sup>a</sup>dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

22 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.

23 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, Hear my voice; ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for <sup>a</sup>I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man <sup>a</sup>to my hurt.

24 If Cain shall be avenged seven-fold, truly Lamech seventy and seven-fold.

25 ¶ And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and called his name <sup>r</sup>Seth: For God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

26 And to Seth, to him also there was born a son; and he called his name <sup>s</sup>Enos: Then began men <sup>a</sup>to call upon the name of the LORD.

24.) 2. He was a manslayer, by his own account; and though he makes a merit of not being so bad as Cain, it is much if he was not arbitrary and quarrelsome. The expression is somewhat doubtful. If taken in the past tense, it implies manslaughter; and it is possible he was the first pugilist, the father of wrestlers, gladiators, and boxers, in which he seems to glory. Some, however, as in our margin, translate the words in the future tense, and take them as a boast of valour. Ainsworth conceives, that by marrying two wives, he involved himself in much trouble and contention, and perhaps here threatens what he would do if any person interfered. Either way, he was a most unamiable character; and the degeneracy of this family shows how slippery are the ways of sin, and how rapidly those who throw off the restraints of religion degenerate into the most disgraceful vices.

Among Cain's posterity there appear to have been several very ingenious artisans, the founders of various useful arts. 1. “Jabal,” the father of such as dwell in tents, and have cattle. “The father of graziers,” says Dr. John Edwards. It appears that, before this, Abel and others had tended flocks and herds, without roaming far from home; but either from the pasturage being exhausted, or perhaps his own roving disposition, he invented moveable tents, that he could carry with him to any distance, as the Arabs do to this day.

2. “Jubal” was “the father of all such as handle the harp and organ;” i. e. he was the first inventor of musical instruments; for, according to the ancient Rabbins, “Every craftsman, that either first inventeth, or perfecteth and teacheth an art, is called its father.”

3. “Tubal-Cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron,” the first probably who discovered the art of smelting metals, or of manufacturing them into instruments of agriculture, or warlike weapons. As the address of Lamech to his wives is supposed to be the most ancient specimen of poetry in the Bible, or in the world, we shall give it in the poetic form, from Bishop Lown.

“Adah and Zillah, hear my voice;
Ye wives of Lamech hearken to my speech:
For I have slain a man because of my wounding;
A young man because of my hurt.
If Cain shall be avenged seven times,
Certainly Lamech seventy and seven.”

Here the history of Cain's posterity is cut off, and we hear no more of him or them. They might be useful in the world as artisans, or distinguished as heroes or philosophers, but they are not numbered among God's chosen.

The close of this chapter informs us, that after the death of Abel, Eve had another son, whom she called Seth, which means a substitute, considering him as appointed by God to supply the place of Abel, who had been cut off childless. Seth also ores and work the metals. The margin, however, applies to it “whetting,” or sharpening these instruments: the probability is, that he was the first to manufacture edge tools, or weapons of metal, as ploughshares, knives, swords, &c.; and this, as M. Goguet observes, must have been a difficult task indeed, in instruments of native brass, or copper, the brass of those ages. The character of Venus, also probably arose from Naamah, whose name signifies beautiful, the sister of Tubal-cain.

Ver. 24. Seventy and seven-fold.—i. e. as his crime was far less than Cain's, the vengeance would be proportionally more. The Hebrews dwell much on the number seven.

Ver. 26. From the word rendered “began” being used, in some of its forms, for violation or profaneness, many of the ancient Rabbins, as Mauro-nides informs us, explain this text of profaning the name of Jehovah, by mixing his worship with idolatry; the origin of which they date from this period. But this seems a forced interpretation:—1. If idolatry originated before the flood, it is more likely to have originated in the family of Cain than of Seth, the head of the holy line. 2. This would not be calling upon Jehovah, but upon their idols; and it appears in fact, that very little attention was paid to the true God, where idolatry was established. See Parkhurst's Greek and Eng. Lex. in Epistates.

CHAPTER V.

1 The genealogy, age, and death of the patriarchs from Adam unto Noah. 24 The godliness and translation of Enoch.

THIS is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in <sup>a</sup> the likeness of God made he him:

2 Male <sup>b</sup> and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

3 And Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat <sup>c</sup> a son in his own <sup>c</sup> likeness, after his image; and called his name Seth:

4 And the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: and <sup>d</sup> he begat sons and daughters:

5 And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: <sup>e</sup> and he died.

had a son, whom he called Enos, (or Enosh.) that is, sickly, mortal; a name nearly comporting with that of Abel. Seth was probably a pious man, and Enos a preacher of righteousness, like Enoch and Noah afterwards. And in his days, we are told, men began to call on the name of the Lord, that is, JEHOVAH. To call upon the name of the Lord, is, in Scripture, to worship, or pray to him. (See Ps. l. 15. Jer. x. 25. Joel ii. 32. Acts ii. 21. ix. 14. Rom. i. 13. &c.) But we are not to suppose that worship was not offered before this, even publicly, for we see an instance of it in Abel: but the fact appears to be, that hitherto mankind forming one associated family, their worship was family worship, and confined to one place—before the presence of the Schechinah. But now mankind becoming more numerous and wider dispersed, worship was instituted more generally, especially among Seth's family; and different assemblies formed in the various settlements of mankind. And though we have no hope of Cain being a penitent, but fear that he grew worse and worse, as Josephus tells us; and that the greater part of his posterity sunk also into infidelity and profaneness; yet even among these (as in the worst times of Israel) we may hope that there was "a remnant according to the election of grace," who had not bowed their knees to his Baal. (Rom. xi. 4, 5.) It is also probable, that the general defection of Cain's posterity had alarmed the other families of mankind, (for Adam had many children,) and excited them to this measure, as a proper mean of stemming the torrent of infidelity.

Parkhurst judiciously remarks, that the text refers particularly to worshipping God by his name JEHOVAH, to distinguish the object of their adoration from the false god's worshipped by the race of Cain. So, he remarks, in after times, when idolatry prevailed, Abraham, Isaac, and Elijah, particularly distinguished themselves, by calling on this name. (Gen. xii. 8. xiii. 4. xxi. 33. xxvi. 25. 1 Kings xviii. 24.)

Dr. Shuckford, indeed, gives a different sense to the words, (which is followed by others) as implying that men now "began to call themselves by the name of Jehovah;" and he instances "the sons of God," in the next chapter. But we find no instance of the kind in Scripture; neither is it consistent with the character of true piety to assume such titles. The disciples of Christ, "were called Christians first at Antioch" (Acts xi. 26.) but they did not so name themselves; nor would the assumption of this name, "sons of God," (Elohim) be calling themselves by the name of JEHOVAH, which is, indeed, the incommunicable name.

President Edwards remarks, "If it was now first that men were stirred up to meet together in assemblies, to assist one another in seeking God, so as they had never done before, it argues something extraordinary as the cause, and could be from nothing but the uncommon influences of God's Spirit. We may observe, (says he,) that a remarkable outpouring of God's Spirit always produces a great increase of prayer." (Hist. of Redemp.)

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—20. The book of the generations of Adam.—The creation of Adam and the birth of Seth, are here again introduced, for the purpose of connecting their names with the holy line of the Patriarchal Church. That Adam should have a son "in his own likeness" after the fall, rather than in the likeness of God, in which he was created, is perfectly natural; but that this should be said of Seth, rather than of Cain, seems somewhat mysterious. Perhaps, as Seth is here placed at the head of the holy line, it may be, as Scott suggests, lest we should attribute their superior character rather to nature than to grace—to their generation from Adam, rather than their regeneration by the Spirit of God.

The longevity of the first patriarchs has been objected to as incredible; but as man was made for immortality, when through sin he became mortal, there are wise reasons to be assigned for the gradual abridgment of human life. It allowed for the more rapid increase of population—for improvement in civilization—but especially the longevity of man, before the invention of letters and the use of writing, must have been of vast importance in preserving the purity of tradition. Adam might converse with Methuselah, and Methuselah with Shem: thus the history of the world, for the first 2000 years, was preserved in three hands only.

A learned author says, "From this catalogue we may observe, that the custom in those times was, to give their children names according to the occurrences of life, or the expectations of their parents. Thus Seth, being a good man, was grieved to see the great degeneracy in other parts, though he endeavoured to preserve his own family from the contagion, and therefore called his son Enos, which signifies sorrowful. Enos, perceiving the posterity of Cain to grow every day worse and worse, was concerned for their iniquity, and began to dread the consequences of it, and therefore called his son Cainan, which denotes lamentation. Though Cainan had his name from the wickedness of Cain's family, yet he himself was resolved to maintain the true worship of God in his own; and therefore called his son Mahalaleel, that is, a praiser and worshipper of God. In the days of Mahalaleel, (as tradition tells us,) a defection happened among the sons of Seth, who went down from the mountains where they inhabited, and joined themselves to the daughters of Cain, and therefore he called his son's name Jared, which signifies descending. Jared, to guard against the general corruption, devoted himself and his descendants more zealously to the service of God, and accordingly called his son Enoch, which means a dedication. Enoch, by the Spirit of prophecy, foreseeing the destruction which would come upon the earth immediately after the death of his son, called his name Methuselah, which imports as much; for Methui signifies death, and Selah, the sending forth of water, &c. &c. Much of this ingenious trifling may be found among commentators, both ancient and modern, and by many it is greatly admired. Much of it, however, is founded on conjecture; and though Jared might thus dedicate to God his son Enoch, from what motive could Cain give the same name to his son? We only know the motives of a few individuals, and they were often deceived in their anticipations, as in the case of Eve, and her first born. The following anecdote seems to afford a much more useful improvement of this chapter, and is related by Hervey :—

CHAP. V. Ver. 3. [Hundred : the chronology, especially in the ages of some of the ante and post-diluvian patriarchs, is very different in the Hebrew text, the Samaritan, the Septuagint, and Josephus. The Septuagint adds 100 years to each of the Patriarchs Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, and Enoch, before the birth of their sons; while they take twenty from the age of Methuselah, and add six to that of Lamech. Thus the space from the creation to the deluge is made 2242 years, according to the Vatican copy, but 2262 according to the Alexandrine; and the sum total according to Josephus is 2265; according to the Samaritan 1307, and the Hebrew Text, 1636. The sum total from the Deluge to the 70th year of Terah, according to these authorities, is, Heb. 292; Sam. 942; Sept. Vat. 1172; Alex. 1072, and Josephus, 1002.]—Bagster. To examine them minutely would be impracticable within the compass of this work, and to solve them satisfactorily at present seems impossible. See Dr. A. Clarke on this chapter.

Ver. 6—20. The above ingenious remarks are quoted by Stackhouse from Bedford's Chronology. Much more of the same sort may be found in the Bibliotheca Biblica, from the ancient fathers, and in modern fathers whom we shall not name.

"A certain libertine of abandoned character, happened accidentally to stroll into a church, where he heard the 5th chapter of Genesis read, importing that so long lived such and such persons, and yet the conclusion was, 'they died.' 'Seth lived 912 years, and he died; Enos lived 905 years, and he died; Methuselah 969, and he died.' The frequent repetition of the words 'he died,' notwithstanding the great length of years they had lived, struck him so deeply with the thought of death and eternity, that, through divine grace, he became a most exemplary Christian." If any person of like character with the above should read this note, may he make the same serious and profitable reflection.

Ver. 21—32. Enoch's character and translation.—Enoch is the second character enrolled in the illustrious catalogue of believers, in the 11th chap. of Hebrews. The expression here used, "Enoch walked with God," is there quoted as an evidence that he was a believer in divine revelation; not only that God is, but also "that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Consequently, he believed in a future state of reward and punishment; for, we are told, "Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, 'Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all.'" (Jude, ver. 14.) As to the expression, "Walked with God," it implies communion with him in a state of progressive holiness. Believers are the friends of God. "These (says Bishop Horne) are they who walk with their God, and take sweet counsel with him, as a man does with his friend, in the way of pious dispositions and holy duties, which are so many steps and stages in the road to heaven. And while God speaks to the soul by his word, and she to him by prayer and thanksgiving; while he says, 'Seek ye my face'; and she answers, 'Thy face, Lord, will I seek'; the conversation is kept up, (and) the fatigue of the journey is not perceived. . . . With these comforts and encouragements, the soul walks on in the way of God's commandments, pressing forward in the course of a holy obedience from one degree of perfection to another—from strength to strength; till, having passed the valley of death, and ascended the holy hill, she appears before the God of gods in the heavenly Zion." Whoever walks with God in this manner, will have the testimony given to Enoch, that he pleased him.—(Horne's Life of Enoch.)

Ver. 24. (He was not: the same expression occurs, ch. xxxvii. 30. xlii. 36. Jer. xxxi. 15. Mat. ii. 18. So Livy says, (lib. 1. c. 16.) Romulus was no longer on the earth.)—Bagster.

Ver. 25. The precise number of ten generations from Adam to Noah, corresponds with the traditions of the Chinese, Persians, Egyptians, and other ancient nations. (See Rev. S. Burder's Bible.) As does also their longevity: and the Brahmins have a tradition, that human life once lasted for a thousand years. Hestod says of the Golden Age—

"They lived like gods, with even, tranquil soul,
From toil exempt, and sorrow. Even age
Was free from suffering."

Even during the Silver Age, the same poet makes a boy remain a hundred years with his mother. Burder's Orient. Some ridiculous attempts have been made to reduce these years to months; according to which hypothesis, Seth had children under nine years of age, and Enos at seven and a half!—Surely this does not mend the matter!

CHAP. VI. Ver. 2. Sons of God.—Besides the 82nd Psalm, magistrates or rulers are generally supposed to be called gods, Exod. xxi. 6. xlii. 8, 28. 1 Sam. ii. 25. Ps. cxxxviii. 1, &c. "This view of the passage is not new," (says Taylor.) Onkelos and the Targums read, "the sons of the great; the

But Enoch, as a type of Christ, had a peculiar privilege—he was exempt from death, and the only person thus exempt, except Elijah. "He was not," says Moses; that is, "not found" upon earth, according to the Apostle above quoted, for "God took him," and "translated him" to the skies, without seeing death; perhaps publicly, that he might give assurance to that infidel generation of "another and a better world."

"Him, the Most High,
Wrapt in a balmy cloud, with winged steeds,
—Received to walk with God,
High in salvation and the climes of bliss, Exempt from Death."—Milton.

Of the other characters here mentioned we have little to remark. The Lamech here mentioned, Noah's father, was a very different person from the bigamist recorded in the preceding chapter, and seems to have been an industrious farmer; and he called his son Noah, "rest, or comfort" as it may be indifferently translated, saying, "This same shall comfort us, (or give us rest,) concerning our work and the toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed."

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—7. The degeneracy of mankind.—It is not at all strange, that when nations increase in population, wealth, and luxury, they should increase also in licentiousness and crime. A notion was entertained by some of the Jewish Rabbins and Christian fathers, that "the sons of God" here spoken of were angels, who, having the power of assuming the human form, committed lewdness with the women of that age, and produced a race of human monsters; this, however, is now considered merely as a poetic fiction. Others, by "the sons of God," understand the race of Seth; but why these, rather than the sons of Cain, should produce giants, is utterly inexplicable: we are, therefore, driven to seek another meaning. Princes, judges, and chiefs, are, in some instances, dignified with the name of Elohim, thus rendered plurally "gods." That this is the case in the 82d Psalm, seems evident. "God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods." That this refers to earthly princes, is the general sense of commentators, and admitted by Bishop Horne himself. They are then accused with unjust judgment; and the Supreme is represented (poetically) as if about to retract his words. "I have said, ye are gods, and all of you, children of the Most High: but ye Samaritan, the sons of the Sultans; Arabic, sons of the Nobles." (Expos. Index to Gen.) (Dr. Wall supposes the first verses of this chapter should be thus paraphrased: "When men began to multiply on the earth, the chief men took wives of all the handsome poor women they chose. There were tyrants in the earth in those days; and also after the ante-diluvian days, the powerful men had unlawful connexion with the inferior women; and the children which sprang from this illicit commerce were the renowned heroes of antiquity, of whom the heathen made their gods.")—Bagster. This view is adopted by Bishop Wilson, Dr. Boothroyd, and others.

Ver. 3. My spirit shall not always strive.—The word certainly means to plead, as in a court of justice; but it also means to judge, to sit in judgment. (Gen. xlix. 16.) See Poet's Synagoga; Dr. Gill's Case of God. It has been commonly supposed that the ark was 120 years in building; but this is not said; only that the world had so long warning to repent. Noah no doubt preached repentance all the while he was preparing his materials, which must be a work of many years, before he actually began to build.

Ver. 4. Giants.—Hebrew Nephilim, fellers; that is, men that cut down and destroy all around them, as a feller does trees. The Greek word gigantes, from which we borrow "giants," means earth-born; that is, the first race of mankind, supposed to have sprung up from the earth like trees. Dr. Clarke and Hurdle. Danet's Dict. in Gigantes.

thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them.

8 But Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD.

9 ¶ These are the generations of Noah: Noah was a just man, and <sup>k</sup>perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God.

10 And Noah begat three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

11 The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence.

12 And God looked upon the earth, and behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.

13 And God said unto Noah, <sup>l</sup>The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them: and behold, I will destroy them <sup>m</sup>with the earth.

14 ¶ Make thee an ark of gopher-wood: rooms <sup>n</sup>shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch.

15 And this is the fashion which thou shalt shall die like men, (or like Adam) and fall like one of the princes." Now, our Lord, in quoting this passage, says, "He called them gods, to whom the word of God came;" that is, who had an appointment from him as princes or judges. (John x. 35.) Such we take to be these "sons of God, children of the Most High," who became so tyrannical, (like many of their successors in all ages) as to seize upon all the finest women they could find, for their seraglio; and from these sprang a race of "giants," that is, "mighty men, which were of old, men of renown." The Hebrew word here used for giants, means warriors, or rather destroyers, men of violence and blood, who fall upon the weak and helpless, as in the case of the females just mentioned. It is applied also to the Sabeans, who fell upon Job's cattle; and to the soldiers of Joshua, who fell upon the Canaanites. (Job i. 15. Josh. xi. 7.) It is also not at all improbable, that many of these might be men of extraordinary strength and stature, which enabled them the more effectually to oppress others. Such were the heroes of antiquity, who boasted themselves to be "sons of the gods;" of Jupiter and Mars, as the Greeks pretended; or of the sun and moon, like the American Indians. These "giants," or heroes, are partly to be referred to the generations before the flood, and partly "also after that" epoch, to men of the same character and conduct.

"On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds."

Now, the great JEHOVAH is represented, in condescension to our weakness, as having his spirit stirred up within him by the violence and wickedness of men; and he said, "My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh." "I will not be always raising up prophets, and sending them to negotiate with rebels, beseeching them to be at peace with me," or, as we conceive the words might be rendered, "My Spirit shall not always sit in judgment upon man"—listening, as it were, alternately to the pleadings of pity and the cries of blood; no, he is but flesh! "yet his days (of trial) shall be one hundred and twenty years;" that is, during the time that Noah preached repentance to the transgressors, and prepared an ark for the salvation of his house.

When God speaks of human wickedness, he traces it to its source—to the heart of man; and we are here told, that, "every imagination of the thoughts of his heart is only evil, and that continually;" and a marginal note of our translators adds, that the Hebrew word refers, not to the imagination only, but also to his purposes and desires." And here follows an expression, one of the strongest and the strangest in the Bible, "It repented the Lord that he had made man, and it grieved him at his heart." Now, as it is sufficiently obvious, and often asserted in the 17 And behold, I, even I, <sup>o</sup>do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die.

18 But with thee will I establish my covenant: and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee.

Scriptures, that "God is of one mind, and none can turn him;" and that he is not subject, in his infinitely exalted nature, to be agitated by passions of joy or grief, this language can be meant only to express his infinite abhorrence of man's sin, and his determination to put an end to his rebellion. (Num. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29. Job xxiii. 13. James i. 17.) "The (above) words," says Fuller, "express with an energy and impressiveness, which it is probable nothing purely literal could have conveyed, the exceeding sinfulness and provoking nature of sin." The change is not in God's will, but in his dispensations: just as it is with regard to the heavenly bodies—our globe moves, and they seem to move around us.

Then follows the determination of the Most High to destroy all the inhabitants of the earth, both man and beast; for, as the animal creation was evidently made for the use of man, they became involved in the same destruction; save only Noah and his family, and the beasts permitted to accompany him in the ark.

Ver. 8—13. The acceptance of Noah, who is ordered to prepare the ark.—The character of Noah is so similar to that of Enoch, that we need not enlarge on it. By faith Enoch pleased God, and Noah found acceptance with him. Both walked with God, preached to their fellow men, and predicted the awful judgment of God on sinners. The principal point of distinction in Noah's character, is, that he was a "just man, and perfect (or upright) in his generation;" which marks the singular virtue of his character, "in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation."

"Among the faithless, faithful only he."

Persevering in his integrity, when all around him was infidelity and idolatry, intemperance and debauchery, riot, violence, and confusion; not saving himself by flight, but fighting the good fight, and conquering; not going out of the world, but living uncorrupt in it; "a lily among thorns," diffusing its sweets in the wilderness; a light burning and shining in the blackness of darkness. Therefore was he the favourite of heaven, and the delight of the Most High, who was pleased to constitute him the representative deliverer and restorer of the human race."—Bishop Horne.

Noah was also, as we have said, actuated by the same principle of faith as Enoch. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." (Heb. xi. 7.) To this act of faith our attention must now be directed.

Ver. 14—22. Directions for making the ark.—"The word here rendered an ark, is only used for Noah's ark, and that ark it has indeed been much disputed; but Bishop Wilkins has reduced the number of species of animals, which at first view may seem almost infinite, within very moderate bounds. He reckons that they do not amount to 109 of quadrupeds, and 200 birds; and of these must be excepted such as live in the water, such as proceed from a mixture of different species, and such as change their colour, size, and shape, by changing their climate, and thence, in different countries, seem to be of a different species, when they are not. He afterwards enters into a particular detail of the animals, of the quantity of food necessary for them, and of the capacity and proportions of the ark; and concludes there was room enough, and to spare; whereupon he observes, that had the most skillful mathematicians and philosophers been set to consult what proportions a vessel designed for such an use, should have, in the several parts of it, they could not have pitched on any more suitable to the purpose, than those mentioned by Moses.

Ver. 16. A window.—It seems very doubtful what is here meant by Tsohar, since it is not the same word used chap. viii. 6. though it may mean the same thing; in which case the derivation of the word would lead us to the idea of a small sky-light in the roof; which, however, must have been well protected, to preserve it from the storm. This agrees with the fact of opening or uncovering it, to send forth the raven and the dove, in the latter chapter. As this must be of little use while torrents were pouring from on high, some have understood this of an artificial light; and it is certain that a kindred word is used for oil, (Deut. vii. 13.) but never, we believe, for a lamp. Among his provisions it is not likely Noah should omit oil.

Ver. 13. With the earth.—Margin, from, &c.

Ver. 14. Pitch.—Hebrew, Kophar; by which, it is generally agreed, is meant the asphaltum, or native bitumen. "The asphaltum," says Dr. Shaw, "is of a shining black colour, and so like Stockholm pitch, that were it not for the rank smell of that pitch, and the superior hardness of the bitumen, there would be no distinguishing them." Boerhaave's Chem.—"Rooms." Margin, "nests;" small compartments.

Ver. 15. The dimensions of the ark appear to have been very nearly the length of St. Paul's church, London, (500 feet), but its breadth was one fifth less than that of the nave, or choir, which is 100 feet wide, or nearly three times as long as the City Hall, New York, but not quite so broad: whose dimensions are 216 feet long and 105 feet broad. This may give an idea of the immense magnitude of this vessel; though very narrow in proportion to its length. Ships have been tried upon this plan, and though not adapted for sailing, are supposed less liable to founder.

On the size of this ark, Dr. Clarke says, "Greaves, who travelled into Greece, Palestine, and Egypt, in order to ascertain the weights, moneys, and times as long as the City Hall, New York, and comparing them with the accounts which Herodotus, Strabo, and others, give of their size, found the length of a cubit nearly 22 inches." This would make it 47 feet longer than St. Paul's, and nearly as wide. . . . This vessel Dr. Arbutnot computes to have been 81,662 tons in burden. This equals the tonnage of about 81 first-rate ships of war. It was 547 feet long; 91 feet broad, and 54 feet high; making 2,730,782 solid feet.

As to the capacity of the ark, to hold the various creatures to be preserved, after their kind, of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep them alive.

21 And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee, and for them.

22 Thus did Noah; <sup>a</sup> according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

5 And Noah did according unto all that the LORD commanded him.

6 And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

11 ¶ In the six hundredth year of Noah's life of bulrushes in which the child Moses was preserved. It seems to have been built in some respects like the bulk of a ship, except that it was flat-bottomed, square at each end, and roofed as a house, so that it terminated at the top in the breadth of a cubit. It is not agreed what kind of timber is meant by gopher wood; perhaps that of the cypress tree. The ark was made with three decks, and divided into many little cabins; it was pitched within and without, to keep it tight and sweet, and lighted from the upper part, probably by one window, reaching from end to end. Learned men have shown, that these dimensions were far more than were necessary to contain all the animals to be preserved, and sufficient provision for them. But it must at first sight be evident, that so great a vessel, thus constructed, and with so few persons on board, was utterly unsuitable to weather out the deluge, except as it was under the immediate guidance and protection of the Almighty.—(Rev. T. Scott.)

In all the divine judgments upon earth, mercy is intermixed. Though the world shall be destroyed, "a remnant shall be saved," and God's covenant renewed with them in the person of Noah, the head of the new world. "In covenants which bestow a blessing on many, and they unworthy, it is God's ordinary method to bestow it in reward, or for the sake of one who was dear to him," as in the instances of Noah, Abraham, and David. Thus, "God, even at this early period, was preparing the way for the redemption of his Son, by rendering the great principle on which it should proceed familiar to mankind. A very small acquaintance with the Scriptures will enable us to perceive the charming analogy between the language used in the covenants with Noah, Abraham, David, &c. and that which respects the Messiah. "I will give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages. I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles," &c.—A. Fuller.

"Thus did Noah, according to all that God had commanded him." Noah was "a preacher of righteousness." Not content to save himself from that untoward generation, he endeavoured to save others also. . . . Besides the sermons delivered from time to time by Noah, to those around him, he preached one of a very extraordinary nature, to all the inhabitants of the earth, for such we may properly call the ark built by him, the report of which, considering the number of years it was in building, went forth doubtless into all lands, and was every where the subject of conversation, long before the flood came: "By faith Noah, (says the Apostle,) being warned of God of things not seen as yet, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." (Heb. xi. 7.) The assertion in this passage, that Noah, by building an ark, condemned the world, implies, that the world were acquainted with the transaction, which being a public and notorious testimony of his faith, will, at the last day, arise up in judgment against their infidelity, and prevent their putting in a plea of ignorance."—Bishop Horne.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 2. By sevens.—Hebrew, "seven, seven;" that is, of each sex: though some think there might be three of each sex, and an extra male for sacrifice on coming from the ark. It is not likely that any animal food was eaten in the ark, and from the confined situation in which they were, without exercise, and probably with no more air than was necessary to preserve life, it is not likely that any of the animals were ravenous. It has even been supposed that their appetites might be restrained, according to the prophetic language of Isaiah in reference to the Millennium. Isa. xi. 4, &c. lxx. 25.

Ver. 10. After seven days.—Margin, "on the seventh day." Compare ver. 6. with ver. 11. and chap. ii. 2. and note.

Ver. 11. In the second month, (Marchesvan, and on) the seventeenth day, . . . all the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows (margin, flood-gates) of heaven were opened.—On looking into chap. i. 7, 10. with the remarks we have subjoined, it will be found that there were two grand reservoirs of water, which are here opened; the one in heaven, that is, the atmosphere, the "flood-gates" of which were now opened; and the other under the atmosphere, that is, in the seas, and in the bowels of the earth, which are probably built of mighty arches from the centre, filled with wa-

"Methinks I see (says Bishop Hall) the sons of Lamech coming to Noah, and asking him what he means by that strange work? whether he meant to sail upon the dry land? To whom he reports God's purpose and his; they go away laughing at his idleness, and tell one another in sport, that too much holiness hath made him mad; yet cannot they all ridicule Noah out of his faith; he preaches, he builds, and finishes. Doubtless more hands went to this work than his. Many a one wrought upon the ark, which yet was not saved in the ark. Our outward works cannot save us, without faith: we may help to save others, and perish ourselves."

Before we close this chapter, we may remark, that a good man is not only a blessing to his family and his kind; but to the animal world also, who often suffer extremely from the violence and cruelty of wicked men. Not the human race only, but the animal race also, are indebted for their preservation to this covenant with Noah.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—10. Noah enters the ark.—Noah was long preaching and preparing for the event, but the warning being now expired, he is summoned into the ark, with his family, that is, with the "few—the eight souls," who so far believed Noah's prophecy, as to be willing to share with him in his salvation. But it has been said, What could induce the beasts to enter the ark, and lie down quietly in the dens and folds he had provided for them? Certain it is, that animals seek shelter in a storm before man has any apprehensions of it. But this is not our answer. He who in the first instance directed the animals to Adam to be named, could surely now direct them to Noah, for refuge and for shelter. The animals were all to come in pairs, as we find by the preceding chapter; but from this we learn farther, that the clean animals, namely, those used for food and sacrifice, were to come in sevens, that is, seven pairs; a strong indication that the distinction of clean and unclean beasts, and the use of the former for food and sacrifice, was known long before the Mosaic economy; though perhaps the eating of flesh was confined at first to a portion of the sacrificed animals.

It is observable, that though this destruction had been long announced, it came on suddenly at last. Noah, with all his family, and all the animals, were but seven days embarking; which seems to intimate the division of time into weeks, and the observation of a Sabbath; on which day, it should seem, and but the day after they were all safely housed, the flood came down; "the flood-gates of heaven were opened, and the fountains of the deep broken up." But first, we are told, "The Lord shut him in;" that is, Noah and his charge. How this was done we know not; but the consequence was, as in another awful instance, "a great gulf was fixed" between them and the world. Those who now would gladly enter could not, and those also who would have been glad to have received them could not, for "the door was shut." (Matt. xxv. 10.)

and with air, which when rarefied by heat, produces earthquakes and volcanoes.

Some infidel philosophers have affected great difficulty to procure sufficient water to surmount the mountains of the earth to the height of 15 cubits, or near 27 feet: but, 1. Though we can measure our mountains, we cannot take the gage of the antediluvian ones, which might now receive a great accession by the driving of the winds while the waters were subsiding; and we know, in fact, that prodigious quantities of petrifications and alluvial deposits were lodged in them. Mount Ararat was probably one of their highest mountains, though by no means one of the highest of the present globe. 2. Suppose they were as high as Chimborazo, (20,000 feet, or nearly four miles perpendicular) still there is a chemical process carried on in nature, whereby, if the Almighty so pleased (without a new creation) the gases of the atmosphere might be converted into water. There can be no need, therefore, to phre that might be converted into water. There can be no need, therefore, to phre that might be converted into water. There can be no need, therefore, to phre that might be converted into water.

Others have contended against the universality of the deluge, when almost every region of the earth presents proofs that it was there. See Dick's Christian Philosopher.

in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains<sup>f</sup> of the great deep broken up, and the <sup>g</sup> windows of heaven were opened.

12 And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

13 In the self-same day entered Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, <sup>h</sup> into the ark;

14 They, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every <sup>i</sup> sort.

15 And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein <sup>j</sup> is the breath of life.

16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and the Lord shut him <sup>k</sup> in.

17 And the flood was forty days upon the earth: and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lift up above the earth.

18 And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth: and the ark went upon the face of the waters.

19 And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; <sup>l</sup> and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered.

20 Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail: and the mountains <sup>m</sup> were covered.

21 And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every <sup>n</sup> man:

of the earth; and, "by opening the windows of heaven," may be understood the precipitating of all the aqueous vapours which were suspended in the atmosphere.]—Bagster. "The progress of the deluge (says Dr. Hurd) is here described in a climax truly awful. The ark is first represented to us as just lifted from the ground. We then see it moving along upon an immense body of waters, among the ruins of a world gradually disappearing; and, last of all, behold it floating along upon the flood, the very mountains themselves having disappeared under the waves of a universal ocean."

But while this scene must, indeed, have been awfully sublime, a still more terrific scene presents itself, in the floating carcasses of a drowning world: the inhabitants of the ark, however, were doubtless saved the horror of this sight, by the only window (if we conjecture right) being in the roof, and shaded by it; and as to the cries of the sufferers, the howling of the tempest and the thunder of the storm effectually prevented them from being heard within the ark. Our Lord has told us, concerning the inhabitants of the old world, till the day that Noah entered into the ark, "they did eat, they drank, they married wives, and they were given in marriage;" neither his preaching, nor his preparation, interrupted their business or their pleasures; and "thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." (Matt. xxv. 26—30.)

Of the number of inhabitants then upon the earth, we can judge only by calculating the progress of population, and in this there is more of conjecture than of certainty. Some have calculated them at a thousand millions; but taking them only at a quarter, or even a tenth of this estimation, it presents a most appalling scene for contemplation, to be exceeded only by the more tremendous judgment of a burning world, at the last day—

Ver. 19. Hills.—[The truth of this important fact is shown by evidence subsisting to the present day. The highest eminences of the earth, the Alps, the Apennines, Pyrenees, Libanus, Atlas, and Ararat; every mountain of every region under heaven, where search has been made, all conspire in one uniform, universal proof, that they all had the sea spread over their highest summits; being found to contain shells, skeletons of fish, and sea-monsters of every kind.]—Bagster. But here arises an objection of considerable weight with some geologists, who say that from the slow formation of certain rocks and soils upon those rocks, the world must have existed many thousand years. To this there are two methods of reply. 1. Moses, as Dr. Chalmers remarks, (see above, on Gen. i. 1.) does not affix any date to the creation of the chaos, out of which our globe was formed. 2. Might not God, if he pleased, have formed the earth in its present state? Might it not as well be argued that the creation of Adam took 20 years at least, for his bones to acquire the proper solidity, as that it must take so many centuries to form certain rocks?—"He spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast."

Ver. 23. [The most incontestable evidence has been afforded of the universality of this fact: the moose-deer, a native of America, has been found buried in Ireland; elephants, natives of Asia and Africa, in the midst of England; crocodiles, natives of the Nile, in the heart of Germany; and seal-fish, never known in any but the American seas, with the entire skeletons of whales, in the most inland counties of England.]—Bagster

1 The waters assuage. 7 The raven and the dove. 18 Noah goeth forth of the ark. 20 He buildeth an altar, and offereth sacrifice. 21 God promiseth to curse the earth, no more.

AND God <sup>a</sup> remembered Noah, and every living thing, and all the <sup>b</sup> cattle that was with him in the ark: and God made a wind <sup>c</sup> to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged;

2 The fountains <sup>d</sup> also of the deep, and the windows <sup>e</sup> of heaven were stopped, and the rain from heaven was restrained;

3 And the waters returned from off the <sup>f</sup> earth continually: and after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.

4 ¶ And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of <sup>g</sup> Ararat.

5 And the waters <sup>h</sup> decreased continually until the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

6 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened <sup>i</sup> the window of the ark which he had made:

7 And he sent forth a raven, which went the day of judgment. By the lowest estimate EIGHTY MILLIONS OF MEN perished in the waters. "Who knows the power of thine anger?" Oh my soul, fear thou the Lord with filial fear; in this is the beginning of wisdom—the path of pleasantness, and the salvation of the soul.

Forty days and nights did the rain continue:

"The thickened sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down rushed the rain
Impetuous, and continued till the earth
No more was seen."—Milton.

And though the rain then ceased, "the waters prevailed upon the earth for one hundred and fifty days," or five months, till "all in whose nostrils was the breath of life died; . . . and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." Here we may be allowed to drop a tear over a perishing world, especially as we hear of their "spirits still in prison;" (1 Pet. iii. 19.) but let us not unite with those who revile the justice of that God, whose "long-suffering waited" 120 years, while a prophet was sent to warn them of their danger. O happy they, who, by the mercy of God, were secured within the ark with Noah, and rode above the storm! "The like figure whereunto baptism doth now save us, (not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him." (1 Pet. iii. 21, 22.)

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—12. The waters assuaged.—"God remembered Noah." The Lord never forgets his people in their affliction; and when he remembers them, he remembers those that belong to them. Innumerable are the blessings young persons receive, through their connexion with serious families;

Ver. 24. One hundred and fifty days.—[The breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, and the raining forty days and nights, had raised the waters fifteen cubits, or twenty-seven feet, above the highest mountain; after which forty days, it appears to have continued at this height for one hundred and fifty days more.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. ver. 1. God made a wind.—Dr. Clarke mentions a friend, who had been bathing in the Tigris, coming out of it in his bathing dress when one of those winds called Samiel passed over the river, and he found himself and his dress dried instantaneously.

Ver. 4. [Ararat is generally understood to be Armenia, as it is rendered elsewhere, in which there is a great chain of mountains, like the Alps or Pyrenees, upon the highest part of which, called by some "The Finger Mountain," the ark is supposed to have rested.]—Bagster. Mount Ararat has two heads, or peaks, always covered with snow, on the larger and higher of which, tradition reports that Noah's ark rested. But a recent and respectable traveller (Sir R. K. Porter) says, "These inaccessible summits have never been trodden by the foot of man since the days of Noah, if even then; for my idea is, that the ark rested in the space between these heads, and not on the top of either." Travels in Persia. It was, indeed, formerly reported, that some remains of the ark were still to be seen on the higher and larger summit; but this is expressly contradicted by Tournefort, a celebrated French traveller. See Burder's Oriental Literature, and Dr. Adam Clarke's Bible.

forth to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

8 Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground;

9 But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot, and she returned unto him into the ark, for the waters were on the face of the whole earth: then he put forth his hand, and took her, and pulled her in unto him into the ark.

10 And he stayed yet other seven days, and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark;

11 And the dove came in to him in the evening; and, lo, in her mouth was an olive-leaf plucked off: so Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth.

12 And he stayed yet other seven days, and sent forth the dove; which returned not again unto him any more.

13 ¶ And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth: and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and behold, the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the second month, on the seven and even the domestic animals, though unconscious of it, often escape a world of sufferings by living with them, for "a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast: but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." (Prov. xii. 10.)

The means used to restore the earth to its former state, as a human habitation, were the following:—1. The flood-gates of heaven and the fountains of the deep were stopped, which prevented any farther confluence of waters; and 2dly, a wind of a drying nature (perhaps the Samiel) passed over the earth, which produced an extraordinary degree of evaporation, by which means much of the water was carried up into the atmosphere, while, at the same time, 3dly, the waters below retired in the nature of a tide, ("going and returning," as the margin reads,) till they returned to those ancient caverns on which the earth is built. (Ps. xiv. 2.) Thus the waters gradually decreased, till the ark rested on some part of the mountains of Ararat, in Persian Armenia. It is generally supposed, upon the summit of the highest of them; but more probably lower down, for the convenience of Noah's family, and of the animals, some of whom would find it difficult to descend into the plain, from an eminence so great.

The Diary of this event, which occupied the year (A. M.) 1656, runs as follows:—On the 10th of the second month, answering to the latter part of our October, Noah entered the ark; and seven days afterwards (first week of November) the flood began, and continuing 40 days of incessant rain, ceased about the middle of our December. For 150 days (or five months) the flood remained permanent, after which it gradually abated; and on the 17th of the seventh month, (April the 2d) the ark rested on Mount Ararat. The waters continued retreating; and on the 1st of the 10th month, Tammuz, (middle of our June,) the tops of the mountains were discovered; and 40 days afterwards (latter end of July) Noah opened his window, and sent forth a raven, which went to and fro, (or as the Hebrew expresses it, "Going forth and returning," not into, but upon, the ark) till the earth was dry. In the mean time, he sent forth a dove every week, who, the second time, brought a leaf or sprig of olive, and the third time returned no more. On the first day of the following year, (September 16) Noah uncovered the ark, and found the earth tolerably dry; and on the 27th of the month following (about the middle of November) it was quite Ver. 8. Waters abated.—The Hebrew word here used is different from that in ver. 7, and means to dry by evaporation; and is therefore applied to corn dried or parched by fire, as in Levit. ii. 14. See also Jer. xix. 22. Dr. Hurd therefore renders it, "to see if the waters were exhale (i. e. by evaporation) from off the face of the ground." As to the amount of evaporation, even in this country, Bp. Watson found, by several curious experiments, that 1600 gallons of water were exhale from one acre of land within 12 hours of a hot summer's day, (June, 1779) when there had been no rain for more than a month.—Watson's Chemical Essays.

Ver. 11. Olive leaf.—Rather branch, as it is rendered, Neh. viii. 15. Ainsworth. For the remarks relative to the produce of the seasons, see the authorities in Taylor's Frag. to Calmet, and Horne's Intro. to the Serp. From this olive branch, probably, the olive became, in all ages, the emblem of peace and reconciliation.

Ver. 13. The above dates may not be perfectly correct, because there were some variations in the Jewish months, with which we are not perfectly acquainted. Generally they begin in the middle of our months, which answer each to part of two Jewish months, and they are reckoned according to the Civil year, the Ecclesiastical not being settled till the time of Moses. [For the names and arrangement of the months, see the Introduction.] The Ecclesiastical year contained the same months, but began with Nisan, the seventh month of the Civil year.

Ver. 14. In the second month, on the seven and twentieth day.—[From this, it appears, that Noah was in the ark a complete Solar year, or 365 days; for he entered the ark the seventeenth day of the second month, in the 600th year and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, saying,

16 Go forth of the ark, thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee.

17 Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that they may breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.

18 And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:

19 Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their kinds, went forth out of the ark.

20 ¶ And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar.

21 And the Lord smelled a sweet savour; and the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth: neither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done.

dry, and Noah and his family began to leave the ark. Noah was naturally anxious to do this, and hence the several experiments he made, to ascertain whether the earth was prepared for him; but as he went into the ark by God's special order, so he must have his permission before he left it. When Providence fixes us in any situation of life, we should be cautious not to leave it without good reason. "Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather." (1 Cor. vii. 21.)

"The repeated mention of 'seven days,' seems to imply, that, from the beginning, time had been divided into weeks; which can no otherwise be accounted for, that I know of, (says Fuller,) than by admitting that, from the beginning, those who feared God remembered the sabbath day to keep it holy."

If, as we have supposed, the earth was created at the autumnal equinox, it was probably restored at the same period, and in a similar state of verdure and fruitfulness; for it was about the beginning of September that the dove brought home an olive branch, and possibly with fruit, for this was the season for olives, figs, and grapes.

That the earth was restored in a state of fertility, the herbs bearing seed and the trees fruit, as at first, seems probable, for several reasons. 1. Noah and his family, human and animal, had now probably nearly expended their provisions; and if not, they would be useless to the wild animals and birds, now set at large from the ark. 2. Noah appears not to have received orders to preserve seeds of any kind; and if he had, it would be eight or nine months before that seed could produce a harvest; and, 3dly, The flood itself probably gave an additional fertility to the earth, as the overflowing of the Nile is well known to have given to Egypt. These circumstances considered, it is not improbable that, by the good providence of God, the earth might now be prepared to greet her new governor (Noah) with a general and abundant harvest; and with seed against the seed time, which was now approaching.

Ver. 13—22. Noah's offering for his deliverance.—Noah, we are told, now came forth from the ark, with his wife and his three sons, and their wives, amounting to eight souls, with all the animals under their protection, of which, it should seem, none died while in the ark, notwithstanding their being so closely stowed. As an acknowledgment, therefore, of the divine good-of his life, and continued in it till the twenty-seventh day of the second month, in the 601st year of his life, as we see above. According to the LXX this year was A. M. 2242; and according to Dr. Hales, 2256.—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Built an altar.—That is, of earth, or turf, as afterwards ordered. See Exod. xx. 24. Virgil and Horace also both speak of such.—Ainsworth. Burnt-offerings.—Called in Greek Holocausts, but in Hebrew Gnoloth, (i. e. ascensions,) because, instead of part being eaten, (as in other sacrifices,) the whole (except the skin) ascended up to heaven in smoke and flame.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 21. A sweet savour.—Thus an infidel nobleman makes Cain profanely jeer his brother: Abel having said that his altar had been "hallowed"

"By the immortal pleasure of Jehovah"

"In the acceptance of" his victim,

Cain thus blasphemously retorts:—

"Is His pleasure! What? was his high pleasure in The fumes of scorching flesh and smoking blood?"

Give way!—Thy God loves blood! then look to it;

Give way, ere he hath more!"

Those who can read such lines without horror, must surely have renounced the very name of Christianity.

For the imagination, &c.—The particle Ki has various acceptations, o which for is unquestionably one; but it is used also in the sense of though (or although.) Josh. xvii. 18, &c. and is so rendered in this place by Drs. Clarke and Boothroyd, and many others.

22 While <sup>a</sup> the earth remaineth, <sup>v</sup> seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease.

ness, he offers, of every clean bird and beast, a burnt-offering to the Lord; for which purpose he built an altar, the first we read of, though probably not the first erected. The gratitude of Noah affords us a useful example. Though, when he left the ark, it was about the middle of our November, and winter was fast approaching, before he builds a hut or a hovel for himself and family, he builds an altar for his God. Nor is he sparing of his sacrifice, for though he had but a few animals left, he offered one of each of those admitted in sacrifice to his deliverer; and that not merely as a thank-offering, like Cain's, but as an acknowledgment of human guilt, and an avowal of his faith in the great atonement. Noah offered by faith, as well as Abel.—(Heb. xi. 7.)

Noah's offering was accepted. "The Lord smelled a sweet savour," or, as the margin reads, "a savour of rest;" in which there seems an allusion to Noah's name, as already explained, (chap. v. 29.) An acceptable sacrifice was considered as perfume offered to Jehovah; but in order to this, two things were requisite: 1. That the offering should be according to divine appointment; and, 2dly, that the person who offered was himself a believer, and offered in faith of the great atonement of the Messiah; for otherwise, when the sacrifice was inconsistent with the divine appointment, or offered in hypocrisy and mixed up with crime, then the Lord says, "I hate, I despise your feast days, and will not smell [the perfumes] in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts." (Amos v. 21, 22.) So far from true is it, as some unbelievers have profanely said, that Jehovah delights in blood, it is an established doctrine of both Testaments, that "the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sin," but as typically referring to, and deriving all their merit or acceptance from, the "sacrifice of Jesus Christ," who was "once offered to bear the sins of many." (Heb. ix. 28, x. 1—12.) And who is said expressly to have given himself for us, <sup>in</sup> offering and a sacrifice to God, for a "sweet smelling savour." (Ephesians v. 2.)

"And the Lord said in his heart," that is, to himself, "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth, (or infancy;) neither will I any more smite every thing living, as I have done." If we take the verse in this sense, it is as if the Lord had said, I will not again curse the ground, because I see it to be useless; the imagination of man's heart is still as evil as ever; referring probably to Ham, "the younger son of Noah" whose heart the Lord had read, even in the seclusion of the ark. Or, if we take the Hebrew particle, as many commentators do, in the sense of though, instead of for, as in the margin, it then means, "Notwithstanding I see man's heart is still the same as before the flood, (see chap. vi. 5.) yet will I no more destroy the earth on that account; but, looking to the atoning sacrifice of Messiah, I will spare them and bless them for his sake;" and "while the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease;" an intimation, by the bye, that all these had been changed, or suspended, during the awful year of the deluge, as well as an assurance to us, that they shall not be so suspended any more. And this has hitherto been the case; whatever partial floods and famines have prevailed, the fruitfulness of one part of the world has generally compensated the losses of the other. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness; and for his wonderful works to the children of men! For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." (Ps. cxvii. 8, 9.)

As to memorials in confirmation of the history of the flood, an ingenious writer has observed:—"We are acquainted with no ancient people who were without traditions of this event. From Josephus we learn, that Berosus, a Chaldean historian, whose works are now lost, related the same things as Moses of the deluge, and the preservation of Noah in an ark. Eusebius informs us, that the history of the flood was contained in the works of Abydenus, an Assyrian writer. Lucian, the Greek writer, says that the present is not the original race of men; but is descended from Deucalion, who was preserved in an ark from the universal deluge, which destroyed men for their wickedness. Varro the Roman writer, divided time into three periods; the first, from the origin of men to the deluge. The Hindoo paranas contain the history of the deluge, and of Noah, under the name of Satyavrata. They relate, that Satyavrata was miraculously preserved in an ark from a deluge which destroyed all mankind." The same writer adds, that "the whole of our globe has been submerged by the ocean, is proved, not by tradition only, but by its mineralogical and fossil history. On the summits of high mountains, and in the centres of continents, vast beds of shells, and other marine productions, are to be found. Petrified fishes and sea-weeds exist in the heart of quarries. The vegetable and animal productions of the torrid zone have been dug up in the coldest regions, as Siberia; and the productions of the polar regions have been found in warm climates. These facts are unanswerable proofs of a deluge." Nor, we may add, has God "left himself without witness" among the heathen, to any of the great facts recorded in Scripture, as we shall have repeated occasions to observe.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—7. God blessed Noah and his sons.—The dominion of man over the animal creation is thought to have been forfeited by sin, as, indeed, his own life was; but it does not appear that it ever was withdrawn. Had the larger animals rebelled against man, when he rebelled against his Creator, he must have been an easy prey to them; but the providence of God ordered otherwise, and in the grant now made to Noah, man's authority seems considerably extended. We have supposed, in analogy with subsequent institutions, that, from the first offering of animal sacrifices, a part of them were eaten, and animal food thus gradually introduced before the deluge. Now, however, it received the open and public sanction of the Creator and Lord of all; and though depriving sheep and cattle of life may have the appearance of cruelty, this receives a counterbalance in the care taken to provide food for the weaker animals, and to protect them from the wild and savage; but for which, the former might have been exterminated long ago, and certainly never would have been multiplied as we now see them; for who, but with a view to their flesh as meat, and to their skins as clothing, would have followed the profession of a shepherd or a grazier.

It is remarkable, that this grant is made indiscriminately; though, from the directions given to Noah as to the beasts he was to preserve, clean and unclean, it is evident that the distinction was at that time well known. The grant, however, had two express limitations, which, as prior to the Jewish economy, refer equally to us Gentiles as to the Jews. 1. Every

Ver. 22. While the earth remaineth.—Or, as the margin reads, more literally from the Hebrew, "As yet all the days of the earth." The extract on traditions respecting the flood, is quoted by Fuller, on Genesis, from "Letters on the Evidences of the Christian Religion; by an Inquirer," first printed at Calcutta in 1802, and since in England. See also Burder's Oriental Lit. and Collier's IX. Persia. (Most of the European nations divide the year into four distinct parts, called quarters, or seasons; but there are six divisions in the Text, which, we are informed by the Rabbins, obtained in Palestine among the Hebrews. The same division exists among the Arabs to the present day. (See Gottius, Lex. Arab.) According to this gracious promise, the heavenly bodies have ever since preserved their courses, the seasons their successions, and the earth hath produced its increase for the use of man.—Bagster. Collier's IX. Ver. 4. Flesh with the life thereof.—Bruce's account of the Abyssinians eating the flesh of a living animal was long thought incredible, but is now generally admitted. The circumstance related is, that three soldiers driving a cow, stopped short, threw down the animal, opened the skin above the buttock, cut out two steaks therefrom, which they placed on their shields, restored the skin with skewers and a cataplasm of clay, and afterwards drove on the animal. Thus they ate "the flesh with the blood," as it appears Saul's soldiers did in one instance. See 1 Sa. xiv. 33. Oriental Customs.

Some brutes there have been in our own country, and in our metropolis, (London,) who have eaten living animals for a wager, even in modern times.

Which is the life thereof.—That the life of all animals is in the blood, was asserted by Dr. Harvey in the seventeenth century, (who is generally considered as the discoverer of its circulation,) and was also maintained by Dr. Woodward, who was an eminent naturalist and medical professor, of Gresham College, in the early part of the eighteenth century. Woodward's Natural History, by Haller, says, "This doctrine was, however, much disputed and fallen into disrepute, till it was revived again in the latter part of the same century by John Hunter, the celebrated anatomical professor; and it is still maintained, though controverted. See Encyc. Brit. in Blood."

The question of eating blood, as applicable to the Gentiles, occasioned a serious controversy in the first age of Christianity, and produced the apostolical decree in Acts xv. 29.

Ver. 6. Whoso sheddeth man's blood.—Wilfully and unwarrantably. For there are two exceptions to this law. 1. Casual or unintentional murder. Deut. xix. 4. 2. Death by the hand of the magistrate for crimes.

Image of God.—Though the moral image was lost in the fall, yet man remains as the representative of God, and it is considered a daring act of rebellion against God to destroy the life which he communicated.

8 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying,

9 And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you;

10 And <sup>k</sup> with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth.

11 And I will establish my covenant with you; neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth.

12 And God said, This is the token <sup>m</sup> of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations:

13 I do set <sup>a</sup> my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

14 And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud:

15 And <sup>o</sup> I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you and every living crealiving creature, excludes all who die naturally, and of disease; and, 2dly, "flesh, with the life thereof," or blood in it, excludes the eating any part of an animal while yet living—an abominable and cruel custom practised among the heathen, and in some countries to the present day.

But the most important precept here given, is that by which human life was guarded. Even an animal that killed a man was to be slain. "And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." This crime (as far as we know) was now, for the first time, made capital, and seems to have been the only crime made capital before the institution of the Mosaic law. On this crime Dr. Clarke remarks: "Taking away the life of another, is the highest offence that can be committed against the individual and against society: and the highest punishment that a man can suffer for such a crime, is the loss of his own life. As punishments should be ever proportioned to crimes, so the highest punishment, due to the highest crime, should not be inflicted for a minor offence. If <sup>so</sup>, "then, the infliction of this punishment for any minor offence is injustice and cruelty, and serves only to confound the claims of justice, . . . and to render the profligate desperate." This argument might be carried farther, to show the guilt of tolerating prize-fighting, duelling, suicide, infanticide, and we fear, in nine cases out of ten, (perhaps in ninety-nine out of a hundred) it would be found very difficult to justify or excuse national wars, though always commenced with a plea of justice and necessity.—The reason here given for this injunction, represents it as treason against the Creator; "for in the image of God made he man." The expression, "at the hand of every man's brother," though taken commonly as explanatory of the preceding clause, may perhaps refer to the very ancient law, of the nearest of kin being the avenger of blood, which we shall consider under Numbers xxxv. 12. In the mean time, we may recollect, that He who is so tender of our lives, "spared not"

Ver. 9. My covenant.—On the original term Berith, several learned volumes have been written, and some we have read. Those who wish to examine the controversy, may consult the Dissertations of Dr. Gregory Sharpe, Bedford, and Moody; Catcott's Sermon on the Elahim; Calasio's Concordance, by Romaine; and the Lexicons of Bate, Parkhurst, &c. &c. We are of opinion that there is no Hebrew root to which it is so legitimately allied as Bar, to purify; whence the sacrifice which accompanied it was called a purifier, and the phrase to cut a covenant, meant to cut off or cut in pieces an animal, as the purification sacrifice; which therefore signified the making a covenant. (See Parkhurst's Lex.) Hence, also, the term is applied to him in whom the covenant was made, and who was to "purify the sons of Levi;" and is therefore compared to a refiner's fire, and to fullers' soap. Mal. iii. 2, 3. Hence, also, the sun was worshipped as Baal Berith, the Lord the Purifier. Judges vii. 33. ix. 4.

Ver. 13. A token.—The Hebrew oth, simply means a sign that something shall come to pass, or a memorial of a past event. Exod. iii. 11. Judges vi. 17. 1 Sam. ii. 34. 2 Kings xix. 29. Jer. xiv. 29, 30. Thus the sabbath was a sign: Exod. xxxi. 13. Aaron's rod: Numbers xvii. 10. Ezekiel himself: "Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God." Ezek. xiv. 24.

I do set my bow.—Or, rather, I have given or set; for as the rainbow is produced by the refraction of the sun's rays falling on drops of rain, it must have appeared at different times from the time of the creation of the sun and atmosphere; and it cannot rationally be supposed that there was no rainbow before this time. Its appointment as a sign seems to intimate, that as surely as the rainbow is a necessary effect of sunshine in rain, and must continue such as long as the sun and atmosphere endure, so surely shall this earth be preserved from destruction by water; and its preservation shall be as necessary as the sun and atmosphere. As the rainbow is of the shining of the sun in a shower of rain.—Token. Both the Greeks and Latins have ever considered the rainbow as a divine token or portent, and have even deified and made it a messenger of the gods. Thus Homer, speaking of the figures on Agamemnon's breast-plate, says there were three dragons, whose colours ture of all flesh; and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh.

16 And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember <sup>p</sup> the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth.

17 And God said unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant which I have established between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

18 ¶ And the sons of Noah that went forth of the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: and <sup>q</sup> Ham is the father of <sup>r</sup> Canaan.

19 These are the three sons of <sup>s</sup> Noah: and of them was the whole earth overspread.

20 And Noah began to be a husbandman, and he planted a vineyard:

21 And he drank of the wine, <sup>t</sup> and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent.

22 And Ham, the father of Canaan, saw <sup>u</sup> the nakedness of his father, <sup>v</sup> and told his two brethren without.

23 And Shem and Japheth took a garment, and laid it upon both their shoulders, and went backward, <sup>w</sup> and covered the nakedness the life of "his own son," when necessary to our salvation; "but delivered him up for us all." (Rom. viii. 32.)

Ver. 8—17. God's covenant with Noah.—The Hebrew term for covenant, is now generally admitted to include the idea of purification, and to refer typically to him who "purged our sins by his own most precious blood," before he took his seat at the right hand of God, where he "ever liveth to make intercession for us." (Heb. i. 3. vii. 25.) But the sign of this covenant is most remarkable. "I do (or have) set my bow in the clouds." It seems strange to suppose, that the world could subsist for 1650 years without rain, or that the phenomena of the rainbow had not appeared; and yet, as the rains in eastern countries are periodical, and not accidental showers, as in our climate, and therefore the exhibition of the rainbow is probably much less frequent, it is possible that the attention of even Noah had never been drawn to it, so as to consider its cause or connexion with the weather: yet, even in this case, it might be referred to as a token or sign; not a miracle, for it is perfectly natural, but an instructive emblem, that in all future dispensations of judgment, mercy shall be mingled therewith; and that, as in the rainbow, all the primitive colours harmoniously unite, and as it were melt into each other; so in all God's dispensations toward his people, "mercy and truth" should "meet, together, righteousness and peace" embrace "each other." (Ps. lxxxv. 10.) And as, in all ages and countries, the "olive branch" has been a sign or emblem of peace, so has the rainbow been of mercy; and, therefore, John saw, in his prophetic vision, "a rainbow round about the throne," as an indication that, in the subjects of his prophecy, mercy and judgment should be blended. Let us then, as an ancient (though not inspired) author advises, "Look unto the rainbow, and praise him that made it; very beautiful it is in the brightness thereof. It compasseth the heavens about with a glorious circle, and the hands of the Most High have bended it." (Ecl. xliii. 11, 12.)

Ver. 18—23. Noah overcome with wine.—It is a peculiar trait in the character of sacred history, that it neither conceals nor palliates the faults of its most favourite characters: justice, were "like the rainbow which Saturn (father of time) placed in the cloud as a sign to short-sighted men."—Bagster. The Greeks gave to the rainbow the name of Iris, from ireo, to tell, announce; and Homer describes her as —"The various bow,

Fixed by Saturnian Jove in show'ry clouds,
A sign to mortal man."—Cowper's Homer.

They made her (as residing in the heavens) a goddess, the messenger of Jupiter and Juno; and Servius, the grammarian, remarks, that though some of her errands were of a different character, her first mission was to declare peace between God and man. The Scandinavians compared the rainbow to a bridge, not only from its form, but "as a means of communication between God and man." She was worshipped, not by the Greeks and Romans only, but also by the Peruvians in South America. See Parkhurst's Greek and English Lexicon, in Iris. Oriental Lit.

Ver. 15. Dr. T. Burnet supposes that no rain fell before the flood, and Whiston, that there were no such heavy showers as are requisite to produce the phenomenon of the rainbow. Dr. Delany argues, that if the antediluvians had witnessed heavy rains and floods, the Apostle to the Hebrews (chap. xi. 7.) could not have called these "things not seen as yet." And what they had not seen, arguing as infidels, they would naturally consider as impossible.

Ver. 21. Noah was drunken.—Some of the fathers conceived the strange notion that Noah was spiritually drunk, and in a prophetic vision; which that ingenious but eccentric scholar, Hutchinson, revived, and some of his followers very zealously supported. See Biblioth. Bib., Bate and Parkhurst's Lexicons, and Capt. Tomlinson's New Trans. Others have endeavoured to soften the matter by representing Noah as only merry, as sear is sometimes used; but the fact is, he was fast asleep, and insensible to all that befell him. On the other hand, infidel writers have represented him as a drunkard; but a man who is only once overcome by liquor, through inadvertence, is not a drunkard, which term implies a habit: and Dr. A. Clarke will not allow that Noah was in the least to blame. See various are the opinions of commentators!

CHAPTER X.

1 The generations of Noah. 2 The sons of Japheth. 6 The sons of Ham. 8 Nimrod the first monarch. 21 The sons of Shem.

NOW these are the generations of the sons of Noah; Shem, Ham, and Japheth: and however, obliges us to remark, that, in the case of Noah, there is no censure passed, nor are any circumstances of aggravation mentioned, as in other instances. How long this happened after the flood, we know not; but it seems to have been some years, as Canaan appears to have been now born, and tradition supposes him sufficiently grown up, to have been a partaker in his father's sin. Noah, also, now began to be a husbandman; and the planting of a vineyard, rearing the young vines, and the making of wine, must have been the work of a few years at least. Moreover, by the Jewish law, his posterity were not suffered to eat of the fruit of their trees until the fifth year; but whether this law was so early established is unknown. (See Levit. xix. 23.) As Noah now first made wine, it is probable he had never before drank it, and therefore was inexperienced as to its effects, which overpowered him, and threw him into a deep sleep, while the heat of the liquor led him insensibly to throw off the light and loose garments in which the Asiatics sleep. This occasioned an exposure to his own family, which furnished a fine example of filial duty and modesty in two of his sons; but what shall we say of Ham? Solomon says, "The eye that mocketh at his father, . . . the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." (Prov. xxx. 17.) With such detestation was the crime held among the Hebrews, and still is held in all the Eastern countries.

Fuller here very properly remarks, "There is no occupation more free from snares [than that of a husbandman.] But in the most lawful employments and enjoyments we are never out of danger. It was doubtless lawful for Noah to enjoy the fruits of his labour; but, in the present instance, he seems thrown off his guard, and was overtaken in a fault; but it probably taught him (as it should all) in future to be more guarded, for we never read of the fault being repeated. O that all who fall through 'the deceitfulness of sin' might learn equal wisdom!"

Ver. 24—29. Noah's prophecy.—Noah, we are told, had three sons, and they are usually thus arranged, Shem, Ham, and Japheth; from which it is supposed Ham was the middlemost; though he seems afterwards called the younger son, he does not appear to have been the youngest: he has this brand, however, affixed to his name, that he was "the father of Canaan."

How long Noah slept we know not; but on awaking, the mantle that Shem and Japheth had thrown over him would naturally lead him to inquire into the circumstance, and raise his anger against Ham. The following predictions, however, could not be the result of his resentment, or they would have been levelled against Ham's person, whereas they relate wholly to his posterity.

We shall now review the prophecy, under the particular direction of Bishop Newton, who has paid it the most minute attention. It may be divided into two parts—a curse and a blessing. The former, it is remarkable, is pronounced, not on Ham, who mocked his father, but on his son, Canaan, who is supposed to have joined in his father's sin; but, as we have just remarked, the curse was not personal, but fell on their posterity. Now, of Canaan it is said, "a servant of servants shall he be;" that is, reduced to the most degrading servitude. This curse received its first fulfilment in the subjugation of the Canaanites by the children of Abraham and of Shem; 2dly, in the conquest of their descendants, the Tyrians and Carthaginians, by the Greeks and Romans, the descendants of Japheth; and lastly, in the fate of the Negroes, the lowest and most wretched of all slaves; for it is well understood, that the whole continent of Africa was peopled by the sons of Ham, Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan; some of whom also peopled the western parts of Asia, which have long groaned under the Turkish yoke. There may be different reasons why the name of Canaan is brought so prominent: 1. As already hinted, he was probably implicated in his father's crime. 2. The children of Canaan were first subjugated while Nimrod, a descendant of Ham, bore the sceptre of the world; and, 3dly, to encourage the Israelites afterwards in the conquest of Canaan.

Ver. 24. His younger son.—The Hebrew reads, "his son, the little one;" and is applied to a younger son in the sense only of smaller, which is hardly applicable to Ham, now grown up; many commentators therefore suppose the grandson, Canaan, here intended, as having been (as the Jews say) the first transgressor in this case; for, discovering the state of Noah, he went and told Ham, and Ham told his brethren.

There are some various readings on this difficult passage of Scripture, but none sufficient to warrant an alteration in the text, as they seem to have been occasioned by the difficulty.

Ver. 25. Cursed be Canaan.—The devoted nations which God destroyed before Israel, were descended from Canaan: and so were the Phœnicians, and the Carthaginians, who were at length subjugated with dreadful destruction by the Greeks and Romans. The Africans, who have been bought and sold like beasts, were also his posterity.—Bagster. "There never has been a son of

We now come to the blessing of Shem, which, though expressed after the pious manner of the Hebrews, in blessing the name of God, imports no less a blessing upon Shem, for "blessed are they whose God is the Lord;" (Ps. xxxiii. 12.) and this was the blessing here intended, for he was made the head of the chosen line, and his descendants for many ages possessed the land of Canaan, and are not without hope of repossessing it. As to Japheth, his name means enlargement: now God promised to enlarge Japheth, and enlarged he was, both in extent of territory and increase of posterity; for they peopled "all Europe, the Lesser Asia, Media, part of Armenia, Iberia, Albania, and those vast regions toward the North, which anciently the Scythians inhabited, and now the Tartars inhabit; and it is not improbable that the new world was peopled by some of his northern descendants, passing thither by the Straits of Anian." It is added, "and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem;" but whether the pronoun, he, refers here to God or to Japheth, is somewhat doubtful, though, in a sense, both are true. God did, indeed, dwell in the tents of Shem. "In Judah God is known: his name is great in Israel. In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion." (Ps. lxxvi. 1, 2.) And this was still more signally accomplished when the Word was made flesh, and dwelt (or tabernacled) among the Jews, the children of Abraham and of Shem. (John i. 14.) But it is also true, that God did persuade Japheth (as in the margin) to dwell in the tents of Shem, when the Gentile world were admitted to like privileges with the Jewish Church, and which we "sinners of the Gentiles" still enjoy.—(Bp. Newton on Proph. Diss. 1.)

It is repeated in both members of the prophecy, "and Canaan shall be his (or their) servant:" his posterity were subjected to Shem in the conquest of Canaan, and to Japheth by the conquests of the Greeks and Romans, and especially by the cursed slave trade, which, though much mitigated, still unhappily subsists.

The enemies of revelation have complained much of the severity and injustice of this curse on the posterity of Ham, as no way implicated in his crime; but neither are they punished for it, however deeply they may be involved in its consequences. It would, perhaps, be difficult to find a family who, either in their persons or circumstances, do not suffer through their nearer or remote ancestors. How many are sunk into poverty by their folly! how many are visited by disease originating in their crimes! "If any man (says Fuller) insist, that neither good nor evil shall befall him, but what is the immediate consequence of his own conduct, he must go out of the world; for no such state of existence is known in it. There is, however, an important difference between the sin of a parent being the occasion of the prediction of a curse upon his posterity, who were considered by Him who knew the end from the beginning, as walking in his steps, and its being the formal cause of their punishment. The sin of Ham was the occasion of the prediction against the Canaanites, and the antecedent to the evil predicted; but it was not the cause of it. (See Levit. xviii. 26—30.) To Ham, and perhaps to Canaan, the prediction of the servitude of their descendants was a punishment; but the fulfilment of that prediction on the parties was no farther such than as it was connected with their own sin."

After all, if we cannot fully "Justify the ways of God to man,"

we shall be wise to leave the cause in his hands, and say, as Abraham in another case, "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" or with our amiable poet, Couper,

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his works in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—32. Posterity of the sons of Noah. As all mankind are of one family, and nearly related in Adam and Noah, how reasonable is it that we should love and do good to each other! Whenever we behold a human being, whatever be his language and garb, or wherever he was born, we should recog-

Ham who has shaken a sceptre over the head of Japheth. Shem hath subdued Japheth, and Japheth subdued Shem; but Ham never subdued either."—Mede.

Ver. 27. Enlarge Japheth.—[Japheth denotes enlargement, and how wonderfully have his boundaries been enlarged! For not only Europe, but Asia Minor, part of Armenia, Iberia, the whole of the vast regions of Asia north of Taurus, and probably America, fell to the share of his posterity. Dwell in the tents of Shem—these words are ambiguous; for they may mean either that God or that Japheth shall dwell in the tents of Shem. In either sense the prophecy has been literally fulfilled.]—Bagster.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—4. Dr. A. Clarke remarks, that several of the names in this chapter, are rather those of families than individuals, as Mizraim, Kittim, or Chittim, Dodanim, or Rodanim, [margin] Ludim, &c. On this, however, some critics think differently, particularly of the first: Dr. Boothroyd reads, ver. 13. "Mizraim, (the father of the Egyptians.)"

CHAPTER XI.

1 One language in the world. 3 The building of Babel. 6 The confusion of tongues. 10 The generations of Shem, 27 of Terah the father of Abraham.

AND the whole earth was of one <sup>a</sup> language, and of one <sup>b</sup> speech.

2 And it came to pass, as they journeyed from the <sup>c</sup> east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and they dwelt there.

3 And <sup>d</sup> they said one to another, Go to, let nise a relation, and behave to him accordingly. In this view, how unnatural and absurd is that prejudice against foreigners, and that contempt of them, which generally prevail! And how can it consist with love to our neighbours, our brethren, "bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh," to treat them with rigour, or hold them in slavery?—But "whence then come wars and fightings amongst us?" From that first murderer, who so early stirred up in fallen man the vile lusts of ambition, covetousness, revenge, and cruelty, and armed brethren against each other in horrid war; and who hath in all ages filled the earth with slaughter and devastation, which, it might previously have been supposed, could gratify none but himself. But the very existence of war, and the necessity of always being ready for it, and of sometimes waging it, too plainly prove man's depravity, as well as Satan's influence. Blessed be God the days are coming, when all the "nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and they shall learn war no more;" and then ambitious or rapacious conquerors will no longer be adjudged illustrious characters, as in man's partial histories; but they will be branded with infamy, as in the impartial records of the Bible.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—9. The confusion of tongues.—It appears, that before the flood there was but one language, and that language was probably the Hebrew. It appears also probable, that the inhabitants had not very far overspread the earth, never having thought of travelling by water. Noah's ark would, therefore, seem to the wise ones of that age a most ridiculous attempt; and it is not unlikely that, when he talked Ver. 5. Isles of the Gentiles.—That is, Europe. Calmet says, the term comprehends all those countries to which the Hebrews were obliged to go by sea, whether in Europe or in Asia Minor.

Every one after his tongue.—This refers to the time posterior to the confusion of tongues.

Ver. 6. Sons of Ham.—Ham signifies burnt or black; and this name was peculiarly significant of the regions allotted to his family. To the Cushites, or descendants of Cush, were allotted the hot southern regions of Asia, along the shores of the Persian Gulf, Susiana, or Chusistan, &c.; to the sons of Canaan, Palestine and Syria; to the sons of Mizraim, Egypt and Lybia, in Africa.—Bagster.

Ver. 9. Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord.—His name signifies a rebel, and the LXX. call him a scurvy giant, and the Arabic a terrible tyrant. The Targum of Jonathan says, "None was ever found like Nimrod, powerful in hunting, and in rebellions against the Lord." So the other Targums. Bryant considers him as the great instrument of idolatry in the family of Cush: an arch rebel and apostate.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 11. Out of that land went forth Asshur.—The marginal reading, says Dr. Boothroyd, is to be preferred: He (Nimrod) went out into Assyria, and builded Nineveh, and the streets of the city. So also Scott and Fuller. Ver. 21. Unto Shem, the father of all the children of Eber.—[That is, of all the Hebrews. Shem signifies name or renown; and his, indeed, was great both in a temporal and spiritual sense. The finest regions of Upper and Middle Asia were allotted to his family; as Armenia, Media, Persia, &c. But his chief renown consisted in his being destined to be the lineal ancestor of the promised Seed of the woman, to which Noah might allude in his pious ejaculation, ch. ix. 28. 1.—Bagster.

Eber, the brother of Japheth the elder.—This makes Japheth elder than Shem; but Dr. Boothroyd, on the other hand, reads, "To Shem, the father of all the children of Eber, the elder brother of Japheth," making Shem the elder brother. The priority, however, is very difficult to settle, and of small importance.

Ver. 24. Salah.—[The Sept. add Catan here, with 130 years to the Chro-nology; but the addition, both here and in St. Luke, is probably spurious. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 32. In their nations.—[Without the aid of learning, any man who can barely read his Bible, and has but heard of such people as the Assyrians, Elamites, Lydians, Medes, Ionians, and Thracians, will readily acknowledge that they had Asshur, Elam, Lud, Madai, Javan, and Tiras, grandsons of Noah, for their respective founders. 1.—Bagster.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. The earth of one language.—And that language supposed to be Hebrew. On this subject, which has been much controverted among the learned, we can only offer a hint or two. The primitive names, both of men and animals, were drawn from that language; some from their cries, and others from their peculiar qualities. Jehovah, the peculiar name of God himself, is Hebrew; and the moral law was written by the finger of God himself in that language. Supposing it revealed by God himself to Adam, through the longevity of the patriarch it might be handed down to Abraham through Seth and Shem.—There is some doubt also as to the present Hebrew characters, which are alleged to be Chaldee: they were probably received from Shem, and brought by Abraham out of Chaldaea. They appear, to have been originally a picture character, somewhat like the Mexican paintings. See Dr. Greg. Sharpe's Dissert. on the Origin of Languages.

Ver. 2. From the east.—That is, from the mountains of Ararat to the city of the Babylonian empire. The margin reads "eastward," which in English means just the contrary. But Babylon is neither east nor west, but southward of Armenia, where we have supposed the ark rested. But some say, the Hebrews considered all who entered their country on the eastern side as coming from the east. So Abraham, Balaam, Cyrus, and the wise men who visited our Lord. But Taylor places Ararat where Major Wilford placed Eden, near Bactria, which lies west of Babylon. This, happily, is a question of much less importance than difficulty.—Taylor's Calmet, in Kedem, and Expos. Index.

Ver. 3. See Margin. The LXX. render it asphaltus, or bitumen; on which see Note on chap. vi.

one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do.

7 Go to, let us go down, and there confound <sup>k</sup> their language, that they may not understand one another's speech.

8 So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city.

9 Therefore is the name of it called <sup>l</sup> Babel, because the Lord did there confound the lan-of a flood to drown the world, the infidels of that period might ask, as others have since done, where the water was to come from.

The population of the old world being confined to the eastern part of it, might be one cause of its excessive wickedness, for a crowded population is reckoned to engender crime; and it might be this which determined the Almighty to disperse mankind after the flood; while the instance of Noah riding safely in the ark, would naturally suggest the practicability of sailing from shore to shore, from one country to another.

We read, indeed, of no direct command for the dispersion of mankind, of any higher authority than that of Josephus, and he could have it only from tradition. It is plain, however, that the inhabitants of the new world wished to concentrate themselves, and form a mighty empire, of which Nimrod aspired to be the head, and that the scheme of building a city and a tower was his, as Josephus represents it.

The history of this Nimrod being a mere parenthesis in the genealogy of Ham's family, in chapter x., was passed over by us, in the omission of that genealogy in our Exposition; we may, however, so far revert to it as to remark, that he was the most distinguished among the mighty ones, the heroes, the giants, the tyrants of the age and generation after the flood. He is called "a mighty hunter," and probably commenced his exploits with the hunting of wild beasts. Next, he is represented as assuming sovereign power, "and the beginning of his kingdom was Babel," or Babylon, and other towns in the land of Shinar; after which "he went into Assyria, and builded Nineveh, and the streets thereof," with other cities; so that he was a mighty builder, as well as "a mighty hunter before the Lord." The latter phrase is generally understood, of a state of open hostility and rebellion against God. So it is said of the generation before the flood—"The earth was corrupt before God;" and of the Sodomites afterwards, that they "were sinners before the Lord exceedingly." (Gen. vi. 11. xiii. 13.) This (says Fuller) may denote his daring spirit, in doing what he did in the face of heaven, or in defiance of the divine authority.

But, with the city, the children of Ham proposed to build "a tower" also, "whose top shall reach unto heaven," say our translators; but the words "shall reach," which are in italic, are, perhaps, improperly supplied: the verb "shall be" would better preserve the equivocal form of the original, which may be differently understood. 1. If it be taken as to height, it means exceedingly high. (Deut. i. 28.) But many have thought, 2. That on the top of this tower was to be an idolatrous temple, dedicated "to the heavens," or the powers of heaven, particularly the sun, the air, &c. So say the Jerusalem Targum and Josephus; and the former suggests it might also be for military purposes, in case of their being at any time attacked by the Shemites, &c. for it was part of the ancient tactics to place archers in every tower or eminence, to shower down arrows upon their enemies. 3. Josephus, who, to be sure, could only have it by tradition, supposes they might be weak enough to expect to find a refuge there in case of a second flood; and represents Nimrod as blasphemous, and mad enough, to bid defiance to the Most High: but then, why not build it on a mountain? Perhaps several of these objects might be united

Ver. 4. Go to.—An obsolete phrase, used also by Shakspeare and Spenser, and signifying come.—Let us build a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. Taking this as relating to height, Taylor calculates it at 500 feet, which is 150 feet higher than St. Paul's cross, (London;) but how much higher the original projectors meant to go, it is impossible to say; but Herodotus, who saw the remains, describes it as consisting of eight towers, the top one being a sort of chapel, and the whole a mile in height. Jerome, indeed, makes it four miles, but this, as Taylor remarks, must be in ascending height, going round and round; which reconciles it nearly with the other account. 2. But probably its top was, as Hutchinson insists, dedicated to the heavens; which Parkhurst and many others support, and Dr. Clarke thinks highly probable. Archbishop Tension considers the top as pyramidal, being a temple erected to the solar fire—to Baal or Bel. See Stackhouse.—And let us make us a name. Dr. Greg. Sharpe, not seeing how a great name would prevent their being scattered, translates Shem as an adverb, signifying there; (in verses 7, 8, 9.) Let us make, do, build, &c. for us there; meaning to build there a tower.—Orig. of Lan.

Ver. 6. They have one language; and this they begin to do.—This evidently implies that this was a part only of a plan for universal empire, with, perhaps, an idolatrous establishment. That a universal language has a condemnation to universal monarchy, is the general sentiment of statesmen, and it was supposed to be on this principle that the French in the last century were so anxious to extend their language to all countries; and that universal monarchy was the object of Nimrod and his adherents, is the general opinion of commentators, ancient as well as modern. See Bibliotheca Bib.

Ver. 8. So the Lord scattered them . . . and they left off to build the city.—By this it is evident that the visit of God not only confounded the Babel-builders for the moment, but divided them, and struck such a terror into them, that many fled precipitately in all directions. That the visit of God in the views of these Babel-builders; but the inspired historian tells us, their ruling passion was fame, and their object power. There seems no reason to doubt that Nimrod was at their head; and as he began with hunting beasts, now he went on in hunting men, and pursuing power. It is not said that he "added field to field," but he added town to town, and city to city, and kingdom to kingdom, in the pursuit of universal empire, which we think, with Fuller, was his great and ultimate object.

But a council is again held in heaven, and the like ironical language is now used as before, with respect to the tree of life. (Gen. iii. 22.) "The Lord came down to see the city and the tower"—he that built the earth and the heavens! as if his curiosity had been excited to behold this mighty effort of "the children of men!" and he said, "Behold the people is one, and they have all one language: and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them which they have imagined." Any person may discern that this language is strongly ironical, and the object is evidently to humble poor little man! "Go to," or "Come now," as modern translators render it, "let us go down and confound their language, that they may not understand (literally, hear) one another's speech." God did so, but in what manner is not said. Probably in a mighty tempest, that shook their building to its foundation, and occasioned the greatest terror and confusion; and this might produce divisions in their councils and in their principles; some considering it as a judgment from heaven, while others were disposed rather to brave it out against the Most High. It is probable also that such an awful visitation might produce a paralytic affection on the organs of speech, in many instances, so as to render them, in a great degree, unintelligible to each other; and without the gift of new tongues, of which not a word is hinted by the sacred historian, their pronunciation might be so variously affected, as eventually, though not immediately, to produce all the varieties of language since found.

Another inquiry of some difficulty is, whether the children of Shem and Japheth united with those of Ham in this ambitious project. From the generality of the expression in the opening of the chapter, it should seem that all the families were united, but not in all their branches, particularly that of Eber; and it is highly probable that from this circumstance, in part, arose the defeat of the design; for though the children of Ham might be hardened against the awful visitation above referred to, those of Shem, being religiously educated, would see the hand of Jehovah in it; and not only separate from them, but draw off others with them, to that extent as to occasion the project to be abandoned, and their separation in the earth would be a natural consequence.

But when the language of mankind was thus generally corrupted, it may be said, supposing, as we do, the Hebrew to be their original language, how could that be preserved pure? If we admit, as seems highly probable, that Shem and his family, or the greater part of them, remained in the East, (wherever that might be,) while the rest of mankind wandered to the plain of Shinar, this is easily accounted for: and yet we are not to suppose that they received no accession of words from other languages, for we know that, after Moses, almost every writer was attended with such circumstances, is the opinion of many of the learned, particularly the elder Scaliger, Is. Causabon, &c. See Origines Sac. Dr. G. Sharpe also remarks, that, to babble (which he supposes to be derived hence) means, not to talk new languages, but confusedly and without meaning. And if there be any truth in the idea above suggested, of a paralytic affection being produced on the organs of speech by the terror of the scene, perhaps this might be the origin of the difficulty, if not impossibility, of some nations pronouncing sounds to others perfectly easy.

Ver. 9. Called it Babel.—(i. e. Confusion.) The tower of Babel, Herodotus informs us, was 600 feet, or 660 feet, in length and breadth; and, according to Strabo, it rose to the same altitude. It was of a pyramidal form, consisting of eight square towers, gradually decreasing in breadth, with a winding ascent on the outside, so very broad as to allow horses and carriages to pass each other, and even to turn. This magnificent structure, which seemed to menace the stars, is brought down to the ground, so that its very site is doubtful; and when supposed to be discovered, in all cases exhibiting a heap of rubbish.—Is. xiii. xiv. Jer. l. ii. 1 Cor. xiv. 23.—Bagster. The above account of the confusion at Babel, agrees with a variety of traditions of great antiquity. Josephus mentions a tradition preserved in the Sybilic oracles, that "when all men were of one language, some of them built a high tower, as if they would thereby ascend to heaven; but the gods sent stormy wind, and overthrew the tower;" the tower, however, was not totally destroyed, for it was seen by Herodotus, as above mentioned, and probably with the repairs and improvements of Nebuchadnezzar.

Eusebius also quotes from Abydenus a relation to the same effect. "The tower (says he) nearly reached the heavens, when the winds coming to the aid of the gods, overthrew the whole enormous mass upon the heads of the builders; and from those ruins Babylon arose." And from thence rose also the fable of the war between the gods and the giants.

10 ¶ These are<sup>a</sup> the generations of Shem: Shem was a hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood:

11 And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and<sup>o</sup> begat sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and<sup>p</sup> begat Salah;

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

14 And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber:

15 And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

16 And Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat<sup>q</sup> Peleg:

17 And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters.

18 And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat<sup>r</sup> Reu:

19 And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters.

20 And Reu lived two and thirty years, and begat<sup>s</sup> Serug.

21 And Reu lived after he begat Serug two

22 And Serug lived thirty years, and begat<sup>t</sup> Nahor:

23 And Serug lived after he begat Nahor two hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

24 And Nahor lived nine and twenty years, and begat<sup>u</sup> Terah, 25 And Nahor lived after he begat Terah a hundred and nineteen years, and begat sons and daughters.

26 And Terah lived seventy years, and begat<sup>v</sup> Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

27 ¶ Now these are the generations of Terah: Terah begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran: and Haran begat Lot.

28 And Haran died before his father Terah in the land of his nativity, in<sup>w</sup> Ur of the Chaldees.

29 And Abram and Nahor took them wives: the name of Abram's wife was<sup>x</sup> Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife<sup>y</sup> Milcah, the daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah, and the father of Isach.

30 But Sarai was<sup>z</sup> barren; she had no child.

31 And Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from<sup>a</sup> Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto<sup>b</sup> Haran, and dwelt there.

32 And the days of Terah were two hundred and five years: and Terah died in Haran.

introduced words not used by his predecessors, especially when we come to the times of the captivity. The Shemites, however, not being affected by the confusion at Babel, would preserve a comparatively pure language; while idolatry, foreign commerce, and other circumstances, would accelerate the varieties of language among other families as they dispersed.

This extraordinary fact (of which there are strong corroborating circumstances in ancient history) has already led us so far in general remark, that we must conclude the section with one only practical observation; namely, that those who aspire to share the honours and prerogatives of the Divine Being, involve themselves thereby in certain ruin; and to such may be addressed the language of the prophet to Edom, "The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground? Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord." (Obadiah, ver. 3. 4.)

Ver. 10–26. Generations of Shem.—The sacred writer, having given a general account of the tribes and nations descended from the three sons of Noah, before he proceeded to trace the line of Shem to Abram, introduced the building of Babel, and the confusion of tongues, as in a parenthesis. The Septuagint read, "Arphaxad lived one hundred and thirty-five years, and begat Cainan. . . . And Cainan lived one hundred and thirty years, and begat Salah." And St. Luke refers to the genealogy, with this additional link in it. (Luke 3. 36.)—According to the Hebrew text, followed by our version, we may by computation find, that the original revelation made to Adam might be transmitted to Abram, at above two thousand years' distance, through only two intermediate persons. Adam lived till Methusaleh was two hundred and forty-three years old; and Methusaleh died when Shem was about one hundred, who lived almost as long as Abraham.

The Septuagint, indeed, add one hundred years to all, beginning at Arphaxad; and take them away from the subsequent life of some of them. It is remarkable in how gradual a manner the life of man was shortened after the deluge, till it was confined within its present limits.—(T. Scott.)

Ver. 27–32. The pedigree of Abram and Sarai.—We introduce that part of the genealogy of Shem, which is necessary to the understanding the eventual history of Abraham, who descended from Shem, in the line of Eber, the father of the Hebrews. Now, one of Eber's sons was named Peleg, that is, division; because in his days the earth was divided. (Chap. xi. 25.) This Peleg was the ancestor of Nahor, Terah, and Abram. Abram had two brothers, Nahor and Haran, the latter of whom died before his father (Terah,) in Ur of the Chaldees. Sarai was the half sister of Abram, as explained in chap. xx. 12; and Nahor, his brother, married Milcah, his brother Haran's daughter, and consequently his own niece; for the laws of consanguinity were less contracted before the Mosaic economy.

"It is said of Terah, that he took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran, his grandson, and Sarai his daughter-in-law, his son Abram's wife, and that they went from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan. But here is something supposed, which the historian reserves till he comes to the story of Abram, who, next to God, was the first mover in the undertaking, and the principal character in the story. In chap. xii. 1. we are told, that 'The Lord had said unto Abram, get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee.' Taking the whole together, it appears that God revealed himself unto Abram, and called him to depart from that idolatrous and wicked country, whether any of his relations would go with him or not; that Abram told it to his father Terah, and to all the family, and invited them to accompany him; that Terah consented, as did also his grandson Lot; that Nahor and his wife Milcah were unwilling to go, and did not go at present; that seeing they refused, the venerable Terah left them, and being the head of the family, he is said to have taken Abram, and Sarai, and Lot, though not the first mover in the affair, and journeyed towards Canaan; that stopping within the country of Mesopotamia, he called the place where he pitched his tent Haran, in memory of his son, who died in Ur of the Chaldees; finally, that during his residence in this place he died, being two hundred and five years old.

"But though Nahor and Milcah, as it should seem, refused to accompany the family at the time, yet as we find them, in the course of the history, settled at Haran, and Abram and Isaac sending to them for wives, to the rejection of the idolaters among whom they lived, we may conclude that they afterwards repented and went. And thus the whole of Terah's family, though they do not go to Canaan, yet are rescued from Chaldean idolatry; and, settling in Haran, maintained for a considerable time the worship of the true God."—(Fuller on Gen.) this verse. Kennicott further argues this from Gen. xvii. 17. which see.

Ver. 29. Father of Isach.—[Isach is supposed by some to have been the daughter of Haran, and the same as Sarai. She is called the daughter-in-law of Terah (ver. 31.) as being Abram's wife; yet Abram afterwards said, "she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother." (ch. xx. 12.) Probably Haran was the eldest son of Terah, and Abram his youngest by another wife: and thus Sarai was the daughter or grand-daughter of Terah, Abram's father, but not of his mother.]—Bagster.

Ver. 31. Ur of the Chaldees.—[Ur was probably the place called Urr, in Mesopotamia, two day's journey from Nisibis, in the way to the river Tigris. Jos. xiv. 2. Ne. ix. 7. Ac. vii. 2–4.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. [Haran was probably the city Charræ, in Mesopotamia, situated between the Euphrates and the river Chebar.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XII.

1 God calleth Abram, and blest him with a promise of Christ: 4 he departeth with Lot from Haran: 7 Canaan is promised him: 10 he is driven by a famine into Egypt.

NOW the LORD had said <sup>a</sup> unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee:

2 And I will make of thee a great <sup>b</sup> nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing:

3 And I will bless them <sup>d</sup> that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be <sup>e</sup> blessed.

4 So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him, and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

5 And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of <sup>f</sup> Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.

6 And Abram passed through the land unto the place of <sup>g</sup> Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh. And the <sup>h</sup> Canaanite was then in the land.

7 And the LORD <sup>i</sup> appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this <sup>j</sup> land: and there builded he an <sup>k</sup> altar unto the LORD, who appeared unto him.

10 ¶ And there was a famine in the land: and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon:

16 And he entreated Abram well for her sake:

We may farther remark, in concluding this chapter, how rapidly human life now declined. Shem, indeed, was yet alive, and lived to the age of 602 at least. (Verses 10, 11.) But in now few generations, with that exception, is the life of man reduced from 900 to 200! and, but a few years afterwards, it astonishes Abraham to think of a son being born to him at 100; whereas, by the above account, he must have been born when his father was 130. Many have attributed this abbreviation of life to the use of animal food; but it is more reasonable to refer it to the providence of God, the longevity afforded to the antediluvians being no longer necessary to his designs.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1-9. The call of Abram.—Babylonia is generally considered as the land in which idolatry originated; and the worship of the sun, and of fire as his representative, as the first species of idolatry, and as that adopted by Nimrod and his followers, and even by some of Shem's family; for Terah, it is not to be doubted, was an idolater of this class. The city in which he lived was called Ur, which means fire, and is supposed to have received its name from the object there chiefly worshipped. The following curious Rabbinical tradition, whether or not it has any foundation in truth, furnishes a fine satire on idolatry:—Terah, they pretend, was an idol-maker, and Abram was brought up to the same business: but, before he knew any thing of the true God, he perceived the absurdity of worshipping the creatures he had himself made, and sometimes used to ridicule the folly of his customers. At one time, in the absence of his father, a woman brought a meat offering to the gods, as she called them, and Abram thought this a good opportunity of exposing the folly of idolatry; when she was gone, he therefore, with a large stick, broke and maimed all the images, except the largest, in whose hand he placed the stick. When Terah came home and saw what was done, he called Abram to account, who told his father of the offering brought by the woman, and that it had occasioned a quarrel among them, set them to fighting, and produced all the mischief which he saw. Terah, instead of perceiving the force of Abram's satire, fell into a rage, and took him before King Nimrod, who commanded him to worship fire, and for disobedience committed him to the flames, from which he came out unhurt; and thus the Talmudists explain Abram's "coming out from Ur," that is, from the fire "of the Chaldees." This, however, is a Jewish fiction.

Abram had a divine call, (as we have seen in chap. xi.) and was "not disobedient to the heavenly vision;" and so far from being persecuted by his father Terah, the latter accompanied him, with other branches of the family, as there related. Dr. Hales distinguishes two calls of Abram; the one while in Ur, (Acts vii. 2-4.) then the chief seat of idolatry, and perhaps (as in after times) a city of astrologers and idol priests; the other when in Haran, after his father's death, to pursue his journey into the land of Canaan. In this case we may omit the word had, in the first verse, and consider this as a distinct call to prosecute his journey on to Canaan; in both instances, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing [the country] whither he went." (Heb. xi. 8.)

The design of Providence, however, was distinctly stated—he was to be separated from his country and his father's house, that he might become the head of a great nation, and that in and through him "all the families of the earth" should be blessed. This was eminently and finally accomplished in Him who was "the seed of the woman, the seed of Abraham, and the Son of God." (Gen. xxii. 18.)

A third appearance (if we suppose two before) took place "in the plain," or at the oak (or turpentine tree) "of Moreh," which was in the land of Canaan, and it is distinctly stated, was already taken possession of by Ham's posterity: "the Canaanite was then in the land," and not a foot of it was given in possession to the seed of Abraham, till forfeited by the crimes of the Canaanites. (Gen. xv. 16.)

"And they went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came." Hence may we draw a lesson on the importance of perseverance. Many set out well, like the Galatian converts, (Gal. v. 7.) who, after a while, tire and stop short of their journey's end. But what doth hinder them?

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. Now the Lord had said.—Though the Hebrew language has no pluperfect tense, in translating it may be sometimes necessary to insert the sign of that tense, as here and in many other places; but if we suppose, with Dr. Hales, that this was another appearance, the little word had is unnecessary.

Get thee out.—The original, though not so abrupt, is equally emphatical, "Go thou thyself," as implying that though his family might linger in Haran, he must not stop with them, but go himself; and those whom he had not authority to take with him, must be left behind. Both Haran and Ur were in Mesopotamia, as well as Babylon, and the whole country seems to have been overspread with idolatry. Babylon was afterwards distinguished as the "Mother of harlots," which Mede explains as meaning the parent of idolatry. The prophet Jeremiah calls it "the land of graven images," and describes the Chaldeans as "mad upon their idols." Jer. i. 25-38. Ur appears to have been a nursery for idolatrous priests, as Benares in India is now among the Hindoos. See Calmet in Ur; A. Young on idolatrous corruptors. For the above anecdote of Abram and Terah, see Levi's Hebrew Diet. in Aber, who gives the story at length from a Jewish work entitled Medrash Bereshith.

Ver. 5. All the souls they had gotten in Haran.—By souls are here meant persons; whether servants (or slaves) bought with money, or the children born of them, of whom we read, soon after, that he had 318. ch. xiv. 14. The Jerusalem Targum considers them as proselytes to the worship of the true God; the Chaldee Paraphrast speaks of them as "subdued unto the divine law." From hence two useful hints may be drawn by Christian masters; 1. That servants have souls; and, 2. That the souls of their servants should be instructed in the divine law. { Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Ham, lies between the Mediterranean sea on the west, the wilderness of Paran, Idumea and Egypt, on the south, the mountains of Arabia on the east, and the mountain of Lebanon and Phenicia on the north. Its length, from the city of Dan to Beersheba, is about 200 miles, and its breadth, from the Mediterranean sea to its eastern borders, about 80. ]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. The place of Shechem. (as it was afterwards called, ch. xxxiii. 18, 19.) unto the plain of Moreh.—Elon is supposed here to mean a species of oak; or, according to Celsus and others, the turpentine tree. The LXX. here render it "the lofty oak," and Ainsworth thinks there was a grove of them. Similar was the oak of Mamre, ch. xiii. 18. The plains (or oaks) of Moreh are again mentioned, Deut. xi. 30. and elsewhere.

And the Canaanite was then in the land.—This has been urged as a proof that the book could not be written by Moses; or, at least, that this is an interpoly, but with what reason we cannot perceive. The words simply imply, that the Canaanites (the children of Canaan) had already taken possession of the land promised to Abraham, and not that the Canaanites had been since driven away, as the objection seems to suppose.—Dr. A. Clarke.

Ver. 9. And Abram journeyed.—The Hebrew reads as in the margin, "going and journeying," but still veering "toward the south."

Ver. 15. (Pharaoh was a common name of the Egyptian kings, and signified according to Josephus, a "ruler" or "king," or according to Ludolf, "father of his country.")—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Abram had sheep and oxen, &c.—Rather, "flocks and herds;" for under the former term is included goats as well as sheep; and under the latter, bees, that is, bulls and cows; for the Jews were not allowed to eat unclean animals. Levit. xxii. 24.—Dr. A. Clarke.

and he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the LORD plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues because of Sarai, Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, What is this that thou hast done unto me? Why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, she is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now therefore, behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh commanded his men concerning him: and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Abram and Lot return out of Egypt. 7 By disagreement they part asunder. 14 God reneweth the promise to Abram.

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into the south.

2 And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold.

3 And he went on his journeys from the south even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai;

4 Unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first: and there Abram called on the name of the LORD.

5 And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents.

6 And the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together.

7 And there was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle, and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.

8 And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren.

9 Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

10 And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto Zoar.

11 Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and they separated themselves the one from the other.

12 Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom.

13 But the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the LORD, exceedingly.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward:

15 For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.

16 And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered.

17 Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee.

18 Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelled in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and builded there an altar unto the LORD.

Sometimes their relations, sometimes wealth or pleasure, or the fear of suffering; but blessed are those who persevere—"He that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved." (Matt. xxiv. 13.)

Ver. 10.—20. Abram goes down into Egypt.—This portion of Scripture, though it records no event of great and primary importance, may furnish many useful and profitable suggestions. 1. The fairest earthly possessions will sometimes fail us. Canaan, though "a land flowing with milk and honey," was sometimes subject to famine, as in this instance, and afterwards in the time of Joseph: but there is another Canaan, of which this was typical, where there can be no famine; its fruits are ever blooming, and its leaves ever verdant. (Rev. xxii. 2.) 2. The strongest faith may fail, and will sometimes fail under small trials, when it flourishes under great ones. Abram could leave his country and his father's house, as "seeing him that is invisible;" but he could not trust Providence to protect his wife. 3. We have here a picture of an ancient monarchy, particularly of Egypt, which boasted its superior wisdom and advancement; and yet, it seems, a handsome woman could not pass through it without danger to her own virtue, and terror to her husband. For the former there was sufficient reason, for Sarai was taken into Pharaoh's (i. e. the King's) house: but they were far from being so sanguinary as Abram's fears had suggested, for they used him well for her sake. 4. The very means Abram had taken, by prevarication, to preserve his wife, had like to have deprived him of her, if God had not interfered in a manner he had no right to expect; for God plagued Pharaoh and his house. 5. The King of Egypt proves a much better man than Abram had expected. It is true, his princes, who conceived their master had a right to all the beauty, and probably all the wealth in the country, had brought her into his palace; but having received some providential warning, and learning, perhaps, by the confession of Sarai, that she was married, he refuses the temptation thus presented to commit adultery, and very honourably gives her back to her husband, with a strict command for his protection. Lastly, Abram himself receives a merited reproof from a quarter from which he certainly did not expect it. Abram prevaricated in a manner very unworthy of "the friend of God," the servant of Jehovah. It is true, she was his sister in a sense, that is, his half-sister: but she was also his wife, and he sinned exceedingly in exposing her to danger in order to screen himself. Notwithstanding all Abram's faults, however, God is still his protector, and "re-buked kings" for his sake. In how many instances (says Fuller) has God, by his kind providence, extricated us from situations into which our own sin and folly had plunged us!

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1.—13. Abram returns to Bethel, and parts from Lot.—Abram, though expelled from Egypt, did not think of returning to Haran, much less to Ur, the city of idols; but he remembered Bethel, where, before he went into Egypt, he had erected an altar, and "called upon the name of the Lord." Probably his conscience now smote him for his dissimulation in that country, and he was anxious to renew his vows and communion with his God.

But Abram and Lot were both rich, and riches often breed strife, if not between the parties themselves, between their families and servants. So it was in this case, there was strife between their herdsmen. "Bad servants (says Henry) often make a great deal of mischief in families by their pride and passion, their lying, slandering, and tale-bearing." So disputes between servants often occasion division between their masters. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, (said Abram,) for we are brethren." This is a powerful argument against strife among Christians; and if it were properly understood, it would put down all rivalry and assuming airs: Abram, though the elder, and the uncle of Lot, put himself on a level with him. He does not say, "You are my nephew;" but "we CHAP. XIII. Ver. 3. Even to Beth-el.—(i. e. the place which was afterwards called Bethel by Jacob, and so called when Moses wrote; for its first name was Luz. (Ch. xxviii. 19.) Bethel was situated, according to Eusebius, 12 miles north of Jerusalem, towards Sicem, on the confines of Ephraim and Benjamin. Hai, or Ai, lay a little east of Bethel; and Eusebius and Jerome tell us, that in their time were shown some small remains of its ruins. Mastus says, that Ai was three leagues from Jericho, and Bethel one from Ai.—Bagster.

Ver. 7. And the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land.—The Canaanites, it seems, were of three classes; those near the coast were merchants, and afterwards called Phoenicians; some were agriculturists and artificers, particularly the Perizzites; but the bulk of them appear to have been soldiers, perhaps what we should call banditti, living by violence and plunder. Josh. xvii. 18.

Ver. 10. Destroyed Sodom.—[The apparent obscurity in this verse, Houbigant has removed by the following translation: "Before the Lord had destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, it was all, as thou goest to Zoar, well watered, like the garden of the Lord, and like the land of Egypt." Instead of "Zoar," which was situated at the extremity of the plain of Jordan, the Syriac reads "Zaan," which was situated in the south of Egypt, and in a well-watered country.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Mamre.—See Gen. xviii. 1. Hebron was about 30 miles south of Jerusalem, and as far north from Beersheba.—Calmet.

are brethren." Once more, Abram seems to fear that these disputes among themselves, if not put an end to, might involve them in disgrace with the heathen. So Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, "Ye have troubled me to make me stink [that is, to make me obnoxious] among the inhabitants of the land—the Canaanites and the Perizzites." (Gen. xxiv. 30.) "The quarrels of professors," says the pious commentator just quoted, "are the reproach of profession, and give occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme."

Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold, the latter probably having been received from the Canaanites for cattle; for many of these seem to have been a trafficking people, (like the modern Jews,) and took cattle for food in exchange for the precious metals. But Abram, though very rich, was neither covetous nor overbearing, for his proposal to his nephew Lot was generous and liberal, and was as such accepted without hesitation. Lot chose the plain of Jordan, which was well watered, like "the garden of the Lord," and "pitched his tent toward Sodom;" regarding the country with "a grazier's eye," as one expresses it, rather than with an eye of faith. A good man, in choosing his residence, should always inquire into the character of the neighbourhood; since bad neighbours are dangerous, both to our peace and to our characters. Lot must know that the inhabitants of the plain were "sinners before the Lord exceedingly." But Lot soon after went to reside in Sodom, with his daughters. Now, as Lot was a "just and righteous man," may we not hope that he flattered himself that, by his influence, exhortation, and example, he might be instrumental in reforming them? But it was a dangerous experiment; and though he does not appear to have been contaminated by the connexion, he was much distressed and grieved. For, by what he saw and heard in dwelling among them, St. Peter tells us, "his righteous soul was vexed from day to day." (2 Peter ii. 8, 9.)

Ver. 14–18. The promise renewed to Abram.—In the close of this chapter, God again renews to Abram the promise of the land of Canaan, and an innumerable posterity. First, he is commanded on every side to look around him, (doubtless from an elevated situation,) and he is told that all the country, as far CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1. King of nations.—Hebrew, Gofim. A settlement, probably, formed by people of different nations, like "Galilee of the nations," or Gentiles, Isa. ix. 1. Mat. iv. 15.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 3. Vale of Siddim.—Which by ver. 10. appears to have had in it pits of slime or rather bitumen, and which afterwards was covered with the lake Asphaltites, the salt or dead sea.—Ainsworth.

Asphaltum is jet black; shining lustre; opaque; very brittle. Consists chiefly of bituminous oil, hydrogen gas, and carbon. It was used originally as a cement; by the Egyptians as an ingredient in embalming. At present it is used in the composition of a particular kind of paint, and is quite an article of commerce.

Ver. 5. Rephaims.—Called by the Greek and Chaldee, giants. They became afterwards a very formidable people. Josh. xii. 4. xvii. 15. 1 Chron. xx. 4–6. See Calmet's Diet.

Shaveh, means the plain of Kiriathaim; and Elparan, the plain of Paran, as in the marginal notes. The words used for plain in the two verses are, however, not the same: the latter is used ch. xii. 6. and implies rather a grove than a plain. See Note there.

Ver. 13. Plain of Mamre.—This was also, probably, a grove, the same word being used in the places above mentioned. We have here the origin of the name Mamre, which means rebellious or bitter. Compare ch. xiii. 18.

Ver. 14. Trained servants, or instructed.—That is, according to some, cateas he could see on either hand, should be given to him in posterity,—that that posterity should be innumerable,—and that the grant should be "for ever." He is farther commanded to arise, and "walk through the land, in the length and breadth thereof," that he may understand the full extent of the grant now made, or rather now confirmed to him. Thus "by faith Abraham sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles (or tents) with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." (Heb. xi. 9.) The Jews have found some difficulty in reconciling this promise of the land "for ever," with the short period during which they retained possession of the country; and this is only to be done by faith. 1. Faith discovers another seed engrafted on the stock of Abraham; namely, the spiritual seed; Christ himself in the first instance, "in whom all the promises are yea and amen;" and then the children of Abraham's faith. "Know ye, therefore," saith the apostle, "that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." (Gal. iii. 7.) 2. Faith discovers another and a "better country;" for of Abraham it is said, he "looked for a city that hath foundations (namely, the New Jerusalem), whose maker and builder is God." (Heb. xi. 10; compare Rev. xxii.) Now here we have a fulfilment of the promise to his natural seed, who have truly been innumerable; and, 2dly, to the spiritual seed, which are probably still more so. Again, here is for Israel a temporal Canaan, which remained theirs till they forfeited it by sin and unbelief; and, 2dly, here is to Abraham a spiritual seed, which obtain the spiritual Canaan in "better promises," and which shall, in the fullest sense, be theirs for ever.

But the most extraordinary circumstance attending this history is, that Abraham believed these promises while, as yet, he had no offspring, and his own body was "as good as dead," as the apostle speaks, as to all such hopes. Yet "in hope he believed against hope, counting him faithful who had promised." (Rom. iv. 18–22. Heb. xi. 11.)

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1–16. The first battle of kings—Lot captured, and retaken.—When we here read of nine kings engaged in conflict, we must not take our ideas from the mighty chised and taught their duty; according to others, "trained to arms," which seems more pertinent to the occasion; but Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "he mustered his tried servants," which is perhaps still better.

He pursued them unto Dan.—Either the lowland afterwards so called; or rather, perhaps, a branch of the Jordan, near which Lot settled. ch. xiii. 10. "Now a river is full as likely as a town to stop a pursuit," as Ep. Watson has observed.—Apology for the Bible.

Ver. 17. The King of Sodom went out to meet Abram.—But we read above that the king of Sodom fell into one of the pits of bitumen; either then he must have had a very providential escape therefrom, or this king (as some think) was the son of him who fell in the battle. Dr. Boothroyd, however, gives a different translation of ver. 10. "And the vale of Siddim was full of bituminous pits; and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah were defeated, and (many) fell there; and the rest fled to the mountains." It is certainly not likely that the kings were the only persons who fell there.

Eusebius has preserved a fragment of Pagan antiquity, which speaks of Abraham being entertained by Melchizedek, not only at Salem, but in what he calls the sacred quarter of it, which was a mountain; probably a place of refuge long before the cities of refuge were established.—Eblich. Bibl. Taylor has laboured to prove that Salem was considered as a sacred place and Mount Moriah consecrated to divine worship, long before the city of Jerusalem was built.—Calmet, Frag. 572.

monarchs either of the East or West: those of Sodom, and the four other cities of the plain, were evidently the lords only of those towns, who had been tributary to the King of Elam or Persia, but now thought to throw off the yoke, and were therefore considered as rebels. The king of Persia, however, calling together his allies, the King of Shinar, or Babylon, (Nimrod's successor,) with two other kings, set out on an expedition; and after attacking and defeating several petty chiefs in their way, met the five kings of the plain in the vale of Siddim, and the troops of Sodom and Gomorrah first giving way, fell into the slime (or bitumen) pits, and so the whole fell an easy victim to the invaders. They now fell upon the prey, and having plundered Sodom and Gomorrah, not only took away their riches, but Lot and all his riches; who does not appear to have interfered, probably considering, as a foreigner, that he was entitled to be neuter.

The news soon reached Abram, by some one (perhaps a servant of Lot) who had escaped; and he hearing that Lot had been captured, with all his property, immediately determined to attempt his rescue, and succeeded. This has been thought highly improbable, and we have no intimation of any miraculous interference on his behalf. Supposing (as Fuller does) that each of these kings had 500 soldiers with him, what could Abram do with 318 trained servants. To this it may be answered, 1. That Abram was not alone, but had three confederates, Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre, who perhaps might each have an equal or greater number of men with them. 2. That Abram (who seems to have taken the lead) came upon them at night, and by surprise, when the enemy was fatigued with fighting, and probably gorged and intoxicated with the victuals and wines they had found at Sodom; (ver. 11.) and so were little capable of self-defence.—3. When the invaders were put into confusion, the prisoners they had taken, and were now unable to keep, would of course join with Abram and the liberating army. To these considerations it may be added, that a superintending providence watches over the concerns of the Lord's people, either in protecting them from approaching evils, or extricating them from those in which they may be involved. The Lord was Abram's shield, and his success was therefore complete. He brought back the property, and the persons who had been taken, and especially his brother Lot, his family, and goods.

Ver. 17—24. Melchizedek meets and blesses Abram.—But it may be inquired, Who was Melchizedek? Of the various opinions which have been advanced, we shall state a few of the most probable.

It is a very ancient opinion among both the Jews and Samaritans, that Melchizedek was Shem, the son of Noah, who was certainly alive at this time, and probably the oldest person now living, and not more venerable for age than character. That he should have taken up his residence among the Canaanites, while Abram was sojourning as a stranger in the same land, may seem extraordinary; but many circumstances no less strange, perhaps, occur in every age and country. From several places in the land of Canaan bearing the name of Salem, it is not unlikely that this might be the name of a district before the city of Salem (that is, Jerusalem) was built. Here it is possible Shem might reside; and, from his peaceable disposition, and just and neutral conduct, might give the name of Salem to that district, and be called the king of peace, as well as king of righteousness. And (whether he were Shem or not) it is highly probable that his dominions might be considered in some respects as sacred, and therefore to him the King of Sodom—whether the old king or his successor is not to us important—might fly for protection from his enemies, and be thereby brought into contact both with Melchizedek and Abram.

There are, however, considerable difficulties in the way of this interpretation. It is thought not to agree with the Apostle's argument (Heb. vii. 8—10.) nor with the fact of having no genealogy, &c.; and therefore Dr. Owen (who will by no means allow Melchizedek to be a Canaanite) thinks he must be one of the children of Japheth, who was to be persuaded to dwell in the tents of Shem, to whose descendants the country was already covenanted; but which of Japheth's children could be a greater man than Abram? The difficulties of these hypotheses have therefore led some of the ancients (and of late the followers of Hutchinson) to suppose, that Christ himself here appeared; but how could he be a type of himself? This seems to be a greater difficulty than either of the preceding. It is certainly not necessary for us to decide in a case so doubtful; but thus much seems pretty certain, that he must have been a patriarch, and, as such, both a prince and a priest; that he must have been venerable, both for age and character, and, as such, known both to Abram and the King of Sodom. Leaving the subject for the present, we shall only remark, that those who suppose Shem to be this personage, explain what is said by the Apostle, of his having no genealogy, as referring to his priesthood. The priests under the law must prove their descent from Levi by genealogy; and not only did their priesthood cease by death, but at a certain age (fifty;) whereas this priest (in which he was typical of Jesus Christ) derived not his priesthood from his tribe or genealogy, nor was he liable to be superannuated, like the sons of Aaron; but, as Dr. Macknight explains it, continued a priest "all his lifetime." Melchizedek remains, however, a mysterious character. "Introduced thus abruptly, (says an elegant and ingenious writer) he disappears as suddenly, and we hear of him no more. The veil is lifted to discover him, and having just seen him, it is dropped, and hides him from us for ever." (Collyer's Script. Facts.)

"And Melchizedek brought forth bread and wine," at once to entertain his illustrious visitor, Abram, and to refresh his exhausted army. This seems to imply his being near home, and the valley in which they met, (which was from henceforth called the King's dale) was probably at the foot of the hill in which he dwelt, and whither we may suppose the King of Sodom and some of his people had escaped for refuge. It seems remarkable, that the name here ascribed to Deity is neither JEHOVAH, a name peculiar to the Hebrews, nor EL-SHADDAI, which we render God Almighty, but Elion, the Most High God, or whom Melchizedek was priest; and which name Abram also uses, though, to prevent misunderstanding, he connects with it the name Jehovah; for it is very possible that Elion (as well as Elohim) was used also by idolaters for the object of their worship, as it was afterwards by the Phœnicians. And it seems that "the Most High God" is, among the Persians, the usual title of Deity to the present time; for in the instance of a priest very recently converted to Christianity, he thus begins his confession:—"When the Most High God, of his boundless mercy, presented to me the tidings of the gospel, I read and saw that it gives information concerning a Saviour, whom God Most High had made a propitiation for his sinful servants."

Melchizedek, however, blesses Abram, and receives tithes from him—not, we may believe, for his support, like the Jewish

Ver. 18. Melchizedek.—The authorities in favour of his being Shem may be seen in Bibliotheca Bib. in Ainsworth on Genesis; and in Calmet's Dict. The late Taylor, editor of the English edition, has bestowed considerable pains to prove and illustrate this point, and has produced a very curious mythological extract from the Puranas, (the sacred books of the Hindoos,) which he thinks throws some light on the allusion to this character by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, ch. vii. 8. The passage with T.'s interpretation, is as follows:

Soma, (Shem) the eldest son of Atri, (Noah) was the moon in a human shape; was a portion or form of Brahmah, the Deity. "To him the sacred shape in the west were allotted. He is still alive, though invisible; and is acknowledged as the chief of the Sacredotal tribe to this day."—Astoric Researches. See Calmet, Frag. 660.

Ver. 19. The Most High God.—Eli-on, according to Bryant, was "a compound of two titles of the sun," though we feel more inclined to explain it of the god On, Gen. xli. 45.—Holmes's Mytholog. Dict. Parkhurst also remarks "The Phœnicians (as Philo Bithius informs us from Sanchoianthon) styled their gods and goddesses Alonim, and Alonimoth, as we find in the punic verses explained by Bochart.

Ver. 20. He gave him tithes of all.—A custom of high antiquity. "The Arabian merchants, who traded in spices, durst not sell any till they had paid the tithe to their god Sabazius."—Pliny, lib. xii. cap. 14. The Persians were very exact in offering to their gods the tithe of the spoils they had taken from their enemies. Xenophon, Cyrop. lib. iv. v. vii. The Scythians themselves sent their tithes to Apollo.—Solin, cap. 27. The Carthaginians used to send to Tyre (of which they were a colony) the tithe of their profits.—Mela, lib. ii. cap. 5. They sent to Hercules Tyrius the tenth of the spoils they took in Sicily.—Diod. lib. xx. Justin, lib. xviii. The ship that brought the usual tithe of the Carthaginians to Tyre, happened to arrive there a little before Alexander began the siege of that city.—Q. Curtius, lib. iv. cap. 2. When Pisistratus wrote to Solon, to persuade him to return to Athens, he told him that every one there paid the tithe of his goods for the offering of sacrifices to the gods.—Laert. lib. i. The Pelasgians, who were settled in Italy, received a command from the oracle to send their tithes to Apollo, at Delphos.—Dionys Halicarn. Plutarch mentions a custom of the Romans offering to Hercules the tithes of what they took from their enemies, &c. &c.—*Orient. CHAPTER XV.

God encourageth Abram: 4. promiset him a son, and a multiplying of his seed. 6. Abram is justified by faith. 7. Canaan is promised again.

AFTER these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward.

2 And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?

3 And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed: and lo, one born in my house is mine heir.

4 And behold, the word of the LORD came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be.

6 And he believed in the LORD; and he counted it to him for righteousness.

7 And he said unto him, I am the LORD that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it.

8 And he said, Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?

9 And he said unto him, Take me a heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon.

10 And he took unto him all these, and divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but the birds divided he not.

11 And when the fowls came down upon the carcasses, Abram drove them away.

12 And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him.

13 And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years;

14 And also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterward shall they come out with great substance.

15 And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age.

16 But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again: for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full.

17 And it came to pass, that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces.

18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates:

19 The Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites,

20 And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims, 21 And the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites.

priests in after times, for he was an independent prince; but as an acknowledgment of his sacred character, with a view to part being offered in sacrifice to Him, who is the only rightful possessor both of heaven and earth." "Almost all nations of the earth (says Dr. Clarke) have agreed in giving a tenth part of their property to be employed in religious uses."

"The King of Sodom went out to meet Abram," probably from the retreat where he had taken refuge; and having witnessed the scene between Abram and Melchizedek, he now says to Abram, whom he doubtless considered as his deliverer, "Give me the persons"—let me only have back my subjects, and I am satisfied, "and take the goods to thyself." This seems an honourable proposal on the king's part; but Abram was jealous of being thought a marauder, who had engaged in this expedition with the hopes of plunder. On the contrary, he had "lifted up his hand," and taken a solemn oath, that he would take nothing for himself, not even "a sandal thread or a shoe-string," lest it should be said he had been enriched by war. O that other conquerors were actuated by the same principles of honour and integrity!

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—11. Abram justified by faith.—Several years had elapsed, perhaps eight or nine, since God had first made promise to Abram concerning his seed, and now he is about eighty years old, and Sarai is seventy, and he has still no child. He must yet live upon assurances and promises, without any earthly prospects. He is indulged with a vision, in which God appears to him, saying, "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." This is certainly very full and very encouraging.

For what can be wanting to those who have God for their "exceeding great reward?" Abram had not availed himself of his late victory, to procure in Canaan so much as a place to set his foot on: but God has something greater in reserve for him. . . . He shall be the father of the Church, and "the heir of the world."—The promise, to be sure, is great and full; but he has heard much the same things before, and there are no signs of its accomplishment. This works within him in a way of secret anguish, CHAP. XV. Ver. 2. Dr. Dodd reads this verse in a parenthesis; "For Abram had said (i. e. within himself) Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless?" &c. The word of the Lord, ver. 1. then comes in answer to this inquiry.

Ver. 3. One born in my house shall be my heir.—"It is still a custom in India, especially among the Mahometans, that in default of children, and sometimes where there are lineal descendants, the master of a family adopts a slave for his heir; educates him agreeably to his wishes, and marries him to one of his daughters. . . . This is a custom of great antiquity in the east, and prevalent among the most refined and civilized nations."—Forbes' Orient. Memoirs. Capt. Carver mentions a similar custom among the American Indians. Among the Mamelukes in Egypt, Volney says, "the freed man is called a child of the house."—Orient. Lit.

Ver. 10. And he divided them in the midst.—The sacrifices of the heathens certainly implied such an imprecation as is above suggested. "So when the Greeks and Trojans agreed to determine their quarrel by single combat, after various ceremonies were gone through, somewhat similar to the above, as to dividing the victims, the Roman priest called on Jupiter, in case his countrymen should prove perfidious: 'That very day, O Jupiter! strike the Roman people, as I to day shall strike this hog; and so much the more heavily, as you are more powerful than me. And having so spoken, with a sharp which he presumes to express before the Lord, almost in the language of objection: "Lord God, what wilt thou give me?" Thou speakest of giving thy servant this and that, and that, but I shall soon be past receiving it. I go childless. This Eliezer of Damascus is a good and faithful servant, but that is all. Must I make him my heir? and are the promises to be fulfilled in an adopted son?—(Fuller.)

God now condescends to assure him, "He that shall come forth of thine own bowels shall be thine heir." He is brought forth from his tent by night to view and count the stars; and when he had surveyed the heavenly host, in all the multitude and brilliancy of an eastern sky, the Lord assured him, "So shall thy seed be." And now he is no longer weak, but strong in faith; and, therefore, it was "imputed to him for righteousness."

"Much use is made of this passage by the Apostle Paul, in establishing the doctrine of justification by faith; and much has been said by others, as to the meaning of both him and Moses. The truth appears to be this, (says Fuller,) it is faith, or believing, that is counted for righteousness; not, however, as a righteous act, or on account of any inherent virtue contained in it, but in respect of Christ, on whose righteousness it terminates." This the same able and ingenious writer thus illustrates:—"Whatever other properties the magnet may possess, it is as pointing invariably to the North that it guides the mariner; so whatever other properties faith may possess, it is as pointing to Christ, and bringing us into union with him, that it justifies."

Ver. 12—21. Abram's prophetic vision.—We have here the first and only instance of a sacrifice in which the animals were thus divided, though it is plainly referred to by the prophet Jeremiah, (chap. xxxiv. 18, 19.) as a usual custom; and Cyril speaks of it as a practice of the Chaldeans, as is remarked by Bishop Patrick and others. The ceremony is supposed to imply an imprecation upon the party violating the engagement. Having divided the sacrifices, and passed between them, it should seem Abram occupied the whole day in this sacrifice, first he dashed out the brains of the animal."—Hunter's Sacred Biography. Ver. 13. Shall serve them.—Dr. Boothroyd renders this passage more perspicuous by referring the two verbs to the same agents; "they will enslave and afflict them." So Pagninus, (in margin.) Et servient facient eos. "shall make them serve;" and Dr. B. adds, "So all the ancient versions render, and the sense requires it."

They shall afflict them 430 years.—The chronology, as given in our quartæ Bibles, stands thus:—

Abram enters Canaan and receives the promise, . . . Before Christ, 1921
Ishmael mocked Isaac, . . . 1891
Israel departed from Egypt, . . . 1491

Now the difference between the first and last of these dates, is just 430 years.

Ver. 16. Fourth generation.—(In former times, most ancient people counted by generations, to each of which was assigned a term of years amounting from 20 to 110; for the generation was of various lengths among various people, at different times. The fourth generation here probably means the same as the 400 years in the thirteenth verse.)—Bagster.

Ver. 18. River of Egypt.—[This was probably not the eastern or Pelusiac branch of the Nile, as some have supposed, but a stream in the south border of the land of Israel, between Gaza and Rhinocorura, and the same as Sicho.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Sarai greth Hagar to Abram. 6 Hagar, being afflicted for despising her mistress, turned away. 7 An angel sendeth her back. 15 Ishmael is born.

NOw Sarai, Abram's wife, bare him no children : and she had a handmaid, an Egyptian, whose name was <sup>b</sup> Hagar.

2 And Sarai said unto Abram, Behold now, the LORD <sup>c</sup> hath restrained me from bearing : I pray thee, <sup>d</sup> go in unto my maid ; it may be that I may <sup>e</sup> obtain children by her. And Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai.

3 And Sarai, Abram's wife, took Hagar her maid the Egyptian, after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife.

4 ¶ And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived : and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was <sup>f</sup> despised in her eyes.

5 And Sarai said unto Abram, My wrong <sup>g</sup> be upon thee : I have given my maid into thy bosom ; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes : the LORD judge <sup>h</sup> between me and thee.

7 ¶ And the angel of the LORD found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, by the fountain in the way to <sup>m</sup> Shur.

sitting down to watch the birds of prey, and driving them from the sacrifice when they approached ; but no symbol of the divine presence appeared till after sunset, when "a horror of darkness" came down, like the smoke of a furnace, and a burning lamp (or "lamp of fire," as the margin reads, ver. 17.) appeared, and passed between the sacrifices, as the token of the divine presence, and the ratification of the covenant of God to Abram. A deep sleep now fell upon Abram, and he had a prophetic vision, which, in its purport, harmonized with the scene here described—it was a period of great darkness, with "a lamp of fire," the signal of the divine presence in the midst.

We may observe here, by the way, that our sacrifices want watching ; prayer and watchfulness should be united, as our Lord teaches us. (Matt. xxvi. 41.) The dispensations of Providence often resemble a dark cloud in their appearance, but there is a lamp of fire within, which indicates the divine presence. Though the dark side may be towards us, the light of God's countenance is on the other side.

"Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

But we must now attend to the sacred prediction—"Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, (that is, Canaan,) and they (Israel) shall serve them, (the Canaanites;) and they (the Canaanites) shall afflict them (thy seed) four hundred years." Ainsworth very properly reckons this period from the time of Ishmael mocking Isaac, thirty years after this promise, to the entrance of Israel into the wilderness, in which same year the law was given at Sinai, which agrees exactly with St. Paul's account, (Gal. iii. 17.) that the law was 430 years after the promise here mentioned ; at which period they were to come out of their servitude with great substance, and this was literally fulfilled. (Ex. xii. 35, 36.) To Abram himself, personally, it is said, "thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace, and be buried in a good old age;" in which some commentators can see nothing but a long life and a peaceful end ; but others derive hence an argument for the separate existence of human souls. Abram's body did not rest in the country of his fathers, but his spirit "was gathered to his fathers" in the world of souls.

The reason why the deliverance of Abram's posterity was so long delayed, is founded on the long sufferance and forbearance of God—"The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." "There is a fitness in all God's proceedings, (says Fuller,) and a wonderful fullness of design, answering many ends by one and the same event. The possession of Canaan was to Israel a promised good, but to the Canaanites a threatened evil. It is deferred towards both, till each be prepared for it." "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God !" (Rom. xi. 22.)

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1-6. Sarai gives Hagar to Abram.—In the preceding chapter, Abram had been assured that his heir should be the fruit of his own body, but nothing is said of Sarai ; they both, therefore, seem to think it necessary to devise some means for the fulfilment of the promise ; and Sarai hits upon an expedient, which, though it seems strange to us, was in accordance with the custom of the times. Here we have the origin of concubinage, and it is founded in the principles of slavery ; for it was upon the principle that the slave, and all her produce, belonged to her owner, constituting part of the private patrimony of a wife, that Sarai claimed the offspring of Hagar as her own. "It may be (said she) that I may have children," or, as the margin literally expresses it, "be builded by her ;" for the household is built up of children.

Hagar, we are told, was an Egyptian slave, supposed to have been presented to Abram by Pharaoh when he was in Egypt, and Sarai was very beautiful : this connexion, therefore, was founded, as such generally are, not in affection, but in convenience ; or rather in "the crooked policy" of contriving to fulfil God's promises, from which none of us are wholly free. The contrivance so far answered, as that Sarai had a son by Hagar ; but, in the next chapter, all her plan is frustrated, and Ishmael is set aside from being heir, by the promise of a son by Sarai. In the mean time, she soon finds reason to repent her folly, for she was despised in the eyes of her own slave. She now began to reproach her husband as slighting her, and conniving at Hagar's conduct, who was, no doubt, elated with the thought of bringing an heir to Abram, when his own wife was barren ; and probably she did not refrain from expressing her contempt for Sarai.

To calm her temper, and prevent farther jealousies, Abram returns Hagar back to her mistress, to do to her as was "good in her eyes," as the Hebrew expresses it : but, alas ! Sarai was too much irritated and incensed, to listen to the claims of justice, or the cry of misery. She "dealt hardly with" (or afflicted) her, adding stripes perhaps to her reproaches, so that she fled into the wilderness, and there the eye of God saw and pitied her !

Ver. 7-16. Hagar rescued by an angel.—Hagar, though a runaway slave, is not overlooked by Him, whose seventh centuries of the Christian era.—Bp. Newton on the Proph. Diss. 2. Stackhouse.

Ver. 13. Thou God seest me.—Of the last clause of this verse, Dr. Clarke says it is "very obscure, and rendered differently in all the versions." (See eleven senses in Poli. Synop.) The learned commentator remarks, that the word Acherey, which we render after, signifies "the last days, or aftertimes," and refers to Exod. xxxiii. 23. above cited, where the same word is rendered back parts ; that is, after the brighter glory of his face was passed, Moses viewed the after (i. e. the mitigated) glories of the Deity. The Targum supposes Hagar favoured with a prophetic vision ; and that of Jonathan represents her as saying, "Behold, here was revealed the glory of the Shechinah of the Lord, after vision ;" i. e. after the vision of the angel. Whence also Jerome, "Verily, here have I seen the back parts of Him that seeth me."—Biblioth. Bib.

Instead of "thou God seest me," Warburton and others render the name El-roi, "the visible God ;" but neither do we think this agrees so well with the original or the context. It was not from her seeing God, but from God seeing her, that Hagar derived her consolation.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 God renewed the covenant. 5 Abram his name is changed. 10 Circumcision is instituted. 16 Isaac is promised. 23 Abraham and Ishmael are circumcised.

AND when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; <sup>b</sup>walk before me, and be thou <sup>c</sup>perfect.

2 And I will make my <sup>d</sup>covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly.

3 And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying,

5 Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but <sup>g</sup>thy name shall be <sup>h</sup>Abraham; for <sup>i</sup>a father of many nations have I made thee.

6 And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make <sup>j</sup>nations of thee; and kings shall come out of thee.

9 <sup>n</sup>And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations.

10 This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee: Every man-child among you shall be circumcised.

11 And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token <sup>o</sup>of the covenant betwixt me and you.

12 And <sup>p</sup>he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born <sup>q</sup>in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed.

13 He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant.

14 And the uncircumcised man-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off <sup>r</sup>from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

Her incensed mistress would perhaps have scourged her back again; but the Almighty sends an angel to visit her, and counsel her to return and submit herself to her mistress. This is the first appearance we read of an angel in human form; and it is the angel of the covenant, he whose "delight of old was with the sons of men;" and who, while he bore the incommunicable name, and received the honours of divinity, at the same time "made himself of no reputation," while he became the comforter and adviser of a deserted female slave!

This angel, however, now speaks with authority. "I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude. And the angel of the Lord said unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, and shalt call his name Ishmael;" (that is, God hath heard), because the Lord hath heard thy affliction. And he will be a wild man, and every man's hand against him; and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren." Here we must pause a moment, to examine this important prophecy. The character of Ishmael and his descendants is, "a wild man," or more literally, "a wild ass man;" that is, a man like the wild ass, whose character is thus depicted in the book of Job: (chap. xxxix. 5-8.) "Who hath sent out the wild ass free? or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass? Whose house I have made the wilderness, and the barren land his dwellings. He scorneth the multitude of the city, neither regardeth he the crying of the driver. The range of the mountains is his pasture, and he searcheth after every green thing." This affords a fine exposition of Ishmael's character, and applies with wonderful exactness to his numerous wandering, lawless, and freebooting descendants, the Hagarites, the Saracens, and all the numerous tribes of wild Arabs, by whom the East has been for many ages overrun.

Hagar, though an Egyptian slave, was not wholly ignorant of God: much she had learnt, doubtless, in Abram's family, who, in being blessed himself, was to be made a blessing to all around him; and she had probably learned more "by the things she suffered." She seems in particular to have been deeply impressed with a sense of the love and condescension of divine providence, in the heavenly visit she received; and acknowledged the "all-seeing eye" of heaven, both in the name she gave to the angel, and to the place at which he found her. But one expression here used (verse 13.) seems not a little to have puzzled all the commentators; and this our translators render, "For (she said) have I also here looked after him that seeth me?" The principal word employed, is the same as is applied to the view of the divine glory which Moses had in the cleft of the rock. (Exod. xxxiii. 23.) After the full effulgence of the divine glory (the Shechinah) had passed by, the prophet saw the mitigated glory which followed—the shaded glories of the Divinity—the "back part," as it were, of the sacred vision. It is remarkable, that in several angelic visions, those in particular to Gideon and Manoah, (Judges vi. 21. xiii. 20.) we are told, that the angel in departing, "did wonderfully," leaving a token of his divine character, which no doubt greatly attracted their attention; and if we allow ourselves to suppose here a similar appearance of the Shechinah, (as is suggested by the Targums,) then we may read the words rather as an exclamation than a question—"Even here! (in this wilderness) have I seen the back part"—the retiring glories—"of Him that seeth me!" It is our mercy, that while God veils from us the glories which we cannot behold and live, nothing can veil us from his all-seeing eye! An eye is said to be the hieroglyphic of the Deity, and there is no maxim of more practical importance, than that every where, and at all times, God seeth us. And therefore Hagar called the place at which the angel found her, "the well (or spring) of him that liveth and seeth me," as the Hebrew names are rendered in the margin.

"O may these thoughts possess my breast,
Where e'er I rove, where e'er I rest!
Nor let my weaker passions dare Consent to sin, for God is there."—Watts.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1-14. Abram's name changed, and circumcision instituted.—God here renews his covenant with Abram, under the name God Almighty, or All-sufficient, which seems a proper introduction to the assurance that Sarah should have a child, though hitherto barren, and in her ninetieth year. The covenant here renewed differs not materially from the preceding, but it is attended with a change of name on the part both of Abram and Sarai, by the addition of a Hebrew letter to each of their names, (answering to our letter H,) and we therefore henceforth hear of them by the names of Abraham and Sarah. Abram, the original name of the patriarch, signified "a high father;" and Sarai, "my princess;" but by the addition of a letter, the former is made to mean, "the father of a great multitude;" and the latter, "the mother (or princess) of many nations," as in ver. 16.: and this is done as a pledge that his seed should be (as already promised) like the stars of the sky, or as the sands of the desert—innumerable; and to this his seed, it is added, should be given the land of Canaan, for "an ever-

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. I am the Almighty God.—El-Shaddai.—This name is supposed to allude to the infinite bounty and all-sufficiency of Providence, which the heathen expressed latterly by the image of Diana covered with breasts, to intimate the beneficence of Nature, as they explained it; but which St. Paul attributes to the God of Nature, Acts xv. 17.

Ver. 5. Thy name shall be Abraham.—The H (or He) inserted in this name, is supposed to be a part of the word Hamon, which signifies a multitude.—Atinsworth.

Ver. 8. The land wherein thou art a stranger.—Hebrew, "The land of thy sojournings." I will be their God.—This is the first time this expression occurs. See Exod. vi. 7.

Ver. 10. Every man child among you shall be circumcised.—"This was the first institution of circumcision, and it was an institution of God, and not of man. Indeed Herodotus says, that 'the Colchi, Egyptians, and Ethiopians only, of all men circumcised from the beginning; and the Phœnicians and Syrians, which are in Palestine, learnt it of the Egyptians, as they themselves confess.' So Diodorus Siculus speaks of circumcision as an Egyptian rite, and says there are some who make the nation of the Colchi, and of the Jews, to come from the Egyptians; hence he observes, that with these nations there was an ancient irradition to circumcise their new-born infants, which rite was derived from the Egyptians; but as the original of the Jewish nation is mistaken, so likewise is the original of this rite. . . . Those in Palestine that were circumcised, were the Jews only, as Josephus observes; but they did not learn it from the Egyptians, nor do they ever confess it; but, on the contrary, suggest that the Egyptians learnt it from them in the times of Joseph. . . . The Colchi, indeed, who were a colony of the Egyptians, might learn it from them; and so the Ethiopians, who were their neighbours likewise."—Dr. Gill, in loc. It is more remarkable that the inhabitants of Mexico practised a kind of circumcision when the Spaniards came there; and the same rite is said to prevail among some of the savages of the South Sea. It is probable that there are more than 150 millions of persons among whom the rite is still observed, including the Mahometans. See Orient. Lit.

Ver. 12. He that is eight days old.—Marg. "A son of eight days;" the usual mode of expressing the age in Hebrew. Circumcision being a religious rite, might be performed upon the Sabbath.

Ver. 13. Or bought with money—of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. This is, we believe, the origin of domestic slavery, and in its original was a privilege, since it brought the child of a heathen within the limits of the covenant. Slavery probably originated in war, and the Hebrews circumcised (but never without the consent of the party) those prisoners which other nations often sacrificed to their idols.—Michaels' Com.

Ver. 14. The uncircumcised shall be cut off.—The Rabbins understand this of cutting off by death, either by the magistrates, when the case was brought before them, or by an untimely death from the hand of God.—Atinsworth.

We have noticed above, that the ancient Hebrews were not ignorant of the spiritual import of this rite; and it appears that even Rabbins of more modern date were not wholly strangers to it. Thus it is written in the book

15 And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarah thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but <sup>a</sup> Sarah shall her name be.

16 And I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and <sup>u</sup> she shall be a mother of nations; kings of people shall be of her.

17 Then Abraham fell upon his face, and <sup>v</sup> laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is a hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

18 And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!

19 And God said, Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with his seed for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him.

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly: <sup>w</sup> twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation.

21 But my covenant will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time <sup>x</sup> in the next year.

22 And he left off talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

23 ¶ And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Abraham entertaineth three angels. 9 Sarah is reproved for laughing at the promise. 17 The destruction of Sodom is revealed to Abraham: 23 his intercession.

AND THE LORD appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre: and he sat in the tent-door in the heat of the day;

2 And he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, <sup>b</sup> three men stood by him: and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent-door, and <sup>c</sup> bowed himself toward the ground,

3 And said, My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, <sup>d</sup> pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant:

4 Let a little <sup>e</sup> water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree:

5 And I will fetch a morsel of bread, and lasting possession." It is, however, true in fact, that they retained it for but a few generations only; on this ground, therefore, not only Jews, but very many Christians, expect that their country, though now overrun by Mahometans, will be restored to the children of Abraham, even to the end of time, which is as far as the term can be extended. But if we admit the Apostle's exposition, and extend the promise to another and a better country, then, whether or not the Jews return to Palestine, the true seed of Abraham, believers in the promised Messiah, shall obtain an inheritance more abundant and enduring. (See on chap. xiii. 14—18.)

We have here the origin of circumcision, an institution which, however revolting to European feelings, is held in such veneration to this day by a large portion of mankind, that they look down with execration and disgust on every male uncircumcised, and treat him as a dog. In this institution we are to consider, 1. Its divine authority: it was no human invention, as some have pretended, for it was the command of God to Abraham. 2. Its political design, as making a separation between the seed of Abraham and other nations. 3. Its moral (or spiritual) signification, as pointing to a greater purity of life and manners, "laying apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness" (James i. 21.). Hence St. Paul, in the Romans, argues at length on the spiritual import of this rite, as a "seal of the righteousness of faith;" and the "circumcision of the heart," is used by him for its purification by faith. St. Stephen also speaks of those Jews who refused to hear and to obey the gospel, as "uncircumcised in heart and ears." (Acts vii. 51.) Hence also the Apostle tells us, that "he is a not Jew [a true child of Abraham] who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew which is one inwardly: and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God"—alluding to the name of Judah, (whence Jew is derived,) which signifies praise. (Rom. ii. 23, 29.) Nor was the spiritual import of the rite unknown among the ancient Hebrews; for thus saith Moses to Israel, "The Lord God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart," &c. (Deut. x. 6. See also Jer. iv. 4.)

Ver. 15—27. Sarah's name changed, and Isaac promised.—The change of Sarah's name, as well as Abram's, has been already remarked; but two or three circumstances relative to the latter merit farther observation. 1. His great surprise and joy as to the promise of Isaac; "Abraham fell on his face, and laughed!" The text evidently expresses a high degree of joy, bordering on ecstasy and rapture; but not the levity which we usually connect with laughter, for Abraham at the same moment fell on his face before God. It should seem, that Abraham never doubted the divine promise, as to his having a numerous issue, but he hesitated as to the means of its accomplishment; "O that Ishmael might live before thee!" 2. This paternal affection was not displeasing in the sight of God: it is our duty to plead on behalf of all our children, however unpromising appearances may be, and a blessing may be obtained, though not exactly according to our wishes. "As for Ishmael, I have heard thee; twelve princes shall he beget," &c. (The fulfilment of this promise we shall find, chap. xxv. 12—16.) 3. We may remark Abraham's prompt obedience: in the self-same day that the command was given it was obeyed, or at least began to be obeyed. 4. It may be farther remarked, that not only children, but servants, were included in this covenant, and partakers of this sacrament: and even females, though not subjects of this rite, were not excluded from the blessing; and under the dispensation of the gospel there is indeed no difference, for "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female."

The first verse of this chapter may form a proper practical conclusion of the whole. "Walk before me, and be thou perfect;" or, as the margin reads it, "upright," or sincere. Integrity is true scriptural perfection; and without that every thing is defective, and all religion vain. We may not attain absolute perfection on earth, but we should study as nearly as possible to approach it, which is only to be done by "walking with God"—by a steady course of prayer and communion with him. Difficulties, to try our faith, may daily occur, and irksome and unpleasant duties will frequently present themselves; but we must walk on, "pursue the even tenor of our way," and not turn aside, either to avoid the one or evade the other.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—16. Abraham entertaineth three angels.—St. Paul exhorts to hospitality, on the consideration that "thereby some have entertained angels unawares." (Heb. xiii. 2.) This probably refers to the instances of Abraham and Lot, and in this and the following narrative. The chapter before us gives Zoar: "At what time a man is sealed with the holy seal of this sign, (circumcision,) thenceforth he seeth the blessed God properly, and the holy soul is united with him."—Ainsworth.

Ver. 19. Isaac.—(Yitzchak, which we change into Isaac, signifies laughter; so called in allusion to Abraham's laughing, as related in ver. 17. By this Abraham did not express his unbelief or weakness of faith, but his joy at the prospect of the fulfilment of so glorious a promise; and to this our Lord evidently alludes, John viii. 56.)—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Thirteen years.—(Not only the Jews, but the Arabs, who are the descendants of Ishmael, retain the rite of circumcision to this day; and the latter perform it, as the other Mahometans also do, at the age of thirteen.)—Bagster.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. Sat in the tent door.—[In these verses, we have a delightful picture of genuine and primitive hospitality: a venerable father sits at the tent door, not only to enjoy the current of refreshing air, but that if he saw any weary and exhausted travellers, he might invite them to rest and refresh themselves during the heat of the day. In the same manner Homer describes the hospitable Axiylus; and the same custom still obtains in the East. It was not the custom, nor was there any necessity, for strangers to knock at the door, or to speak first, but to stand till they were invited; as Minerva is represented in the Odyssey as standing among the common people of Ithaca, near the porch of Ulysses.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. And lo! three men stood by him.—Some expositors have represented these three men as the three persons of the Trinity, but we conceive without authority or propriety; for of the two men who went to Sodom, we find nothing said that intimates divinity; and our Lord has told us that "no man has seen the Father." (John v. 37.) The Christian fathers generally refer all the appearances of God in human form to the Son only, whose "delights" were of old with the sons of men. (Prov. viii. 31.) So Ainsworth, Scott, and Fuller.

Ver. 4. Wash your feet.—[In those ancient times, shoes, such as ours, were not in use; and the foot was protected only with sandals or soles, fastened round the foot with straps. It was, therefore, not only necessary, from motives of cleanliness, but also a very great refreshment, in so hot a country to get the feet washed at the end of a day's journey; and this is the first thing that Abraham proposes.]—Bagster.

'comfort ye your hearts; after that ye shall pass on: for therefore <sup>are</sup> ye come to your servant. And they said, So do, as thou hast said.

6 And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, <sup>Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.</sup>

7 And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hastened to dress it.

8 And he took <sup>butter</sup>, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set <sup>it</sup> before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat.

9 ¶ And they said unto him, Where <sup>is</sup> Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent.

10 And he said, I will certainly return unto thee <sup>according to the time of life</sup>; and lo, Sarah <sup>thy</sup> wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard <sup>it</sup> in the tent-door, which <sup>was</sup> behind him.

11 Now Abraham and Sarah <sup>were</sup> old and well stricken in age; and it ceased to be with Sarah <sup>after the manner of women</sup>.

12 Therefore Sarah <sup>laughed</sup> within herself, saying, After I am waxed <sup>old</sup> shall I have pleasure, my <sup>lord</sup> being old also?

13 And the Lord said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 Is any thing too hard for the <sup>Lord</sup>? At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of <sup>life</sup>, and Sarah shall have a son.

15 Then Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. And he said, Nay; but thou didst <sup>laugh</sup>.

16 And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way.

17 ¶ And the Lord said, Shall I <sup>hide</sup> from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be <sup>blessed</sup> in him?

19 For I know him, that he will command his children <sup>and</sup> his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of <sup>him</sup>.

20 And the Lord said, Because the <sup>cry</sup> of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, 21 I will go down <sup>now</sup>, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if <sup>not</sup>, I will know.

22 And the men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom: but Abraham stood yet before the Lord.

23 ¶ And Abraham <sup>drew</sup> near, and said, Wilt <sup>thou</sup> also destroy the righteous with the wicked?

24 Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?

25 That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: <sup>Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?</sup> us a fine specimen of patriarchal simplicity and hospitality, which, it appears, still exist in many parts of the East. "Nothing is more common in India, (says Ward,) than to see travellers and guests eating under the shade of trees."—"On my return to the boat, (says Belzoni,) I found the Aga, and all his retinue, seated on a mat, under a cluster of palm-trees; close to the water. The sun was then setting, and the shades of the western mountains had reached across the Nile and covered the town." So another traveller in Egypt (Licht) tells us—"The Aga having prepared a dinner for me, invited several of the natives to sit down. Water was brought in a skin by an attendant to wash our hands. Two fowls roasted were served up on wheaten cakes, in a wooden bowl, covered with a small mat, and a number of the same cakes in another: in the centre of these were liquid butter and preserved dates."

26 And the Lord <sup>said</sup>, If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes.

Similar to these was the entertainment Abraham here prepared for these strangers; and though, in the first instance, he seems not to have been aware of the character of his visitors, he soon perceived a superiority in one of them, who, indeed, disclosed his real character by his language. The courtesy of Abraham in his address must not be passed over, and the language of the original (as noted in the margin) is still more striking than the version of the text—"Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree; and I will fetch a morsel of bread, and stay ye your hearts; after that ye shall pass on: for therefore you have passed to your servant."

During the preparation of this feast, probably, Sarah is inquired for, who was within the tent preparing for the reception of her husband's guests; and, at the same time, listening to the conversation without, when she heard one of them say, "I will certainly return unto thee . . . and Sarah shall have a son;" whereat she laughed within herself. Of this, one of the three, who is now announced as the Lord JEHOVAH, inquired, "Wherefore did Sarah laugh? Is any thing too hard for Jehovah?" And then the promise is repeated. Sarah, however, at first denied the fact from fear, not considering it was as vain to attempt to deceive the Lord, as it was foolish to dispute his power, and that in both she discovered her unbelief as well as folly.

The men (as they appeared to be) now looked toward Sodom, and "set their faces" as if they would go thither: Abraham, therefore, with the same courteousness as he received them, went with them to help them on their way.

Ver. 17. Shall I hide from Abraham, &c.—When God made man; when he excluded him from paradise; and when he came down to view the tower of Babel, he is represented as holding a council, as it were, on those occasions: "Let us make man."—"Behold, the man is become as one of us;"—"Let us

A spacious bowl th' admiring patriarch fills,

Smile on their hosts, and taste terrestrial food;
And while from Sraph lips sweet converse springs,
They lave their feet, and close their silver wings."—Darwin.

Ver. 17—33. Abraham pleads for Sodom.—Jehovah is now represented rather as reasoning with himself, than as consulting with his attendants, with whom no conversation is recorded. But we must not omit to notice the honourable testimony here borne to Abraham's character: "I know him, that he will command his children, and his household after him." Abraham, being blessed himself, was anxious to procure a blessing on his household and descendants; and it is certainly the duty of all who fear God, to teach their children and servants to fear him also. Family instruction and devotion are the duty of every master of a family.

"And the Lord said"—to Abraham doubtless, or at least within his hearing—"I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry which is come unto me." Observe, though blood has a loud voice, and cries to heaven, there are other sins which also cry to heaven for vengeance. And the men, that is, the angels, who were commissioned to destroy Sodom, went forward, while Abraham stood yet before the angel Jehovah, that is, the Son of God in human form, and pleaded for mercy on the behalf of Sodom; and herein he has afforded us an example of this duty. 1. His prayer was offered with great reverence: "Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, who am but dust and ashes." 2. It was importunate: he pleads, first, if there were but fifty righteous, that the city might be spared; and then he comes gradually down to ten. "Peradventure there shall be ten there;" and the Lord said, "I will not destroy it for ten's sake." 3. It may be remarked, that Abraham says nothing about Lot and his family; from which it may be reasonably inferred, that the angels had informed him that they had a commission to rescue them. Lastly, to what an enormity of wickedness must the inhabitants of this city have arisen, that, notwithstanding the residence of Lot so long among them, and the rescue of their go down and confound their language;" but here the language is materially different. "And the Lord said," as if debating with himself, "Shall I hide from Abraham," &c.

Ver. 21. I will go down.—[This is spoken figuratively; and as the Jewish 27 And Abraham answered and said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD, which am but dust and ashes:

28 Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous: wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? And he said, If I find there forty and five, I will not destroy it.

29 And he spake unto him yet again, and said, Peradventure there shall be forty found there. And he said, I will not do it for forty's sake.

30 And he said unto him, Oh, let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak: Peradventure there shall thirty be found there. And he said, I will not do it, if I find thirty there.

31 And he said, Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the LORD: Peradventure there shall be twenty found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for twenty's sake.

32 And he said, Oh, let not the LORD be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. And he said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake.

33 And the LORD went his way, as soon as he had left communing with Abraham: and Abraham returned unto his place.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Lot entertaineth two angels. 12 Lot is sent for safety into the mountains. 24 Sodom and Gomorrah are destroyed. 26 Lot's wife becomes a pillar of salt. 31 The incestuous original of Moab and Ammon.

AND there <sup>a</sup> came two Angels to Sodom at even; and Lot sat in the gate of Sodom; and Lot, seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face toward the ground;

2 And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn <sup>b</sup> in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And country by the hands of Abraham, still their sins cried to heaven, and brought upon them the vengeance of the Almighty.

Some readers may, perhaps, be surprised to find, in this and the following chapters, angels (and even Jehovah himself) appearing in human form; travelling and resting, eating and drinking, as real men, when we are taught in other parts of Scripture to consider them as pure spirits, the inhabitants of another world. The fact is, we live under a dispensation so different, and in a period so remote from the age of miracles, that it is difficult for us to form a tolerable idea of these events; and many impertinent questions have been asked, to which the Scriptures furnish no answer, and therefore it is our wisdom to be silent. Thus far we know, that the Deity is capable of assuming any created form, and of communicating any form to creatures, either permanent or temporary. We here follow the inspired narrative implicitly; as we proceed through the Bible, we shall not fail to mark the passages which throw any new light on the doctrine of "the ministration of angels," which pervades the whole of the Bible, and cannot be given up, without giving up the Scriptures altogether.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—11. Two angels visit Sodom.—The gate of the city was the usual seat of judgment; the Jews have, therefore, a tradition, that Lot, in consequence of the weight he acquired from Abraham's valour a few years previously, (see chap. xiv. 21, &c.) had been promoted to the magistracy, and perhaps had accepted of the office in the hopes to overawe their vices; and with this they seem afterwards to reproach him, (ver. 9.) "This one fellow (say they) came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge." But, alas! they were incurable, and must be destroyed. Of Lot we may observe, that he showed the same courtesy to strangers as his uncle Abraham; and, indeed, hospitality is considered as the master-virtue, so to speak, of all the East. Thus Homer tells us—

"By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent,
And what to those we give, to Jove is lent:
Then food supply, and bathe his fainting limbs,
Where waving shades obscure the mazy streams."—Pope.

Lot seems, however, to have carried his hospitality to an ex-writers speak, according to the language of men. So eyes, ears, hands, and other members of the body, are attributed to God, for effecting those things which men cannot accomplish without these members.—Bagster.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. Two angels:—[or, rather, "the two angels came," referring to those mentioned in the preceding chapter, and there called "men." It seems, (from chapter xviii. verse 22.) that these two angels were sent to Sodom, while the third, who is called the Lord or Jehovah, remained with Abraham.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Nay; but we will abide in the street.—"And they said unto him, for we lodge in the street;" where, nevertheless, the negation is understood. Knowing the disposition of the inhabitants, and appearing in the mere they said, 'Nay; but we will abide in the street all night.

3 And he pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; <sup>d</sup> and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat.

4 ¶ But before they lay down, the men of the city, even the men of Sodom, compassed the house round, both old and young, all the people from every quarter:

5 And they called unto Lot, and said unto him, Where are the men which came in to thee this <sup>e</sup> night? bring them out unto us, that we may know them.

6 And Lot went out at the door unto them, and shut the door after him,

7 And said, I pray you, brethren, do not so <sup>f</sup> wickedly.

8 Behold now, I have two daughters which have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out unto you, <sup>g</sup> and do ye to them as is good in your eyes: only unto these men do nothing; for therefore came they under the shadow of my roof.

9 And they said, Stand back. And they said again, This one fellow came in to sojourn, <sup>h</sup> and he will needs be a judge: now will we deal worse with thee than with them. And they pressed sore upon the man, even Lot, and came near to break the door.

10 But the men put forth their hand, and pulled Lot into the house to them, and shut to the door.

11 And they smote the men that were at the door of the house with blindness, both small and great: so that they wearied themselves to find the door.

12 ¶ And the men said unto Lot, Hast thou treme utterly unjustifiable, in offering his two maiden daughters to the mob which beset his doors. Chrysostome says, "The rights of hospitality are very sacred, even in the most barbarous parts of the world; and, therefore, Lot would rather his own children should be sacrificed to the lust of these brutes, than the strangers he had taken under his roof." Augustine, however, properly condemns the idea of committing a lesser sin to avoid a greater; and more reasonably attributes his conduct to "distraction of thought and heat of passion." But he ought to have risked his own life in defence both of his guests and daughters.

It is painful to record the crimes of mankind, and especially when of the horrid nature of that here mentioned; and sometimes it cannot be done without violence to the feelings of virtuous and good men. But it is necessary, and the narrative before us is requisite to prepare us for the very awful judgment which immediately follows. The Lord had come down to see if the sin of Sodom was so "very grievous" as the cry of it imported. This is in allusion to human governments, and suggests to princes and judges the propriety of full inquiry before judgment passes. But the angels have little occasion to inquire. The sinners glory in their shame, and volunteer in evidence against themselves.

Lot's illustrious visitants, however, soon extricated him from all danger, by pulling him into the house and shutting them out; at the same time smiting them with blindness, probably by a stroke of that lightning, by which they were on the following day destroyed; and which must have operated as a warning to them, and have led them to cry for mercy, had they not been so hardened in their crime. But they, unhappy wretches! persevered in their sin, and wearied themselves in vain to find the door.

Ver. 12—22. Lot rescued from destruction.—The angels now disclose their errand, and Lot had sufficient evidence of their real character in the miracles just wrought: and notwithstanding the very aggravating conduct they had now witnessed, they gave Lot the opportunity of warning any of the inhabitants with whom his family might stand connected. Lot therefore character of travellers, they preferred the open street to any house; but as Lot pressed them vehemently, and they knew him to be a righteous man not yet willing to make themselves known, they consented to take shelter under his hospitable roof.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Out at the door.—[Two words are here used for door: the first patach, which is the aperture or opening of the door, the door-way, at which Lot went out; the latter, deleth, the leaf of the door, which he shut after him when out.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. With blindness.—[The word sanpervim, rendered "blindness," and which occurs only here and in 2 Kings vi. 18. is supposed to denote delusions, deceptions, or confusions of sight from excessive light; being derived nere any besides? son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, bring them out of this place:

13 For we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD; and the LORD hath sent us to destroy it.

14 And Lot went out, and spake unto his sons-in-law, which married his daughters, and said, <sup>k</sup>Up, get ye out of this place; for the LORD will destroy this city: but he seemed as one that mocked <sup>i</sup>unto his sons-in-law.

15 ¶ And when the morning arose, then the Angels hastened Lot, saying, Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters which <sup>m</sup>are here, lest thou be consumed in the <sup>n</sup>iniquity of the city.

16 And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters, the LORD being merciful <sup>o</sup>unto him; and they brought him forth, and set him without the city.

17 And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, Escape <sup>p</sup>for thy life: <sup>q</sup>look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

18 And Lot said unto them, Oh, not so, my Lord!

19 Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast <sup>r</sup>magnified thy mercy, which thou hast showed unto me in saving my life: and I cannot escape to the <sup>s</sup>mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die.

hastens to his sons-in-law, who were contracted to his daughters, and about to marry them; but they laugh him to scorn, as the inhabitants of the old world did Noah, and he "seemed to them as one that mocked;" or as we should say in familiar language, "as one that was making game of them," they saw no signs of the event, and therefore paid no attention to his warning.

Early in the following morning, while Lot was lingering, probably with the hope of persuading some others to accompany him, the angels laid hold of his hand, and upon those of his wife and daughters, and hurried them out of the city and through the plain, on their way to the opposite mountain, with a strict charge not to stop, nor look behind them, till they gained the mountain. Lot, however, demurred at this: whether his strength began to fail, and he feared he could not reach the spot; or whether he considered it as the haunt of wild beasts, and was afraid of being devoured, he begged most earnestly that he might rest at a small town called Bela, but whose name he appears not to have recollected, and therefore called it "a little one," or Zoar; probably a very small place, and ever after known by that name. In this request he was indulged, and entered the town (or village rather) in safety with his two daughters soon after sun-rise: and "the sun was risen upon the earth when Lot entered Zoar." Before we proceed farther, however, we may indulge in a few practical reflections. 1. Lot must now see the folly of his conduct, in fixing his residence among the sinners of the plain. Temporal advantage should not be our only consideration on those occasions. The moral contamination of great and gay cities is often to be dreaded. 2. When we flee for our lives, we should not stop by the way. When a temptation is presented, we are very apt to compromise our duty, and say, "Is it not a little one?" There is, however, no satisfaction while we stop short of the divine command. Lot had soon to move again, as we shall see in the next paragraph. Cyril, of Alexandria, makes this an emblem of the slow progress which some make in the Christian life. They set out, perhaps, with much zeal, but they soon weary, and instead of by Schultens, who is followed by Parkhurst, from the Arabic, sana, to pour forth, diffuse, and nor, light. Dr. Geddes, to the same purpose, thinks it is compounded of the Arabic, sana, which signifies a flash, or light: if so, the blindness was caused by a flash of lightning, and might have been only temporary. The Targum, in both places where it occurs, render it by eruptions, or flashes of light, or as Mercer in Robertson, explains the Chalde word, irradiations.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Sons in law, which married his daughters.—It is not known whether Lot had more daughters than the two which escaped with him; if he had, they must have perished with their husbands in the city; if not, they could only have been betrothed, for they were still maidens. So Ainsworth renders it, "his sons in law, that were taking his daughters;" and so it seems generally understood.

Ver. 24. The Lord rained . . . from the Lord.—That is, from himself. This is a Hebrew idiom, the noun for the pronoun. See 1 Kings viii. 50. xii. 21. Brimstone.—[The word rendered "brimstone," (q. d. brennestone, or brinstone, id est burning-stone), is always rendered by the XX. "sulphur," and seems to denote a melioratus inflammable matter. "We may safely suppose," says Dr. A. Clarke, "that a shower of nitrous particles might have been precipitated from the atmosphere, here, as in many other places, called heaven, 20 Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little <sup>one</sup>: Oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall <sup>live</sup>.

21 And he said unto him, See, I have accepted <sup>thee</sup> concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken.

22 Haste thee, escape thither; for <sup>I</sup> cannot do any thing till thou be come thither. Therefore the name of the city was called <sup>Zoar</sup>.

23 ¶ The sun was <sup>r</sup>risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar.

24 Then the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone <sup>and</sup> fire from the LORD out of heaven;

25 And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew <sup>upon</sup> the ground.

26 ¶ But his wife looked back from behind him, and she became <sup>a</sup> pillar of salt.

27 ¶ And Abraham got up early in the morning to the place where <sup>he</sup> stood before the LORD:

28 And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the <sup>smoke</sup> of a furnace.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the <sup>overthrow</sup>, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelled.

30 ¶ And Lot went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the <sup>mountain</sup>, and his two daughters with one they have many stoppages, before they reach the mountain, which none of us indeed should do, were it not that "the Lord is merciful unto us."

Ver. 23—30. The destruction of Sodom.—It is here stated, as we have just remarked, that the sun rose with its usual beauty on the day that Sodom was destroyed: and such is said to have been the case at Lisbon on the day of the dreadful earthquake, and on other similar occasions—so little room is there for reliance on the appearances of nature, which are under the absolute control of the Creator. The scene of destruction is thus described:—"Then the Lord rained brimstone and fire from the Lord (himself) out of heaven." This has been variously explained. Some have taken it for a volcano, which might answer sufficiently to the description: but M. Chateaubriand, who has recently examined it, can find no appearance of a crater. Dr. Boothroyd says, "sulphur and fire mean burning sulphur, or a dreadful storm of thunder and lightning. (Ps. xi. 5. Ezek. xxxviii. 22.) Lightning is usually called the fire of God. (2 Kings i. 12. Job i. 16.) The plain of Sodom was full of bituminous pits, which being kindled by the lightning, must have produced the most dreadful conflagration. This plain, Josephus informs us, was 72 miles long and 19 broad. It became, in consequence of this destruction, a receptacle of water, now called the Dead Sea, or the Sea of Sodom." The Jordan enters this sea, or lake, "with a volume of waters from two to three hundred feet in width, with a current so violent, that an expert swimmer found it impracticable to cross it. The Jordan is turbid, with a yellow current: the lake is the colour and taste of sea water, very buoyant, and of extraordinary density; and, on its analysis, is found to contain more than a fourth of its weight in salts." It is also probable that this tremendous conflagration was accompanied with an earthquake, which at the same time sunk the city of Sodom, and the other cities, into a mine of bitumen beneath them, and it is strongly suspected that there are still subterranean fires, which feed the lake with bitumen to this day.

Ver. 26. A pillar of salt.—[Tarrying too long in the plain, she was most probably struck dead with lightning, and stiffened in the place where she stood: while the nitro-sulphureous matter which descended, or the asphaltized, she became a salso-bituminous mass or pillar.]—Bagster. The particle of comparison may be understood as in Hosea vii. 8, and elsewhere. Dr. Boothroyd supplies it, "like a pillar of salt." Josephus says he saw it; and some have given a strange description of it. The fact is, that some travellers are easily deceived, and others delight in deceiving them.

Ver. 28. The smoke of a furnace.—Many of the profane historians refer to this event. Tacitus says there are some remains of cities on this spot, (the lake Asphaltus, or Dead Sea) which were formerly destroyed by lightning. Strabo says, "there are many indications that fire has been over this country." Philo, Pliny, Diodorus Siculus, and others, agree in this tradition, but many circumstances related by them are now found to be fictitious, though it is possible some alteration may have taken place since their time, particularly as to its extent, and the quantity of bitumen it produces, which has been long an article of commerce.

him; for he feared to dwell in Zoar: and he dwelt in a cave, he, and his two daughters.

31 ¶ And the first-born said unto the younger, Our father is old, and there is not a man in the earth to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth:

32 Come, let us make our father drink wine, and we will lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

33 And they made their father drink wine that <sup>h</sup> night: and the first-born went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

34 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the first-born said unto the younger, Behold, I lay yesternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

35 And they made their father drink wine that night also: and the younger arose, and lay with him; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

36 Thus were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father.

37 And the first-born bare a son, and called his name Moab: the same is the father of the Moabites unto this day.

38 And the younger, she also bare a son, and called his name Ben-ammi: the same is the father of the <sup>h</sup> children of Ammon unto this day.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Abraham sojourneth at Gerar, 2 denieth his wife, and Joseph her: 14 Abimelech restoreth her.

AND Abraham journeyed from thence toward the south country, and dwelled between Kadesh and <sup>a</sup> Shur, and sojourned in <sup>b</sup> Gerar.

2 And Abraham said of Sarah his wife, She is my sister: and Abimelech king of Gerar sent and took Sarah.

3 But <sup>d</sup> God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and said to him, Behold, thou art but a dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken: for she is a <sup>e</sup> man's wife.

4 But Abimelech had not come near her: and he said, LORD, <sup>f</sup> wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself, said, He is my brother: In the <sup>g</sup> integrity <sup>h</sup> of my heart and innocency of my hands have I done this.

6 And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for I also <sup>i</sup> withheld thee from sinning <sup>j</sup> against me: therefore suffered I thee not to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he <sup>k</sup> shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live: and if thou restore her

Lot and his daughters, we have seen, reached Zoar; but his wife, who was probably a native of the city, perished by the way. We well know the charge given against looking back; but this unhappy woman did more, for she appears to have halted by the way. The 26th verse informs us, "His wife looked back from behind him," which seems to imply, that when the conveying angels left them, this poor woman either stopped or turned back. This is also inferred from our Lord's practical inference from the fact: when speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, he says, "He that is in the field, let him not return back. Remember Lot's wife." The fault of this woman was not, therefore, a look of pity, as some may have pretended, nor a look of anxiety for her kindred left behind; but an actual stopping before she was out of danger, with a design, of returning after the storm was over, in which act she was overtaken by it, and encrusted like "a pillar of salt." Whether her remains might not continue for some ages, as a monument to warn others against disobedience, we pretend not to say; but certainly many of the tales relative to this subject, prove only the credulity of travellers and the imposition of their informers. No remains, however, can be now found.

It is a very interesting circumstance here related, that on the following morning Abraham went early to the place where he stood before the Lord, and pleaded for the devoted cities. "He beheld, and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace."

The next circumstance of which we are informed is, that "Lot went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountain, for he feared to dwell in Zoar." The cause of this is not named, except in the verse just quoted, where we find "the smoke of the country was like the smoke of a furnace;" which, when the wind blew toward Zoar, was probably not only offensive and unhealthy, but carried with it fragments of bitumen and sulphur, that alarmed him with the danger of another storm. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." (Heb. x. 31.) We also see here the folly of choosing for ourselves: had Lot submitted, and fled to the mountain at once, though he might have suffered a little more fatigue, he would have avoided many disagreeable circumstances, and the necessity of a second removal; and this was not the first instance of his suffering from an injudicious choice. (See Remarks on chap. xiii. 1—13.)

Ver. 31—38. Conduct of Lot's daughters. Many conjectures have been formed concerning the motives which induced Lot's daughters to this most atrocious conduct; and many excuses have been attempted. It is not indeed improbable that the desire of having children, of which they seemed to have no other prospect, was one powerful inducement; but there is little reason to think that they had any expectations of being the ancestors of the promised Seed, for that distinction was expressly limited to the seed of Abraham. The truth seems to be, that, though preserved from gross crimes, they had been accustomed in Sodom to hear and witness wickedness, till their consciences were become unfeeling, and their sense of shame blunted. No sufficient excuse can be made either for them or for Lot; and, indeed, scarcely any account can be given of the transaction but this, that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?"—After this we read no more in the history, of Lot, or of his daughters. Peter's testimony satisfies us, that he lived to repent; yet there is no proof that his daughters did. But he died under a dark cloud; all his substance and part of his family perished in Sodom: his wife, in looking back, lost her life; and it might almost have been wished, that his daughters had been taken away too, that his and their sin and shame might have been prevented: for, though he was not "written childless," his posterity were the monuments of his reproach, and their very names perpetuated the memory of their disgraceful origin.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—18. Abraham's visit to Gerar.—It seems most unaccountable, that a man whose character for integrity stood so high as Abraham's did, should the second time be guilty of a prevarication, by which he had already been involved in so much danger, and for which he was so severely reproved. But it appears by Abraham's explanation to Abimelech, that he acted systematically wrong; for he had enjoined on Sarah, before he left his father's house, (ver. 13.) "at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother." This, though literally true, was practically false, because it led to the idea that she was a single woman. It was also more criminal in the second instance than in the former; not only as a repetition of

Ver. 31. And the first-born said, &c.—We have here another instance of the singular impartiality of sacred history, which offers no palliation, no apology, for the sins of its best characters, of which class certainly Lot was, though we can say but little for his daughters. What stratagem they practised to intoxicate their father we are not told. Their father, who had retired with them into some solitary cave, was the only man in the land (so adv possible) to whom they could have access; they therefore, probably, mixed some intoxicating and inflammatory drugs in his usual beverage, to gain their wicked ends; and their unhappy success affixed their names to the "oil of infamy for ever."

Ver. 32. Let us make our father drink wine.—But it may be asked, whence did they get their wine? It is probable that they brought some provisions with them out of Sodom, and more might be procured in Zoar. It is even possible that some of Lot's flocks and herds might have followed him, which were feeding at a distance from Sodom, and would naturally fly before the storm. This, however, is conjectural; and we hear no more of Lot after this event, which, it may be feared, brought down his gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

Ver. 37. She called his name Moab:—that is, "waters of the father."—Calmet. The "crooked policy" of these women was not only criminal in itself, but led to the most unhappy circumstances. Moab was a great, but an idolatrous nation, and one of the bitterest enemies to Abraham's descendants.

Ver. 38. Ben-ammi clearly means "the son of my people." If the sisters gave these names in concert, the one records their crime, and the other their motive. The children were born in incest, the issue of their mother's father; yet their motive was not, as far as appears, merely lust; but an inordinate desire, by means however improper, to preserve their father's family; to save up sons to perpetuate the race; though, unhappily, the children of Ammon were as idolatrous as those of Moab.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1. Gerar.—Gerar was a city of Arabia Petraea, under a king of the Philistines, 25 miles from Eleutheropolis, beyond Daroma, in the south of Judah. From chapter x. 19, it appears to have been situated in the angle where the south and west sides of Canaan met, and to have been not far from Gaza. Jerome, in his Hebrew Traditions on Genesis, says, from Gerar to Jerusalem was three days' journey. There was a wood near Gerar, spoken of by Theodoret; and a brook, (chap. xxvi. 26.) on which was a monastery, noticed by Saenonen.—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Prophet.—[The word nabi, rendered a prophet, not only signifies one who foretells future events, but also an intercessor, instructor. See 1 Sam. x. 1 Kings xviii., and 1 Cor. xiv. 4. The title was also given to men eminent for eloquence and literary abilities: hence Aaron, because he was the spokesman of Moses to the Egyptian king, is called a prophet, Ex. iv. 16. vi. 1. and Epimenides, a heathen poet, is also so styled by St. Paul, Tit. i. 11.]—Bagster.

not, know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou and all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid.

9 Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, What hast thou done unto us? and what have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me and on my kingdom a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me that ought not to be done.

10 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing?

11 And Abraham said, Because I thought, Surely the fear of God is not in this place; and they will slay me for my wife's sake.

12 And yet indeed she is my sister; she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother: and she became my wife.

13 And it came to pass, when God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto her, This is thy kindness which thou shalt show unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother.

14 And Abimelech took sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and women-servants, and gave them unto Abraham, and restored him Sarah his wife.

15 And Abimelech said, Behold, my land is before thee: dwell where it pleaseth thee.

16 And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes the offence, but from the peculiar circumstances of Sarah, who was now pregnant with Isaac. It was a sort of infatuation for which we cannot account, but by admitting that it was suffered, in order to elucidate the true character of Abimelech, and to show the overruling power of Providence. "Man's wisdom (says Fuller) leads him into a pit, and God's wisdom must draw him out."

Abraham, in journeying farther towards the south, came to Gerar, which was a royal city, in which reigned Abimelech; and as it appears to have been the custom at that period to notice every woman that came into the country, and to bring all those who possessed any personal charms to the king's harem, so Sarah, whose personal attractions continued to the last, and who probably appeared much younger than she was, had that honour done her.

If we inquire into the motive of Abraham, we shall find his conduct proceeding rather from a constitutional timidity, than from any rational principle. He knew he was doing wrong; he knew he had already suffered for doing wrong, and yet he had not the fortitude to act otherwise. This, however, will make the faith of Abraham appear, in other instances, more extraordinary; and will show, that he was indebted for it, not to any natural courage or strength of mind, but alone to the grace of God. We should trace all our failings to ourselves, and all our graces to their divine Author.

It appears, also, that Abimelech was a very different character from what Abraham had anticipated; for when the king inquired what he had seen to warrant his fears, he replied, "I thought surely the fear of God is not in this place." This shows how liable we, who cannot search the heart, are to be mistaken in our judgment of characters and motives—"God seeth not as man seeth." (1 Sam. xvi. 7.) We may remark, however, of Abimelech, that he seems to entertain no doubt of his right to all the unmarried women that come into his country; nor, perhaps, did he ever question a right so generally acknowledged. This may seem strange, but there are some Europeans, and others, and even professed Christians, who cannot be convinced but that they have a right to all the sons and daughters of Africa, provided they do not themselves steal them, though they buy them of "men-stealers." Alas! how hardened is the hu-

Ver. 12. Daughter of my father.—(Ebn Batril, in his annals, among other ancient traditions, has preserved the following: "Terah first married Yoma, by whom he had Abraham; afterwards he married Tehevia, by whom he had Sarah.")—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Thousand pieces of silver.—[What these pieces were is not certain; but it is probable they were shekels, as it is so understood by the Targums; and the Septuagint renders it didrachma, by which the Hebrew shekel is rendered in chap. xiii. 15, 16.]—Bagster. He (or it) shall be to thee, &c. —This very difficult passage has much perplexed translators, and been variously rendered. Atinsworth says, "Behold, he (or it) is to thee a covering of the eyes, (a veil,) which was a sign of subjection to a husband; and consequently, that she was a married woman." The Chaldee and Greek both speak of this as a covering of honour; and from the amount given, it is supposed to be intended to include veils also for her female attendants. So Boothroyd, (who follows Geddes,) "to purchase veils for thee, and for all unto all that are with thee, and with all other: thus she was reproved.

17 ¶ So Abraham prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his maid-servants; and they bare children.

18 For the Lord had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah, Abraham's wife.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Isaac is born. 9 Hagar and Ishmael are cast forth. 15 Hagar in distress. 17 The angel comforteth her. 22 Abimelech's covenant with Abraham.

AND the Lord visited Sarah as he had said, and the Lord did unto Sarah as he had spoken.

2 For Sarah conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time of which God had spoken to him.

3 And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, Isaac.

4 And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac, being eight days old, as God had commanded him.

5 And Abraham was a hundred years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him.

6 ¶ And Sarah said, God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me.

7 And she said, Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? for I have borne him a son in his old age.

8 And the child grew, and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned.

9 ¶ And Sarah saw the son of Hagar the man heart to sins, when once they become fashionable or common!

It should seem, that much of Abraham's fault lay in his vanity: he was vain of his wife's beauty. Abimelech reproves him very delicately for this; for, besides giving him servants and cattle, part of which were no doubt for sacrifice, he adds to Sarah, "Behold, I have given thy brother," alluding to their equivocation, "a thousand pieces of silver: Behold, he is to thee a covering of the eyes." Which seems more correctly rendered, "It shall be [to procure] thee a covering for the eyes (that is, a veil) unto all that are with thee;" or, in the English idiom, "unto all with whom you converse," as it appears was the custom with married women. The last clause may also be very differently rendered, as affording a reproof to both—"and in all things be straight forward;" or, as the Greek reads it, "speak the truth;" that is, avoid all tortuous equivocations and evasions of the truth.

Lastly, we may see what secret and mysterious ways God has of counteracting the designs of man. "In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction, that he may withdraw man from his purpose"—a remark that applies exactly to Abimelech, and no doubt to many others. The king was plunging into sin, when God "chastened him with pain upon his bed," and kept "back his soul from the pit." (Job xxxiii. 15-19.)

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1-21. Isaac born, and Hagar and Ishmael banished.—This chapter includes several incidents, both important in themselves, and profitable for remark. 1. The birth of Isaac, the son of laughter; for it was in consequence of both his parents expressing their feelings in that way, that he received his name. Sarah, who before had laughed with incredulity, laughed now with joy. "God (said she) hath made me laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me." And the more fully to show that there was no imposition practised, (as sometimes has been,) we are told Sarah suckled the child herself. Abraham, in the mean time, having entered into the covenant of circumcision, was careful to initiate his son and heir into that covenant on the appointed day; and when the time came for his being weaned, a feast, as usual, was made on that occathat are with thee." He adds, in a note, "that married women wore veils, when they went abroad, of a peculiar kind or colour, is certain." But Sarah, either from her own vanity or her husband's, or rather from fear, had neglected this proper mark of distinction.

Dr. A. Clarke reads the whole verse thus: "And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given thy brother a thousand shekels of silver; behold it is (or let it be) to thee a covering of the eyes, (to procure a veil,) with regard to all those who are with thee; and to all (or in all things) speak the truth." The Editor of Calmet adds: "The word Casui, 'covering,' used in this passage, implies to wrap up close, to conceal totally: so Tamar concealed her face from Judah, Gen. xxxviii. 14."—Frag. clix.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 8. Weaned.—[The word wean is from the Anglo-Saxon awendan, which signifies "to convert, transfer from one thing to another," which is the exact import of the original Hebrew word; and hence to turn a child from the breast to receive another kind of aliment.]—Bagster.

Egyptian,<sup>a</sup> which she had borne unto Abraham, mocking.

19 Wherefore she said unto Abraham, Cast out this bond-woman and her son: for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

11 And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight,<sup>b</sup> because of his son.

12 ¶ And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad, and because of thy bond-woman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice: for <sup>c</sup>in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

13 And also of the son of the bond-woman will I make <sup>d</sup>a nation, because he is thy seed.

14 And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, putting it on her shoulder, and the child, and sent <sup>e</sup>her away: and she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba.

15 And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs.

16 And she went, and sat her down over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow-shot: for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lifted up her voice, and wept.

17 And <sup>f</sup>God heard the voice of the lad: and sion. But where is the cup of joy that has not a spice of bitterness? While all were rejoicing, and perhaps laughing, with this son of Abraham's old age, Ishmael also laughed; but it was in an envious and malignant spirit. "And Sarah saw the son of Hagar, the Egyptian, which she had borne unto Abraham, mocking," or rather laughing, (for it is the same word so often applied to Isaac,) which, as it was evidently in derision of her son, exceedingly incensed her, and she determined that neither he nor his mother should reside any longer in the house. It is well known, that the domestic slaves of the mistress are always at her disposal: Sarah, therefore, said unto Abraham, apparently with much haughtiness and ill-temper, "Cast out this bond-woman and her son: for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac. And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son," that is, Ishmael. For Abraham appears to have had great affection for him, and, therefore, before the birth of Isaac, pleaded with the Lord, "Oh that Ishmael might live before thee!" Religion does not call upon us to renounce our natural affections, though we must sometimes sacrifice their object to the divine command, as in this instance, and the still more painful one that follows, even Isaac.

2. Let us notice the departure of the bond-woman and her son. The Lord now appears to Abraham; (probably in a dream,) and comforts him with the renewed assurance, that though in Isaac should his seed be called, yet Ishmael should not be discarded from his care. "Of the son of the bond-woman will I also make a great nation, because he is thy seed." Abraham, therefore, arises early in the morning, probably before Sarah was stirring, and having provided her with bread and water, that is, as many necessities as she was able to carry, he committed her to the hand of Providence, and she set off for the wilderness of Beersheba, in her way to Egypt. Here a scene occurs of exquisite tenderness and feeling. Their bottle of water was exhausted, together with the child's strength, and no water could be found. She, therefore, laid the boy beneath a bush, to shade him from the sun, and went to a little distance to sit and watch him. She could not stop with the child to see him die, and yet she could not leave him to be devoured by the beasts of the wilderness.

"A more finished picture of distress (says Fuller) we shall seldom see. The bitter cries and flowing tears of the afflicted mother, with the groans of her dying son, are heard, and seen, and felt, in a manner as though we were present. And wherefore do they cry? Had there been any ear to hear them, any eye to pity them, or hand to help them, these cries and tears might have been mingled with hope; but, as far as human aid was concerned, there was no place for this. Whether any of them were directed to heaven, we know not. We could have wished, and should almost have expected, that those of the mother, at least, would have been so; for surely she could not have forgotten Him who had seen and delivered her from a similar condition about sixteen years before, and who had then promised to the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? <sup>o</sup>Fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

18 Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thy hand: for <sup>p</sup>I will make him a great nation.

19 And God opened her <sup>q</sup>eyes, and she saw a well of water: and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink.

20 And God was with the <sup>r</sup>lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an <sup>s</sup>archer.

21 And he dwelt in the wilderness of <sup>t</sup>Paran: and his mother <sup>u</sup>took him a wife out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And it came to pass at that time, that Abimelech and Phichol the chief captain of his host spake unto Abraham, saying, God is with thee <sup>v</sup>in all that thou doest:

23 Now therefore <sup>w</sup>swear unto me here by God, <sup>x</sup>that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son: but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned.

24 And Abraham said, I will swear.

25 And Abraham reproved Abimelech because of a well of water, which Abimelech's servants <sup>y</sup>had violently taken away.

26 And Abimelech said, I wot not who hath

"multiply her seed," and to cause this child to "dwell in the presence of all his brethren." (See chap. xvi. 7, &c.) But whether any of these expressions of distress were directed to God or not, the groans of the distressed reached his ear. "God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? Fear not, for God hath heard the voice of the lad, where he is. Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand, for I will make of him a great nation."

Her eyes being now lifted up, probably to see the angel that spoke with her, she saw a spring of water, in her case the most desirable of all earthly objects; and immediately filling her bottle, she gave the lad to drink, and he revived, and grew, and became an archer, or hunter, and dwelt in the wilderness of Paran, thus providing both for himself and for his mother; and when arrived to maturity, his mother took him a wife out of her native country, the land of Egypt.

We must not leave this section without remarking, that St. Paul hath, in the 4th chapter of his Epistle to the Galatians, allegorized the history of Sarah and Hagar, Isaac and Ishmael, in a manner which will be explained in its proper place; in the mean time, the latter part of that chapter (ver. 19—31.) may be read as an appendix to our remarks on this history, though it seems unnecessary to transcribe it here.

Ver. 22—34. Abraham visited by Abimelech.—The latter had received a report of Abraham's growing prosperity, and probably of the birth of his son Isaac. He had seen that God was with him, and he had probably heard of the promises of future greatness which had been vouchsafed to him. He therefore proposes a treaty of perpetual amity, to which Abraham as readily assents, and the covenant is ratified by oaths and sacrifices in the usual form. A dispute that had occurred between the servants of Abraham and Abimelech is amicably adjusted, and the well which had occasioned the dispute and this adjustment of it, is called Beersheba, that is, "the well of the oath," according to our marginal rendering; or, according to others, "the well of the seven," on account of the seven ewe lambs given to ratify it; for the word Sheba will bear either rendering, though we prefer the former.

In the case of Abraham and Lot, we remarked how often differences arise in families through the misconduct of servants, and here is another instance in the case of Abraham and Abimelech. A well may seem to us a trifle to dispute about, but in some parts of the East it is equal to an estate with us. Hence springs and rivers of water, are made the emblems of salvation and eternal life.

Abraham having now taken up his residence in this place, planted a grove of trees, and having erected an altar there, called on the name of the Lord. This erection of a grove was in itself a thing both innocent and commendable, until it became abused to purposes of idolatry; and afterwards, when God fixed his tabernacle in Zion, other places of public sacrifice were interdicted.

Ver. 14. Beer-Sheba.—[So called when Moses wrote; but not before Abraham's covenant with Abimelech, ver. 21. Such instances of the figure prolepsis are not unfrequent in the Pentateuch.]—BAGSTER.

Ver. 23. Now therefore swear, &c.—When Bruce was at Shekh Ammer, he entreated the protection of the governor in prosecuting his journey. Speaking of the people who were assembled together at this time in the house, he says, "the great people among them came, and after joining hands, repeated a kind of prayer, of about two minutes long, by which they declared themselves and their children accursed, if ever they lifted up their hands against me in the tell, (or field in the desert,) or in case that I or mine should fly to done this thing: neither didst thou tell me, neither yet heard I of it, but to-day.

27 And Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech: and both of them <sup>c</sup> made a covenant.

28 And Abraham set seven ewe-lambs of the flock by themselves.

29 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What <sup>c</sup> mean these seven ewe-lambs which thou hast set by themselves?

30 And he said, For these seven ewe-lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that they may be <sup>a</sup> a witness unto me that I have digged this well.

31 Wherefore he called that place <sup>c</sup> Beer-sheba; because there they swore <sup>b</sup> both of them.

32 Thus they made a covenant at Beer-sheba: then Abimelech rose up, and Pichol the chief captain of his host, and they returned into the land of the Philistines.

33 ¶ And Abraham planted a <sup>d</sup> grove <sup>c</sup> in Beer-sheba, and <sup>d</sup> called there on the name of the LORD, the everlasting <sup>e</sup> God.

34 And Abraham sojourned in the Philistines' land many days.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Abraham is commanded to offer Isaac: 3 he giveth proof of his faith and obedience. 11 The angel saith him. 15 Abraham is blessed again. 20 The generation of Nahor unto Hebræah.

AND it came to pass after these things, that God did tempt <sup>a</sup> Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham: And he said, <sup>b</sup> Behold, here I am.

2 And he said, Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of <sup>c</sup> Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of.

3 ¶ And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt-offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him.

4 Then on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off.

5 And Abraham said unto his young men,

"And Abraham called there on the name of JEHOVAH, the everlasting (or eternal) God." This term is here first used in Scripture, and its first application is to Deity—the eternal Being. In subsequent instances, however, it often refers to a period, limited indeed, but whose limits are unknown. Thus it was applied to the duration of the Mosaic economy and dispensation; but in its application to Deity, it must always be taken absolutely; for when the greatest minds labour to their utmost, they cannot "stretch a thought half way to God."

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—24. Abraham offered up his son Isaac.—The opening of this narrative informs us, "God did tempt Abraham." Dr. A. Clarke remarks, that though the word tempt (from tento) signifies no more than to prove or try, yet, as it is now generally used to imply solicitation to evil, . . .

them for refuge, if they did not protect us at the risk of their lives, their families, or their fortunes; or, as they emphatically expressed it, to the death of the last male child among them."—Orient. Customs.

Ver. 3. A grove :—(Or, tree. Am. viii. 14. The original, eshel, has been variously translated, a grove, a plantation, an orchard, a cultivated field, and an oak; but it probably denotes a kind of tamarisk, as it is rendered by Gesentus, the same with the Arabic athl. It may, however, be observed, that the oak was venerated by many nations, as the Greeks, Romans, Gauls, and Britons, as fully shown by Parkhurst.]—Bagster. Called on the name.—[Dr. Shuckford justly contends, that the expression rendered "he called on the name," signifies "he invoked in the name;" and it seems to be used, where the true worshippers of God offered their prayers, in the name of the true Mediator; or where the idolaters offered their prayers in the name of false ones, (1 Kings xviii. 26.) for as the true worshippers had but one God and one Lord, so the false worshippers had gods many and lords many, 1 Cor. viii. 6.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1. Tempt is here meant to prove, and is an essential to the illustration of moral character. It forces not, whilst it affords a noble opportunity for man to show his allegiance to God. But Satan tempts to seduce—to destroy. Land of Moriah.—The temple was built on Mount Moriah, which therefore Maimonides and others take to be the place intended.—Boothroyd.

But many Christians consider Calvary to be the spot, according to their interpretation of Jehovah Jireh. "In the (or this) mount the Lord shall be seen"—A. Clarke. It is very possible that the residence of Melchizedek, (see Note on chap. xiv. 17.) the threshing floor of Araunah, (2 Sam. xxiv. 18.) and the mount of crucifixion, were all included in the land of Moriah.

6 And Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering, and <sup>d</sup> laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife: and they went both of them together.

7 And Isaac spake unto Abraham his father, and said, My father: and he <sup>c</sup> said, Here am I, my son. And he said, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the <sup>c</sup> lamb for a burnt-offering?

8 And Abraham said, My son, God will provide himself a lamb <sup>c</sup> for a burnt-offering: so they went both of them together.

9 And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order, and bound <sup>b</sup> Isaac his son, and <sup>i</sup> laid him on the altar upon the wood.

10 And Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son.

11 And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I.

12 And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou any thing unto <sup>b</sup> him: for now I know that thou fearest God, <sup>b</sup> seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me.

13 And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his <sup>m</sup> horns: And Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son.

14 And Abraham called the name of that place <sup>a</sup> Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, In the mount of the Lord it shall be <sup>a</sup> seen.

15 ¶ And the Angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven <sup>p</sup> the second time,

16 And said, By myself have I <sup>a</sup> sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son:

17 That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the

it would be well to avoid it here." For St. James saith, "God cannot be tempted to evil, neither tempteth he any man." (James i. 13.) But God proved or tried Abraham, whether he could sacrifice to him the dearest object of his heart. The narrative itself is at once so beautifully simple and pathetic, that we shall not attempt to heighten or to embellish it; but only offer two or three remarks upon the conduct and probable views of Abraham.

Abraham had been trained gradually to a principle of implicit obedience. He had been called to leave his native country, and go into a land unknown. When he arrived in that land, he was required to believe that, after a few hundred years, it should be peopled by his posterity, which should be innumerable, though as yet he had no child, and his wife was past the time for bear-

Ver. 5. I and the lad will go yonder.—Rather the young man, for it is the same word applied to the two young men who remained with the ass. Joseph reckons Isaac to have now been twenty-five years of age.

Ver. 7. My father, where is the lamb?—There is something exquisitely touching in this question, and indeed in the whole narrative.

Ver. 12. Lay not thine hand upon the lad.—It has been often objected, by certain Deistical writers, that this command of offering up Isaac, gives countenance to human sacrifices; but, on the other hand, it has been asked, "If the God of the Jews had approved of such sacrifices, would he have stopped the hand of Abraham, who was offering up his son to him? Satisfied with this trial of his servant's faith and obedience, he forbids him to stretch his arm over so dear a victim, and substitutes another into its place. Does not this conduct, at a time when, according to you, (Voltaire,) the Canaanites were beginning to sacrifice their children to their divinities, show that the God of Abraham did not resemble the gods of these idolaters who delighted to see innocent blood flowing?" Letters of certain Jews.

Ver. 14. Jehovah Jireh.—" (or only) the (or this) mount, the Lord shall be seen."—Dr. A. Clarke and others. See Poole and Ainsworth. That the apostle's words "In a parable," refer to a parabolic representation of Christ's sufferings and death, was maintained by Prof. Wolfius, (Cursæ Philolog.) and is very ably supported by Bp. Warburton.

Ver. 17. Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies.—For gate (or gates) the LXX. read cities; but the sense is much the same; for in fortified places, those who possess the gates of course possess the town also. But as the term seed is here used in the singular, "the gate of his enemies," may it not be referred particularly to him in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed? See Mat. xvi. 18.

stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies;

18 And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice.

19 So Abraham returned unto his young men; and they rose up, and went together to Beer-sheba; and Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba.

20 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that it was told Abraham, saying, Behold, Milcah, she hath also borne children unto thy brother Nahor;

21 Huz his first-born, and Buz his brother, and Kemuel the father of Aram, 22 And Chesed, and Hazo, and Pildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel.

23 And Bethuel begat Rebekah: these eight Milcah did bear to Nahor, Abraham's brother:

24 And his concubine, whose name was Reumah, she bare also Tebah, and Gaham, and Thahash, and Maachah.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 The age and death of Sarah. 3 The purchase of Machpelah, 19 where Sarah was buried.

AND Sarah was a hundred and seven and twenty years old: these were the years of the life of Sarah.

2 And Sarah died in Kirjath-arba; the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan: And Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

ing children. This passes on till Abraham was near a hundred, and Sarah ninety, years old, when procreation must be considered as miraculous. At length, the promised child is born, and reared almost to maturity, and now a command is given to offer him in sacrifice. Thus he was gradually trained to expect and believe in miracles, and to account nothing impossible which the power of God should be employed to effect: there is no doubt, therefore, but he obeyed in the full expectation of an event still more wonderful than the birth of Isaac, namely, that after being sacrificed, he should be raised immediately from the dead. Hence he had said to the young men who had accompanied him, "Abide here with the ass: and I and the lad [Isaac] will go yonder and worship, and come again to you."

For this opinion we have also the authority of the inspired author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, who has these remarkable words: "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: . . . accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead." We seem here to have a full view of the state of Abraham's mind, and it is by this key that we must explain the motives of his conduct; and probably, also, the arguments by which Isaac was rendered content to be the victim, for he was certainly able to resist. "Accounting," reasoning, says Dr. Macknight, "that God was able to raise him from the dead, from whence also he received him, in a figure." (Heb. xi. 17-19.) The latter words appear capable of two senses, which so well harmonize, that we are not willing to exclude either of them. 1st, Abraham accounted God able to raise Isaac from the dead, "from whence, by a figure, (or figuratively,) he also had received him:" for, as the sacred writer had just observed, (verse 12.) he "sprang of one whose body was as good as dead." This, therefore, might well encourage him to believe that the Lord both could and would, to make good his own promise, "raise him from the dead." 2dly, The words may be understood with a farther reference to the Messiah himself: Abraham himself believed God would raise Isaac from the dead, from whence he now received him in a parable, or for a parabolic or typical representation of the death and resurrection of the Son of God, who is supposed to allude to this circumstance when he said, "Abraham desired to see my day, he saw it, and was glad." (John xi. 51.)

This view of the subject affords the best answer to all the Deistical objections against this history. "Where," it has been said, "were Abraham's feelings, that he could kill his son?" His feelings were absorbed in his faith; and his full conviction of immediately receiving him again, "alive from the dead," took away the horror which he must otherwise have felt. "But where were Abraham's principles? did he not know it was an act of murder?" Certainly not; for he was fully satisfied he

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 2. Came to mourn.—[For the convenience of feeding his numerous flocks, it is probable that Abraham had several places of temporary residence: and it is likely, that while he sojourned at Beersheba, as we find he did from ver. 18. of the preceding chapter, Sarah died at Hebron, which was 24 miles distant; and his "coming to mourn," &c. signifies his coming from the former to the latter place.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Stood up.—[From this it seems, that in Abraham's time, persons when they mourned, sat on the ground, as it is certain they did in after ages. Is. xlviii. 1.]—Bagster.

3 ¶ And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying, 4 I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a burying-place with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

5 And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him,

6 Hear us, my lord; thou art a mighty prince among us: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead: none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

7 And Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and entreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar, 9 That he may give me the cave of Machpelah, which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for as much money as it is worth he shall give it me, for a possession of a burying-place amongst you.

10 And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth. And Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the audience of the children of Heth, even of all that went in at the gate of his city, saying,

11 Nay, my lord, hear me: the field give I should bring down the youth alive and uninjured, except only for the moment, and therefore had he left the two young men he brought with him waiting at the bottom of the hill. "So Abraham returned unto his young men," and doubtless Isaac with him; "and they went together to Beersheba," where Abraham dwelt, (ver. 19.)

From the event, it is very clear that God never intended that Abraham should slay his son. God's precepts are not to be taken as the measure of his decrees. God may, as in this case, command what he has not decreed; and he may also, as he did respecting the death of his own Son, decree what he does not command. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of his law." (Deut. xxix. 29.)

The memorial of this event remained in the name given to the scene of the intended sacrifice, which may be either rendered actively, as in the margin, "In the mount the Lord will provide;" that is, in all cases of extremity the Lord will see or provide for the exigencies of his people, as he did the ram for a burnt-offering; or it may be taken passively, "In the (or this) mount the Lord will be seen;" and then the words will be a prediction of the sufferings of Christ on or about that spot: for "the land of Moriah" probably included all the mountains on which Jerusalem was built.

The narrative closes with another confirmation of God's covenant with Abraham, delivered in a voice from heaven, and confirmed by the oath of God: "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee," &c. which promise concludes with the crowning blessing of all, "In thy seed," that is, Christ, as an inspired commentator explains it, "shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." (Gal. iii. 16.)

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1-20. Death and burial of Sarah.—Dr. Clarke remarks, that "Sarah is the only woman in the sacred writings whose age, death, and burial, are distinctly noted;" and, certainly, though not without her faults, she merited an honourable distinction, and is therefore enrolled also in the list of worthies in the Epistle to the Hebrews. "Through faith also Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised." (Heb. xi. 11.)

Abraham also discovers a suitable regard to the object of his affection: he came to her tent to mourn and weep for her; and afterwards he rises and addresses the sons of Heth, offering to purchase a sepulchre wherein to bury her. In this treaty we may notice the courtesy of the children of Heth, though Cana-

Abimelech interprets the expression to mean, not only "a mighty," but "a holy ruler"—preferred and advanced of God." So Abimelech acknowledged that God was with Abraham, chap. xxi. 22.

Ver. 10. Dwelt among—[or sitting, as the word frequently denotes, among the children of Heth, at the gate of the city, where all public business was transacted. Ephron, though probably a chief man, might have been personally unknown to Abraham; but now he answers for himself, making a free tender of the field and cave to Abraham, in the presence of all the people, which amounted to a legal conveyance of all the property to the Patriarch.]—Bagster.

thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; in the presence of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee, hear me: I will give thee money; for the field: take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron, and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

17 ¶ And the field of Ephron, <sup>k</sup> which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure

18 Unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of his city.

19 And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

20 And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure <sup>i</sup> unto Abraham for a possession of a burying-place, by the sons of Heth.

CHAPTER XXIV.

anites, and the high respect with which they treat Abraham, as a prince among them, though he calls himself only "a stranger and sojourner." The treaty also appears to be conducted with great decorum, and with all the due forms of those early ages, and paid for on the spot. Dr. Clarke (and not without reason) compares this treaty with the celebrated one between William Penn and the American Indians, for the district of Pennsylvania, as conducted on similar principles, and with like decorum.

The bargain completed, Abraham buries his dead out of his sight, in the cave of the field of Machpelah, and leaves the spot sufficiently ascertained as a family vault or cave. Here also Abraham himself was buried; Isaac and his wife Rebekah; Jacob and his wife Leah, and perhaps others of the family, of whom we have no particular account. (Gen. xxv. 9. xlix. 31. l. 13.) "The Patriarchs hereby (says Ainsworth) testifying their faith in the promises of God, for the inheritance of this land, and of life eternal signified thereby."

Henry also remarks on this circumstance, that the first spot of ground Abraham possessed in Canaan was a burying-place, and, indeed, the only spot: though the whole was assigned to him in reversion by "the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth."

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—27. Abraham sends for a wife for Isaac.—Abraham was now "well stricken in age" being 140

Ver. 15. Four hundred shekels.—"Though the words "is worth" are not in the Text, yet they are clearly implied, and necessarily expressed, to adapt the Hebrew to the English idiom. A shekel, according to the general opinion, was equal in value to about $0.55 of our money; but according to Dr. Prideaux, $0.66; 400 of which, according to the former estimate, would amount to about $222.22; and according to the latter, $266.66. In those early times, money was given in weight; for, it is said, (ver. 16.) that "Abraham weighed," waykal, the silver; or wetach, we find that it was a certain weight which afterwards passed as a current coin; for the word shekel is not only used to denote a piece of silver, but also to weigh. The practice of weighing money is general in Syria, Egypt, and throughout Turkey. No piece, however effaced, is refused there."—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Field of Machpelah.—"The word signifies double, and the Vulgate takes it in the sense of a double cave; though others derive it from the Arabic, as signifying "enclosed, or walled up," to secure it from being plundered.—Calmer's Dict. This appears to have been indeed a secluded spot, in the midst of a grove of trees; and "all the borders around," were probably fences, to keep off cattle, &c. For the primitive modes of conveying land, see also Ruth iv. 7—10. Jer. xxxii. 7—14.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. Well stricken in age.—"The Hebrew phrase, as in the margin, is, "gone into days;" not unlike our expression, "much in years." Ver. 2. Put thy hand under my thigh.—"The same form was required of Joseph by his father Jacob, Gen. xlvii. 29, and seems to refer clearly to the covenant of circumcision, and to the promise that from his loins, or thigh,

2 And Abraham said unto his eldest servant of his house, that ruled <sup>d</sup> over all that he had, Put, <sup>e</sup> I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh

3 And I will make thee swear <sup>f</sup> by the Lord, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that thou shalt not take <sup>g</sup> a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I dwell:

4 But thou shalt go unto my <sup>h</sup> country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

5 And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

6 And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou, that thou bring not my son thither again.

7 The Lord God of heaven, <sup>i</sup> which took me <sup>j</sup> from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, Unto thy seed will I give this land: he shall send his angel <sup>k</sup> before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence.

8 And if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then thou shalt be clear <sup>l</sup> from this my oath; only bring not my son thither again.

9 And the servant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his master, and sware to him concerning that matter.

10 ¶ And the servant took ten camels, of the camels of his master, and departed; (for <sup>m</sup> all the goods of his master were in his hand;) and he arose, and went to <sup>n</sup> Mesopotamia, unto the city of <sup>o</sup> Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to kneel down without the city by a well of water, at the time of the evening, even the time that <sup>p</sup> women go out to draw <sup>q</sup> water:

years old, and became anxious for the settlement of his son Isaac, who was himself forty, and being forbidden from forming any family connexion with the Canaanites, he calls his eldest and highest servant, most probably the faithful Eliezer. Having first enjoined on him an oath, in a form peculiar to the children of circumcision, that he would not select for him a wife of the race of Canaan, he directs him to go to the city of his brother Nahor, in Mesopotamia, and to seek one there among his kindred; but, at all events, he is enjoined by the same oath not to take back Isaac to that country. Abraham at the same time offers up a most devout and affectionate wish for his success: "The Lord God of heaven, which took me from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and which spake unto me, and that sware unto me, saying, Unto thy seed will I give this land; he shall send his angel before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence." There is no subject, perhaps, on which the doctrine of providence is less considered, or prayer for good success less resorted to, than this; nor any on which a reference to the divine being is more suitable and necessary.

Abraham's servant having received his instructions, sets off to Mesopotamia, with an equipage of ten camels, and attendants suitable to the dignity of his master and the importance of his errand. Having arrived there, he prays for divine direction in a manner that we should, perhaps, think presumptuous or en-(meaning the part circumcised,) a numerous posterity should arise. See chap. xlv. 26.

Ver. 4. Take a wife unto my son Isaac.—"A young person in Bengal is like Isaac; he has nothing to do in the choice of his wife. Parents employ others to seek wives for their sons."—Ward's Hindoos.

So among the ancient Greeks, Achilles being offered his choice of the three daughters of Agamemnon, said his father Peleus would give him a wife. Ver. 7. Send his angel. See Exod. xxiii. 20.

Ver. 11. He made his camels to kneel down.—Dr. Shaw thus describes the manner of his resting at night: "Our camels were made to kneel down in a circle about us, with their faces looking from us, and their respective loads, or saddles, placed behind them."—Perece to Travels.

"The time that women go out to draw water."—Margin, that "women which draw water go out." Rawolf, a German, who visited these countries two centuries and a half ago, stopping at Orfa, says, "This town is supposed by some to have been formerly called Haran, from which the holy patriarch, with Sarah and Lot, removed;" and mentions a well, still called Abraham's well, where his servant first met Rebekah, and of which he drank. Niebuhr, however, places Haran two days' journey S. W. from Orfa, where he found this well, and drank of it; so little certainty is there of the situation of these holy places. The circumstance, however, of young women being employed to water cattle, &c. is confirmed by the latter traveller.

The same custom prevailed in ancient Greece. Homer represents Minerva meeting Ulysses, as the sun was going down, under the form of a Phœcian 13 ¶ And he said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, send me good speed this day, and show kindness unto my master Abraham.

13 Behold, I stand here by the well of water; and the daughters of the men of the city come out to draw water:

14 And let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and thereby "shall I know that thou hast showed kindness unto my master."

15 ¶ And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder.

16 And the damsel was very fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her: and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, Let me, I pray thee, drink a little water of thy pitcher.

18 And she said, Drink, my lord: and she hastened, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hastened, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

21 And the man, wondering at her, held his peace, to wit whether the LORD had made his journey prosperous, or not.

22 And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden ear-ring of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels weight of gold.

23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, I am the daughter thusiastic. It must be recollected, however, that he lived under a different dispensation; and before the written word was given, such providential interferences, as they were more necessary, they were probably more frequent, though we are not warranted in now saying they have wholly ceased. There can be, however, at no time any danger in praying for divine direction, provided we do not dictate the means. In this case, every thing happened according to the good man's prayers and wishes; so much so, that he was struck with admiration, and particularly at the courtesy and simplicity of Rebekah, who certainly ranked among the higher classes of females in that age and country.

The picture here afforded of ancient manners is indeed enchanting, and the simple piety of Abraham's servant still more so; for no sooner does he find himself directed to the right house, and to the most suitable individual, than his heart bursts with gratitude: "Blessed be the LORD God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master of his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, the LORD led me to the house of my master's brethren!—And he bowed down his head and worshipped the LORD."

Ver. 22. Ear-ring.—(Or, jewel for the forehead. Exod. xxxii. 2. 3. Is. iii. 19—23. Ezek. xvi. 11, 12. From the word being in the singular number, it is not likely to have been an ear-ring; nor is it very probable that it was a "jewel for the forehead," but rather, "a jewel for the nose, a nose-ring," which is in universal use throughout all parts of Arabia and Persia, particularly among young women. It is very properly translated "an ornament for the nose," by Symmachus; and Sir John Chardin informs us, that "it is a custom, in almost all the East, for the women to wear rings in their noses, in the left nostril, which is bored low down in the middle. These rings are of gold, and have commonly two pearls and one ruby between, placed in the ring. I never saw a girl or young woman in Arabia or in all Persia, who did not wear a ring after this manner in her nostril." To the same purpose Thevenot, D'Arvieux, Mandelstam, Paul Lucas, Niebuhr, and others. Bracelets.—The word rendered "bracelet," from a root which signifies "to join or couple together," may imply whatever may clasp round the arms or legs for rings and ornaments are worn round both by females in India and Persia. The small part of the leg and the whole arm, from the

Ver. 28—52. The marriage agreed upon.—Rebekah having received presents from Abraham's steward, very prudently shows them to her brother Laban, and the rest of her mother's family, from which it is natural to conclude that her father Bethuel was now dead; and hence Laban, as her elder brother, took an active part in the business, and "ran out unto the man unto the well," and invited him, not only very courteously, but very piously, to come in with his camels and attendants: "Come in," said he, "thou blessed of the LORD: wherefore standest thou without? for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels." The man (Eliezer, as we presume) therefore came in, and meat was set before him; but, like a faithful servant, he prefers his master's business to his own enjoyment, and will not eat till he has told his errand. He then states his master's circumstances: that, by the divine blessing, he had become rich and great; that his wife Sarah had borne him a son in her old age, to whom he had bequeathed all his property; that for his son he had been sent to seek a wife; and then notices the favourable train of providential circumstances which had just occurred. "And now," says he, "if ye will deal kindly and shoulder to the wrist, are generally decorated in this way. As these were given Rebekah for "her hands," it sufficiently distinguishes them from similar ornaments for the ankles.—Bagster. Ten shekels weight of gold.—Taking the shekel of gold at $8.09, according to Dr. Arbuthnot, and the gold at $17.75 per oz., the total value of ten shekels and a half is $85.

The weight of the ornaments thus put upon Rebekah appears extraordinary; but Chardin assures us that even heavier were worn by the women of the East when he was there. They are rather manacles than bracelets.

Ver. 28. Her mother's house.—[Some have conjectured from this, that her father Bethuel was dead; and the person called Bethuel, (ver. 50.) was a younger brother. This is possible; but, as Dr. A. Clarke remarks, the mother's house might be mentioned were even the father alive; for in Asiatic countries, the women have apartments entirely separate from those of the men, in which their little children and grown-up daughters reside with them. This was probably the case here; though, from the whole narrative, it is very probable that Bethuel was dead, as the whole business appears to be conducted by Rebekah's brothers.—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Straw.—[Straw, by the eastern mode of threshing, was cut or shattered and reduced to a kind of chaff. With this, sometimes mixed with 38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son.

39 And I said unto my master, Peradventure the woman will not follow me.

40 And he said unto me, The LORD, before whom I walk, will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way; and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house:

41 Then shalt thou be clear from this mine oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath.

42 And I came this day unto the well, and said, O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou dost prosper my way which I go:

42 Behold, I stand by the well of water; and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink;

44 And she say to me, Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be the woman whom the LORD hath appointed out for my master's son.

45 And before I had done speaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder; and she went down unto the well, and drew water: and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: so I drank, and she made the camels drink also.

47 And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him: and I put the ear-ring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands.

truly with my master, tell me: and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left."

"Then Laban and Bethuel," both probably her brothers, answered, "The thing proceedeth from the Lord: we cannot speak unto thee bad or good;" that is, "for or against," (says Dr. Clarke:) it seems to be entirely the work of God, and we cordially submit. "Behold, Rebekah is before thee," consult her; (as if he had said) and if she be willing, take her, and go. Upon hearing this the venerable man was satisfied. "He worshipped the Lord, bowing himself to the earth" with gratitude, for the success with which he had been favoured in this negotiation. "How sweet would all our temporal concerns be rendered, (says Fuller,) if they were thus intermixed with godliness!"

Ver. 53—67. Rebekah sets off without delay, and meets Isaac.—Having concluded his negotiations, Abraham's servant proceeds to make the usual presents to the damsel and to the family; and then they sat down to eat and drink together, (that is, the men,) and tarried all night, and the very next morning he is importunate to be gone. He considers his time as not his own; and the anxiety of his master, and especially of Isaac, for his return; and therefore urges his departure. Her mother and brother, however, demur at this, and very reasonably urge the delay of a few days, by way of taking leave. "Hinder me not," says the good old man, "seeing the Lord hath prospered my way; send me away, that I may go to my master." He was as anxious now to report the success of his negotiation, as 48 And I bowed down my head, and worshipped the LORD, and blessed the LORD God of my master Abraham, which had led me in the right way to take my master's brother's daughter unto his son.

49 And now if ye will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me: and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left.

50 Then Laban and Bethuel answered, and said, The thing proceedeth from the LORD: we cannot speak unto thee bad or good.

51 Behold, Rebekah is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the LORD hath spoken.

52 And it came to pass, that, when Abraham's servant heard their words, he worshipped the LORD, bowing himself to the earth.

53 And the servant brought forth jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah: he gave also to her brother and to her mother precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night; and they rose up in the morning, and he said, Send me away unto my master.

55 And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us a few days, at the least ten; after that she shall go.

56 And he said unto them, Hinder me not, seeing the LORD hath prospered my way: send me away, that I may go to my master.

57 And they said, We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.

58 And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go.

59 And they sent away Rebekah their sister, and her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his men.

60 And they blessed Rebekah, and said he had been on the preceding day to open it. At length, the maiden is appealed to, and she says, "I will go." And they sent away Rebekah their sister, and her nurse, and Abraham's servant, and his men. "And they blessed Rebekah" in the most affectionate manner, and said to her, "Thou art our sister, be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed possess the gate of them that hate them." It appears by this language, that they were no strangers to the blessing pronounced on Abraham, of a numerous offspring, and of a mighty nation, who should "possess the gate of their enemies;" that is, have them within their power: which are the very terms of the last blessing pronounced from heaven on Abraham, and with which they had doubtless been made acquainted by Abraham's servant, if not previously.

"Rebekah now arose, and the damsels;" by which it should seem that she was accompanied, not only by her nurse Deborah, who had probably brought her up, but also by at least two handmaids, to wait upon her; which shows, that her "drawing water" was not from necessity, but from an active, lively, and kind disposition. (See chap. xxix. 2.)

While they were on their journey, Providence so ordered it, that Isaac, walking out "to meditate" and pray, (as the margin adds,) in an opposite direction, saw the camels at a distance, and went to meet them. Rebekah noticing him, was no sooner informed who the stranger was, than, according to the custom of the country, she alighted, and covered herself with a veil.

Ver. 39. Peradventure.—[We may see, says Calmet, by this and other passages of Scripture, (Jos. ix. 18.) what the sentiments of the ancients were relative to an oath. Ver. 44. Appointed.—[Those events, which appear to us the effect of choice, contrivance, or chance, are matters of appointment with God, and the persuasion of this does not prevent, but rather encourage, the use of all proper means; at the same time that it confines us to proper means, and delivers the mind from useless anxiety about consequences.]—Bagster.

Ver. 49. Deal kindly and truly.—[Margin, "Do mercy and truth."

Ver. 50. Then Laban and Bethuel.—[Scott remarks on ver. 28. where the house is called her mother's, and not her father's,—"The whole narrative implies that Bethuel, Rebekah's father, was dead; and that Bethuel, afterwards mentioned (ver. 50.) was Laban's younger brother." For examples of the same phrase, "good or bad," see Gen. xxxi. 24, 29. 2 Sam. xiii. 22.

Ver. 53. Jewels.—[Heb. vessels. The original word is very extensive in its signification; denoting vessels, utensils, instruments, furniture, or dress, of whatever description; and these, presented by Abraham's servant, most probably Eliezer, might have been of various kinds. What he had given before, (ver. 22.) was in token of respect; what he gave now, appears to have been in the way of dowry. Ex. iii. 22. xi. 2. xii. 35. Precious things.—This term, rendered "precious things," as may be seen in the parallel texts, is used to express exquisite fruits or delicacies, and precious plants or flowers: but here it may mean gifts in general, though rather of an inferior kind to those mentioned above.]—Bagster.

Ver. 55. A few days, at the least ten.—The words "a few," are here in italics, as supplementary. The Hebrew reads literally, "days, at least ten." But the term days, used absolutely, is supposed to mean a defined period—a year, a month, or a week. Our margin renders it "a full year, or ten months." So Atisworth. Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "a few weeks;" and Dr. Clarke, perceiving still better, "a week or ten days." Dr. Kennicott contends strongly for this sense. See our notes on chap. i. 14. iv. 3. where thousands of ten thousands.

63 And Isaac went <sup>g</sup> out to <sup>h</sup> meditate in the field at the even tide: and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, she <sup>i</sup> lighted off the camel.

65 For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, It is my master: therefore she took a <sup>j</sup> veil, and covered herself.

66 And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.

67 And Isaac brought her into his mother Sarah's <sup>k</sup> tent, and took Rebekah, and she became his wife; and he loved her: and Isaac was comforted after his mother's death.

CHAPTER XXV.

THEN again Abraham took a wife, and her name was <sup>a</sup> Keturah.

Dr. Boothroyd remarks—"Isaac, acquainted with the journey of his father's servant, had come to visit his father at Mamre, and to wait for the return of the servant. It is probable he went out for the purpose of devout meditation, and to implore the kind interposition of Jehovah, in an event so intimately connected with his future happiness." This circumstance has often been the ground of useful practical remarks. Henry here says, "Holy souls love retirement. It will do us good to be often left alone, walking or sitting; and if we have the art of improving solitude, we shall find that we are never less alone than when alone."

The chapter concludes with Isaac taking Rebekah home to his mother Sarah's tent. He was an affectionate husband, for he loved Rebekah, and her only, (for he was not a polygamist;) and he had been an affectionate son, for it appears that he was never "comforted after his mother's death," till he brought home Rebekah, which was three years afterwards.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—11. Abraham's marriage to Keturah, his death and posterity.—There is some doubt when this marriage took place—whether before or after the death of Sarah. The Jews will have it that Keturah was Hagar recalled; but the offspring are wholly different; besides, he is here said to have had more than one concubine, (ver. 6.) Others think that Keturah was taken as a concubine soon after Sarah sent away Hagar, and perhaps in resentment for that action, which it is certain Abraham did not approve. Most commentators think it unlikely that he should have so many children after the death of Sarah; and they suppose that the mention of them was deferred, not to break the thread of the narrative—a circumstance very common with the sacred historians. Indeed, had Abraham married Keturah after Sarah's death, it is hardly to be supposed that she would have been ranked as a concubine, (or secondary wife,) as in the book of Chronicles,—(1 Chron. i. 32.) The children of these concubines were portioned off in Abraham's lifetime, and prudently sent away from Isaac into the east country, to prevent any disputes between them. This circumstance may also afford a useful hint to regulate the disposal of our property in our lifetime, both to prevent strife and misapplication.

Abraham's death now follows; and at the age of one hundred and seventy-five years, he is pronounced an old man among cient times, as a proof of the peculiar blessing and favour of God.]—Bagster. Either expression meaning an innumerable multitude, as the stars of heaven, or the sand of the sea-shore.

Ver. 64. And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, hastily alighted from the camel.—It was always customary, in all the east, on perceiving a superior, to alight from the animal upon which they were riding. Anderson and Iverson relate—"When the governor of Mossul and his suite passed our caravan, we were obliged to alight from our horses, mules, and asses, and lead the animals till they had gone by." Even now, women show this mark of respect to men. Niebuhr says, "that an Arabian lady, who met them in a broad valley in the desert of Mount Sinai, retired from the road, and let her servant lead the camel till they had passed." Judges i. 14. 1 Sam. xv. 23. Rosenmüller.

Ver. 65. She took a veil and covered herself.—Covering the head was practised on three occasions. In cases of grief and mourning, 2 Sam. xix. 2; as an expression of reservedness and modesty, Gen. xxiv. 65; and as a testimony or token of the greatest respect and reverence.

4 And the sons of Midian; <sup>f</sup> Ephah, and Ephher, and Hanoah, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the children of Keturah.

5 ¶ And Abraham gave all that he had unto Isaac.

6 But unto the sons of the concubines which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and sent them <sup>g</sup> away from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, eastward, <sup>h</sup> unto the east country.

7 And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, a hundred threescore and fifteen years.

8 Then Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a <sup>i</sup> good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was <sup>j</sup> gathered to his people.

9 And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre;

10 The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of <sup>k</sup> Heth: there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife.

11 ¶ And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that God blessed his son Isaac: and Isaac dwelt by the well Lahai-roi.

12 ¶ Now these are the generations of Ish-his contemporaries; and is said to have died in a "good old age." Abraham's life had not only been full of years, but also of important incidents. Of many we read only that they were born and died; but the history of his life occupies nearly fourteen chapters.

The circumstances of his death, too, were peaceable and happy. It had been promised, (Gen. xv. 15.) "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age;" and here we have the fulfilment of the prediction: "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, . . . and was gathered to his people." The expression "full of years," or rather days, is thought to imply, that he was fully satisfied with this life, and ripe for another: so we read of a good man coming to his grave in "full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season," (Job v. 26.) "But the expression, 'gathered to his people,' (says Scott), decides nothing concerning the eternal state of the persons spoken of, being used without any exact discrimination of character." (See ver. 17; also chap. xlix. 33. Num. xx. 24. Judg. ii. 10, &c.) It strongly intimates, however, the belief of the Hebrews in a future state, since it certainly does not imply being buried in the same grave, or the same country, as the instance of Abraham fully proves. But we know, from the highest authority, that he "died in faith," and went to "a better country, that is, a heavenly." (Heb. xi. 13—16.)

It is pleasing to observe here, that Ishmael united with Isaac in the funeral of their father Abraham. Though he is described as a wild man, and probably in his youth was very wild, (see chap. xxi. 9.) it does not follow that he was destitute of natural feelings, or was of a sanguinary temper; and his associating with Isaac in these last offices, may indicate his acquiescence in the disposal of Providence, of which he could have no reason to complain, when he numbered twelve princes among his sons. Some have, indeed, from this narrative endeavoured to derive proof of his conversion; and though we see no sufficient evidence of that, we should be cautious not to judge of the religious character and final state of persons from what is said as to their temporal circumstances, or those of their posterity. Scripture prophecies seldom relate to the fate of individuals, and never to their final state.

24 ¶ And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

25 And the first came out red, all over like a hairy garment: and they called his name Esau.

26 And after that came his brother out, and his hand took hold on Esau's <sup>v</sup> heel; and his name was called Jacob: and Isaac was threescore years old when she bare them.

32 And Esau said, Behold, I am <sup>c</sup> at the point to die: and what profit <sup>d</sup> shall this birth-right do to me?

33 And Jacob said, Swear to me this day; and he swore unto him: and he sold his birth-right <sup>e</sup> unto Jacob.

history relates to those who go off, and those who appear on, the stage of life; and it is of little consequence, whether our continuance on this grand theatre be short or long, provided we act in such a manner as to quit the world with comfort to ourselves, with benefit to others, and with the approbation of our gracious God. Only let us be anxious to leave behind us a testimony from our lips to the faithfulness and goodness of the Lord, and in the consciences of others, to the uprightness and consistency of our walk before him; and the blessing of God to our families. Having then lived to every good purpose, and being ripe for the world above, we may cheerfully resign our souls into the hands of our Redeemer, expecting to join "the spirits of just men made perfect;" and leave our bodies to the silent tomb, in joyful hope of a happy resurrection. But God forbid, that the writer or any of the readers of these observations should rest contented with earthly blessings, which the Lord bestows on the men of this world; or should come short of those special and eternal blessings, which belong to the children of the promise! Though the former seem to have the pre-eminence here, yet the latter will have their portion, when that of the former is spent and gone for ever.—T. Scott.

Ver. 19–34. The history of Esau and Jacob.—After the death of Abraham, we are told that God blessed his son Isaac. It is peculiarly happy when the blessing of God descends from father to son, as in this case, and should make us very thankful; but grace does not run in a right line, (as we may say,) from generation to generation, like the temporal promises of the Old Testament. Isaac, it is added, dwelt by the well Lahai-roi, expired, or ceased to breathe." See Acts v. 10. Full of years.—The word years is not in the original, (as may be seen by its being printed in italics) and instead of it the word days (as in Gen. xxxv. 29.) is found in many Hebrew MSS., in the Samaritan text, the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, Persian, and Chaldee. "On these authorities it might safely be admitted into the text."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 13. Nebajoth.—[From Nebajoth sprang the Nabatheans, who inhabited Arabia Petraea; from Kedra, the Cedreans, who dwell near the Nabatheans; and from Jetur, the Itureans, who inhabited a small tract of country east of Jordan, which afterwards belonged to Manasseh.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Hadar.—[Or, Hadad. More than 300 MSS. and printed editions read Hadar, as in 1 Ch. i. 30.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Castles.—[The word broth rendered "castles" is supposed by some to denote here "towers," fortified rocks, or mountain-tops, and fastnesses of various kinds in woods and hilly countries; but it rather means, probably, "shepherds' cots," surrounded by sufficient enclosures to prevent the cattle from straying, as the cognate Syriac word teyaro, and Arabic tawar, signify "a sheep-fold."]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. . . . He died in the presence of all his brethren.—It was predicted of Ishmael, Gen. xvi. 12, that he should "dwell in the presence of all his brethren," and here we find this continued till his death; for he died so in their presence. But the word here rendered died, is not the usual term, but seems to imply a sudden or accidental death. "He fell," says the margin, and the term is the same used of the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. xiv. 10. It should not be omitted, however, that there is some doubt as to the correctness of this translation. The word fell is applied to a LOT, Josh. xiii. 4. Psal. lxxviii. 55. Dr. Boothroyd, therefore, taking Nepal for a participle, connects it with Ishmael's situation, thus: "And he dwelt from Havilah, as one goeth toward Assyria, unto Shur, which is on the borders of as he appears to have done at the time he met Rebekah, (chap. xxiv. 62.) This is the well, we may recollect, which saved the life of Ishmael, and to which, therefore, Hagar gave this name, as meaning, "the well of him that liveth and seeth me." Here was, therefore, something in the name of the place to remind him of the divine presence. It is a grand antidote to sin, to recollect that the all-seeing eye of God is continually upon us. Isaac, peculiarly happy in his Rebekah, seems to be the only one of the Hebrew patriarchs who kept to the original institution of marriage, and had no concubine, though his wife was barren for nearly twenty years. As the heir of promise, he was of course anxious for posterity, and applied to that God who had made him such. Rebekah, in consequence, is pregnant; but this circumstance, so intensely desired, proves itself the source of great anxiety and alarm. She is with child of twins, which struggled in her womb, as they did ever afterwards through life; and, indeed, their posterity after them.

This strange and unexpected feeling leads her to inquire of the Lord; and the purport of her inquiry is thus expressed—"If it be so," that I am pregnant—yet why is this inward struggling?—"Why am I thus?" But whither she went, or how she inquired, is not said. There was, at this time, no Urim and Thummim; nor do we read of any divine oracle since the flood. Shem is supposed to have been dead; but Abraham, her father-in-law, was still living, and he is expressly called a prophet, (chap. xx. 7.) and after he had disposed of his property among his children, had probably no more concern with temporal affairs: it is therefore not unlikely, that to him she repaired, Egypt, lying near to all his brethren." Dr. Clarke contends for the same sense, which is also approved by Ainsworth.

Ver. 22. And the children struggled together.—Margin, "Jostled one against another, bruising and hurting" each other.

Ver. 25. They called his name Esau.—[The word Esau, has been generally considered to imply made, formed, or perfected; or perfect, robust, &c. But it appears to be a dialectical variation of the Arabic atha, to be covered with hair; whence atha, hairy, as no doubt the word Esau imports, in allusion to the circumstance of his being covered with red hair or down at his birth.]—Bagster.

Dr. Clarke says, "It is difficult to assign the proper meaning of the original of (this name) Esau." He seems to prefer the idea of Ainsworth, "perfected." Dr. Boothroyd renders it "covered." But if Ash (or Gnash) means a species of mothworm, or caterpillar, as in Isa. li. 8. and elsewhere, may not the meaning be, he was hairy as a mothworm or caterpillar, and therefore he was called (taking the o as a pronoun) "his caterpillar?" i. e. his father's: but this is offered only as a conjecture.

Ver. 26. Took hold on Esau's heel.—Hence he was called Jacob, a supplanter, or more literally, a heeler; and it is remarkable, in some of the representations of the wrestlers in the ancient games, they are represented as seizing each other by the heel, much as Jacob did Esau. See Potter's Antiq. of Greece.

Ver. 28. He did eat of his venison.—Margin, "Venison was in his mouth;" i. e. he was continually eating it, when it could be procured; and he was fond of it.

Ver. 30. That same red pottage.—The inhabitants of Barbary still make use of lentils, boiled and stewed with oil and garlic, a pottage of a chocolate colour; this was the red pottage for which Esau, from thence called Edom (red), sold his birthright.—Dr. Shaw's Travels.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Isaac because of famine goeth to Gerar: 2 God instructeth and bleaseth him: 9 he is reproved by Abimelech for denying his wife: 26 Abimelech maketh a covenant with him. 34 Esau's wives.

AND there was a famine in the land, beside the first famine * that was in the days of Abraham. And Isaac went unto Abimelech <sup>b</sup> king of the Philistines unto Gerar.

2 And the LORD appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt: dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of.

3 Sojourn <sup>c</sup> in this land, and I will be with <sup>d</sup> thee, and will bless thee: for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all * these countries, and I will perform the oath <sup>e</sup> which I swore unto Abraham thy father;

4 And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: and in thy seed <sup>f</sup> shall all the nations of the earth be blessed:

5 Because that Abraham obeyed my <sup>h</sup> voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.

6 ¶ And Isaac dwelt in Gerar:

7 And the men of the place asked him of his wife; and he <sup>i</sup> said, She is my sister: for he <sup>j</sup> feared to say, She is my wife; lest, said he, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah; because she was fair to look upon.

and received from him the answer (probably conveyed to him in a prophetic vision) that "two nations were now struggling in her womb;" meaning, that these children were to be the respective heads, or fathers, of two distinct nations, whereof "the elder should serve the younger;" a prediction which Isaac seems to have been slow to understand.—The children were in due time born; and one being remarkably red and hairy, (as if covered with a hairy garment), was called "Esau," that is, perfected or covered; but the other was called "Jacob," a supplanter, because in the birth he seized his brother by the heel, as if to keep him back, and supplant him in the birth.

"And the boys grew," and their characters were gradually developed. Esau was "a cunning hunter, a man of the field," whose delight was in the sports of the chase; and his father Isaac, being particularly fond of venison, contracted a great partiality for him on that account. He was "a mighty hunter before the Lord;" and from a hunter, like Nimrod, he became a warrior, and a powerful chief. On the other hand, Jacob was "a plain," simple, unassuming "man," tending his flocks and herds, and "dwelling in tents," as shepherds generally did. The one thirsted for power and eminence, and perhaps fame; the other preferred a quiet, domestic life; and on that account, probably, gained the peculiar affection of his mother, who sought on all occasions to counteract the ambition of Esau, and obtain the preference to her favourite son, Jacob. We are not to suppose, however, that at this early period Jacob had any more religion than his brother Esau; nor is there any intimation of the kind, till after the Lord revealed himself to him at Padan-aram. On the contrary, though plain and simple in his manners, he was artful, insinuating, and stuck at nothing to procure his own ends by policy and fraud, in which it is but too evident that his mother Rebekah supported and assisted him. In short, he answered to his name; he was a supplanter, of which a striking instance comes now before us.

Esau had been out hunting, in all probability, and came home faint, fatigued, and hungry;—Jacob had made some savoury pottage, which attracted Esau's taste; and being ready to faint and to die, as he says, he begged Jacob to give him "that red-red," as he called it, perhaps not exactly knowing what name to give it. Jacob, one would expect, could not refuse; but his mind being intent on taking every advantage to supplant his brother, who seems not now able to contend with him, he proposed to him to sell his birthright. It is hardly supposable such a thought could have entered Jacob's mind, had there not been some previous conversation on the subject, in which Esau had spoken contemptuously of the birthright, as he did in this instance: "Behold, I am at the point to die," that

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 12. Sowed in that land.—[The author of the History of the Piratical States of Barbary observes, that the Moors of that country are divided into tribes like the Arabians, and like them dwell in tents, formed into itinerant villages; that "these wanderers farm lands of the inhabitants of the towns, sow and cultivate them, paying their rent with the produce, such as fruits, corn, wax, &c. They are very skilful in choosing the most advantageous soils for every season, and very careful to avoid the Turkish troops, the violence of the one little suiting the simplicity of the other." It is natural to suppose, that Isaac possessed the like sagacity, when he sowed in the land of Gerar, and received that year a hundred-fold.]—Bagster. Such an increase was, at this time, a singular blessing of God, after there had been a considerable dearth; and the soil, perhaps, that afforded so large a crop, not so rich: otherwise we may learn from Varro, that in Syria, near Gadera, and in Africa, about Bizantium, they reaped a hundred bushels from one: nay, Bochart (in his Canaan, lib. i. c. 25.) shows, from several good authors that some places in Africa are so very fruitful that they produce

8 And it came to pass when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philistines looked out at a window, and saw, and behold, Isaac was sporting with Rebekah his wife.

9 And Abimelech called Isaac, and said, Behold, of a surety she is thy wife: and how saidst thou, She is my sister? And Isaac said unto him, Because I said, Lest I die for her.

10 And Abimelech said, What is this thou hast <sup>a</sup> done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lain with thy wife, and thou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us.

11 And Abimelech charged all his people, saying, He that <sup>b</sup> toucheth this man or his wife shall surely be put to death.

12 Then Isaac sowed in that land, and <sup>c</sup> received in the same year a hundred-fold: and the LORD blessed him:

13 And the man waxed great, and went <sup>d</sup> forward, and grew until he became very great:

14 For he had possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of <sup>e</sup> servants: and the Philistines <sup>f</sup> envied him.

15 For all the wells which his father's servants had digged in the days of Abraham his father, the Philistines had stopped them, and filled them with earth.

is, with faintness and fatigue, "and what profit shall this birthright do to me?" Whereas, if he regained his strength, he feared nothing from Jacob, and cared nothing for the divine prediction: "his own sword and his own bow," would secure him the victory. He therefore sold his birthright, and confirmed the contract with an oath; after which "he ate and drank, and rose up and went his way," regardless of the consequences. "Thus Esau despised his birthright."

The privileges of the firstborn are perhaps imperfectly understood. We learn from Deut. xxi. 17, that he was to have a double portion; but Jacob acting fraudulently, was so far from obtaining this, that he was soon after obliged to leave all in the hands of Esau, and fly for his life to Padan-aram. So does Providence frown upon dishonesty and deceit.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—22. Isaac goeth unto Abimelech in Gerar.—Another famine occurs in Canaan, similar to that in the days of Abraham, which induces Isaac to go among the Philistines, (for he was forbidden to go into Egypt, ver. 2—5.) and he dwelt in Gerar. And here, most unaccountably, Isaac falls into the same error which his father Abraham had twice committed, and of which it seems impossible but that he must have heard repeatedly:—he pretends that Rebekah was his sister, which, in his case, was not an equivocation, as in the instance of Abraham, but a downright falsehood; for which, as the inspired historian makes no apology, neither shall we attempt it. One truth, in all these instances, seems most remarkably verified, that when we take unlawful measures to escape danger, we often plunge more deeply into it. This was the case both with Abraham and his son Isaac. The danger of being murdered for his wife's sake, so far as appears, was imaginary only, while that of losing her was great and imminent. "The path of duty is the path of safety;" while that of "crooked policy" leads not to danger only, but to disgrace, as was the case here; for a man of Isaac's character must surely have blushed deeply at being detected in a falsehood, which, at the same time, libelled the king of Gerar, whose conduct appears most honourable and irreproachable.

But honourable as was the character of the king, that of his servants and subjects was far otherwise. The Lord blessed Isaac, notwithstanding all his folly; and in one year he had a crop of barley which yielded a hundred fold increase. His flocks and herds also multiplied so rapidly, and his servants for husbandry (as the margin expresses it) were so numerous, as to excite the envy of the Philistines, and to provoke disputes between the servants of Abimelech and Isaac. They filled up with earth the wells that Abraham had digged about a hundred years before; and when he digged new ones, they claimed the waters as their own. In this instance, it is worthy of retwo or three hundred fold: which makes this account of Moses far from being incredible.—Stackhouse.

That a hundred fold was reaped in some cases, may also be inferred from our Lord's words, Matt. xiii. 23.

Ver. 13. Waxed great.—[Dr. Adam Clarke remarks, that there is a strange and observable occurrence of the same term in the original; which is literally, "And the man was GREAT, and he went, going on, and was GREAT, until that he was exceeding GREAT." How simple is this language, and yet how forcible.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. The same mode of taking vengeance which is here mentioned, has been practised in ages subsequent to the time here referred to. Niebuhr tells us that the Turks have made it a custom to give annually, to every Arab tribe which is near the road to Mecca, a certain sum of money, and a certain number of vestments, to keep them from destroying the wells that lie in that route, and to escort the pilgrims across their country.—Harmer's Observations.

16 And Abimelech said unto Isaac, Go from us: for thou art much <sup>a</sup> mightier than we.

17 ¶ And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there.

18 And Isaac digged again the wells of water which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

19 And Issac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of <sup>r</sup> springing water.

20 And the herdmen of Gerar did strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well <sup>a</sup> Esek; because they strove with him.

21 And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it <sup>a</sup> Sitnah.

22 And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it <sup>a</sup> Rehoboth; and he said, For now the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land.

23 And he went up from thence to Beer-sheba.

24 And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, I am the God of Abraham thy father: fear not, <sup>r</sup> for I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for my servant Abraham's sake.

25 And he <sup>w</sup> builded an altar there, and called upon the name of the LORD, and pitched his tent there: and there Isaac's servants digged a well.

26 ¶ Then Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath one of his friends, and <sup>r</sup> Pichol the chief captain of his army.

31 And they rose up betimes in the morning, and sware one to another: and Isaac sent them away, and they departed from him in peace.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Isaac sendeth Esau for venison. 6 Rebekah instructeth Jacob to obtain the blessing: 15 Jacob under the person of Esau obtaineth it. 34 Esau complaineth: 41 he dis-senteth Jacob. 42 Rebekah disappointeth it.

AND it came to pass, that when Isaac was old, and his eyes were dim, <sup>a</sup> so that he could not see, he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: and he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

mark how the ancients recorded events, by giving names to places. The first well which Isaac dug, and the natives claimed, is Esek, that is, "contention;" the second, Sitnah, meaning "hatred;" and the third, which was farther out of their way, was called Rehoboth, that is, "room;" for now, said they, "the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land." Thus all their providential blessings were ascribed to God, and nothing was considered as the effect of chance or accident.

These circumstances, however, with the frequent complaints of his own people, induced Abimelech to desire Isaac to remove, which he does in the most delicate way, "For thou art much mightier than we." So Abraham and Lot parted, because they were too rich, and too great, to dwell together. (Chap. xiii. 5-9.)

Ver. 23-35. Isaac returns to Beer-sheba, and dwells there.—The first object, when a Hebrew patriarch pitches his tent, is to raise an altar, and the next, to dig a well; the first to provide for the worship of God, the second for the most important article in his domestic economy, water. And no sooner does Isaac erect an altar, than he is favoured with a prophetic vision. The purport of the vision is a renewal of the promise made to Abraham, with a renewed charge not to fear; for this seems to have been the fatal passion which, notwithstanding their extraordinary faith, plunged into difficulties both father and son. The report of this divine communication was probably one cause of the visit of Abimelech and his courtiers, of which Isaac seems to have been somewhat jealous, if not alarmed. A very satisfactory reason is, however, given—"We saw certainly that the LORD was with thee," say they, and are come to form a covenant of amity. Isaac therefore makes them a feast, (as usual on such occasions,) and on the morning following, they pledge themselves by a mutual oath to peace and perpetual friendship. The name Beer-sheba, which had been given by Abraham to a well in the same neighbourhood, is now renewed, and, in subsequent times, is given to a city founded on the same spot.

The closing verses of this chapter relate to Esau, who took to him two wives, the daughters of Hittites, and doubtless both idolaters; which was, therefore, "a grief of mind," or, as the margin reads, "a bitterness of spirit," both to Isaac and Rebekah.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1-29. Jacob obtains the blessing by subtlety.—We have in this section of Scripture three very important circumstances. 1. Here is a design on the part of Isaac to bestow his patriarchal blessing in a manner inconsistent with God's revealed will, which was, that "the elder should serve the younger;" or (which is the same in the Hebrew) the greater serve the less. Now, there can be little doubt but that Isaac was informed of this, even before they were born. It is no less credible that Isaac knew that Esau had despised and sold his birthright: how, then, could he think of giving him the blessing connected with it? Yet this he did; and for no other reason, that we can find, but that he loved his venison. Thus he says to his son Esau, "Behold, now I am old." It is generally reckoned that he was now about 137 years old, and Jacob 77, [but Dr. Kennicott supposes that Isaac was 117 and Jacob 57,] and his eyes were so dim that he could not distinguish objects. He adds, "I know not the day of my death;" meaning how soon it might occur, and, therefore, he wished no longer to defer the patriarchal benediction. But why should he require venison before he gave the blessing? It seems to have been the custom among most nations in these early times, to accompany every transaction of importance with a feast; and to eat with any one, was a solemn pledge of friendship and protection. In this case, also, Isaac might wish to have a pledge of his son Esau's affection, in going out to hunt for venison for him, "that (says he) my soul may bless thee before I die,"—of which event he had now considerable apprehensions.

2. We have Rebekah's deep-laid plan to counteract the design of her husband. We may charitably hope she did this in the confidence that Isaac was decidedly wrong, in thus acting in opposition to the oracle she had consulted when she was pregnant, and perhaps persuaded herself that she could hardly err in fulfilling the designs of heaven. But there is no error more fatal, than to make the divine decrees the rule of our conduct.

nineteen to twenty feet in depth. But Niebuhr informs us, that many wells are from 160 to 170 feet deep.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Abimelech went to him.—As this was about 100 years after Abraham was visited by Abimelech, it is hardly to be supposed that this was the same person; but it is probable that this name might be common to all the kings of Philistia, as that of Pharaoh to those of Egypt: and this Pichol was probably son of the former.

Ver. 33. Beer-sheba.—[i. e. the well of the oath, (ver. 28.)] This is probably the same city which was called Beer-sheba a hundred years before this, in the time of Abraham; but as the well, from which it had its name originally, was closed up by the Philistines, probably the name of the place was abolished with the well; when, therefore, Isaac re-opened the well, he restored the ancient name of the place.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Go from us.—[Dr. A. Clarke observes, that this is the first instance on record of what was termed among the Greeks, ostracism, i. e. the banishment of a person from the state, of whose power, influence, or riches, the people were jealous; and that the remarkable saying of Bacon on this subject seems in allusion to this circumstance: "Public envy is an ostracism that edipseth men when they grow too great."—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Days of Abraham.—[Houbigant contends, that instead of bimey, "in the days," we should read avdey, "servants;" agreeably to the Samaritan, Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate: "And Isaac digged again the wells of water which the servants of Abraham his father had digged." This is probably the true reading: see ver. 15.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Dug another well.—[The wells in Arabia are generally dug in to a rock: their mouths are about six feet in diameter, and they are from

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, I know not <sup>b</sup> the day of my death:

4 And make me savoury meat, such as I love, and bring <sup>d</sup> it to me, that I may eat; that my soul <sup>e</sup> may bless thee before I die.

5 And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son. And Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring <sup>f</sup> it.

6 ¶ And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying,

16 And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck:

17 And she gave the savoury meat and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

18 ¶ And he came unto his father, and said, My father. And he said, Here <sup>am</sup> I; who <sup>art</sup> thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said unto his father, I <sup>am</sup> Esau thy first-born; <sup>m</sup> I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said unto his son, How <sup>is</sup> it that thou hast found <sup>it</sup> so quickly, my son? And he said, Because <sup>n</sup> the Lord thy God brought <sup>it</sup> <sup>o</sup> to me.

21 And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel <sup>p</sup> thee my son, whether thou <sup>be</sup> my very son Esau, or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, The voice <sup>is</sup> Jacob's voice, but the hands <sup>are</sup> the hands of Esau.

23 And he discerned him not, because his hands <sup>q</sup> were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands: so he blessed him.

24 And he said, <sup>Art</sup> thou my very son Esau? And he said, <sup>r</sup> I <sup>am</sup>.

25 And he said, Bring <sup>it</sup> near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, that my soul may bless thee. And he brought <sup>it</sup> near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son.

27 And he came near, and kissed him: and he smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed <sup>s</sup> him, and said, See, <sup>t</sup> the smell of my son <sup>is</sup> as the smell of a field which the Lord hath <sup>u</sup> blessed:

28 Therefore God give thee of <sup>v</sup> the dew of

It was the like "crooked policy" that induced Sarah to give Hagar to Abraham, that he might have an heir; whereas the Lord chose to fulfil his promise in another way, vastly more for his own glory; and, no doubt, had Rebekah only remonstrated with her husband on his duty, and left the issue to Providence, the blessing would have been obtained by far more honourable means. But when we see Rebekah practising such an imposition, and teaching her son to deceive his father, it is truly horrible; especially when we hear her imprecating upon herself all the consequences: "Upon me be thy curse, my son." And Jacob himself, though not the foremost in the scheme, seems to vie with his mother in the crime; for when his father asked him, with surprise, "How is it that thou hast found it (the venison) so quickly, my son?" he replies, "Because the Lord thy God brought it to me." Thus lying in the name of the Lord.

It is upon such examples that the dangerous principle has been advanced, that "the end sanctifies the means;" and that to defraud a person is justifiable, when done for a greater good; and the reasonings and excuses of some ancient commentators upon this passage are both astonishing and grievous. It is a just remark of the judicious Dr. Owen, that, "as it is our duty firmly to believe the promises, so it is our wisdom not to attempt, upon any temptations, provocations, or advantages, their accomplishment in any unwarrantable way." (Owen on Heb. xi. 20.)

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 4. Savoury meat.—Almost all the dishes of the people of Aleppo, Dr. Russel informs us, "are greasy either with fat or butter, pretty high seasoned with salt and spices; many of them made sour with vinegar, pomegranates, or lemon-juice; and onions and garlic often complete the seasoning."

Ver. 15. Rebekah took goodly raiment.—Hebrew, "Garments of desire." Some Jewish writers have fancied this a sacerdotal robe, handed over from one generation to another, from the time of Adam. Others suppose them to be perfumed garments, which certainly were often worn; but it is more probable that it was a hunting dress, and smell strongly of the field. See ver. 27.

Ver. 16. Put the skins of the kids of the goats.—Travellers inform us, that the Eastern goats have long, fine, and beautiful hair, of the most delicate silky softness; and this being that of kids would not be so long, or ample, but of sufficiently delicate texture to resemble that of a man; so that Isaac might easily be deceived, when his eyes were dim, and his feeling no less impaired than his sight. See Bochart, Hieroz. j.—Bagster.

Ver. 19. I am Esau, thy first-born.—Miserable indeed are the shifts to which some of the Christian fathers and others have been driven to justify this atrocious falsehood. Some have recurred to what they call "the right of personification;" others recur to the principle of permutation; and some

3. We may observe how a supreme power overrules the follies of some, and the crimes of others, to fulfil his great designs. The blessing intended for Esau was given to Jacob, but the blessing appropriate to Jacob was not given to Esau: thus Jacob had a double blessing. And when Isaac discovered his mistake, and trembled (as well he might) to think how he had been imposed upon, at the same time he saw there was the hand of God in the event, and he acquiesced. "I have eaten of all before thou camest," said he to Esau; "and have blessed him: yea, and he shall be blessed."

But how could Isaac bless Jacob in FAITH, (as we are told, Heb. xi. 20.) when he knew not whom he blessed? The answer is, that it was by faith in the divine promise that he pronounced his blessing on both his sons, though he was mistaken in the application; and we know that in other instances the prophets did not always fully understand their own predictions. (See 1 Peter i. 10–12.) A case in some degree parallel to this, when believers derive from the word of God instruction or encouragement, though they may not understand the precise meaning of the particular passage from which such instruction or encouragement has been drawn.

Of the blessing itself we have only to remark, that it is confined to temporal promises, being intended for Esau, who regarded no other; it says nothing, therefore, of the great promise of Abraham's seed and the promised land, which was reserved for Jacob, and in the next chapter bestowed upon him.

good men have been weak enough to attempt to justify it by the instance of our Lord calling John Baptist by the name of Elias. But did Esau authorize Jacob to personate him? Did Jacob "come in the spirit and power" of Esau? There is certainly no principle that can justify this conduct, but one that would justify every species of imposition and robbery: no right to be pleaded but "the right of doing wrong."

Ver. 22. The voice is Jacob's voice.—[How wonderful, says Scott, is that difference which there is betwixt the faces and the voices of several individuals of the human species! Scarcely any two of the innumerable millions are exactly alike in either, and yet the difference cannot be defined or described! The power, wisdom, and kindness of our Creator should be admired and adored in this remarkable circumstance; for they are very visible. This description of Jacob is not unaptly accommodated to the character of a hypocrite: his voice, his language, is that of a Christian; his hands, or conduct, that of an ungodly man; but the judgment will proceed from God, the Judge of all, at the last day, as in the present case, not by the voice, but by the hands.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. The smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed.—Pliny observes, "that the land, after a long drought, moistened by the rain, exhales a delightful odour, with which nothing can be compared;" and soon after he heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine:

29 Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: cursed be every one that curseth thee, * and blessed be he that blesseth thee.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he also had made savoury meat, and brought it unto his father; and said unto his father, Let my father arise, and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy first-born, Esau.

33 And Isaac trembled very exceedingly, and said, Who? where is he that hath taken venison, and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him? yea, and he shall be blessed.

34 And when Esau heard the words of his father, he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O my father!

35 And he said, Thy brother came with subtlety, and hath taken away thy blessing.

36 And he said, Is not he rightly named Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times: he took away my birthright; and behold, now he hath taken away my blessing. And he said, Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?

37 And Isaac answered and said unto Esau, Behold, I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants; and with corn and wine have I sustained him and what shall I do now unto thee, my son?

38 And Esau said unto his father, Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father! And Esau lifted up his voice, and wept.

39 And Isaac his father answered, and said unto him, Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above;

40 And by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother: and it shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

41 ¶ And Esau hated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him: and Esau said in his heart, The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I slay my brother Jacob.

42 And these words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebekah: and she sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him, Behold, thy brother Esau, as touching thee, doth comfort himself, purposing to kill thee.

43 Now therefore, my son, obey my voice: and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother to Haran;

44 And tarry with him a few days, until thy brother's fury turn away;

45 Until thy brother's anger turn away from thee, and he forget that which thou hast done to him: then I will send, and fetch thee from thence. Why should I be deprived also of you both in one day?

46 And Rebekah said to Isaac, I am weary of my life, because of the daughters of Heth: if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these which are of the daughters of the land, what good shall my life do me?

Ver. 30—46. Esau also claims and receives his father's blessing.—It is difficult to conceive the horror and alarm of Isaac when he discovered how he had been imposed upon. The Hebrew (as in the margin) says, "He trembled with a great trembling." To ascertain his sensations, "we must (says Fuller) place ourselves in his situation. As an aged and afflicted man, the imposition which had been practised on him would excite his indignation. Yet a moment's reflection would convince him that the transfer of the blessing must have been of the Lord; and, consequently, that he had all along been acting against his will, in seeking to have it otherwise. Two such considerations rushing upon his mind at the same instant, sufficiently account for all his feelings: it was to him like a place where two seas meet; or as the running of subterraneous fires and waters, the commotion of which causeth the earth to tremble. It must have appeared to him as a strong measure, permitted of God for his correction; and that he had caused him to do that against his choice which should have been done with it. Viewing it in this light, and knowing the blessing to be irrevocable, he, like a good man, acquiesced in the will of God, saying, 'Yea, and he shall be blessed.'"

Esau, on his part, is actuated by passions no less strong; violent grief and disappointment for having missed the blessing; anger and revenge against him who had been the means of his disappointment. The circumstance which no doubt most grieved him, was the pre-eminence given to his brother. "Behold, (says Isaac,) I have made him thy lord, and all his brethren have I given to him for servants; with corn and wine have I sustained (or supported) him, and what shall I do now for thee, my son?" On hearing this, we need not wonder that "Esau cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry," for his heart was set on the pre-eminence; nor at his mutterings of revenge and murder.

As respected Jacob, it must be confessed Esau had great occasion to be angry; and it is no wonder that he adverts to the adds, that "it is a sign of a fruitful soil, when it emits an agreeable smell when it has been ploughed."—Rosenmüller.

Ver. 39. Fatness of the earth.—[It is here foretold, says Bishop Newton, that as to situation, and other temporal advantages, the two brothers should be much alike. (See ver. 28.) Mount Seir, and the adjacent country, were at first the possession of the Edomites, and they afterwards extended themselves farther into Arabia, and into the south of Judæa. But wherever they were situated, in temporal advantages they were little inferior to the Israelites. Esau had cattle, beasts, and substance in abundance, and he went to dwell in Mount Seir of his own accord; but had it been such a barren and desolate country as some represent it, he would hardly have removed thither with so much cattle. The Edomites had dukes and kings reigning over them, while the Israelites were slaves in Egypt. When the Israelites on manner in which he had been deprived, first of the birthright, and then of the blessing. As to the former, though it is literally true that he sold it, yet the advantage taken of Esau's situation was certainly ungenerous and mean; and, in the present instance, his conduct was base and criminal. The first object of Esau, however, was to induce his father to repent, and change his mind; but finding that impossible, on account of his seeing a superior overruling power, he exclaims, "Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father!" And he lifted up his voice and wept.

Isaac at length pronounces a blessing upon Esau, which also includes "the fatness of the earth and the dew of heaven;" blessings to him the most desirable. It is farther predicted that he should "live by the sword," which was perfectly congenial to his habits and disposition; but then this is connected with the mortifying words, "Thou shalt serve thy brother." This circumstance again is mitigated by the following:—"It shall come to pass, when thou shalt have the dominion, thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck." These prophecies we must bear in mind, were not intended to be personal, but to relate to their children, for the ancients took great interest in the fate of their posterity.

To the truth of this prophecy, some exception has been taken by infidel writers, from the present appearance of the country, which lies to the south-east of Judæa and the Dead Sea, and is now very barren; but to this it may be replied, that once it had "fields and vineyards, and wells of water;" until "the mountains of Esau were laid waste for the dragons of the wilderness." (Numb. xx. 17. Mal. i. 2.)

The fulfilment of the other predictions may be compressed into a few words, from Bishop Newton. Edom enjoyed the pre-eminence for a considerable time, and there were dukes (or princes) in Edom "before there reigned any king over the children of Israel." (Gen. xxxvi. 31.) But David made an entire conquest of the Edomites, and "throughout all Edom put he their return, desired leave to pass through the territories of Edom, it appears the country abounded with fruitful fields and vineyards. (Numb. 20. 17.) If the country is barren and unfruitful now, neither is Judæa what it was formerly.]—Bagster. Dew of heaven.—"Egypt," says Savary, "would be uninhabitable, did not the nocturnal dews restore life to vegetables. These dews are so copious, especially in summer, that the earth is deeply soaked with them; so that in the morning one would imagine that rain had fallen during the night. This is the reason why the Scripture promises the Israelites, who inhabited a climate pretty similar to that of Egypt, the dew of heaven as a signal favour."—Orient. Cust.

Ver. 40. By thy sword shalt thou live, &c.—For a full and satisfactory account of the import and fulfilment of these predictions, see Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. iii.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

• Isaac blesseth Jacob, and sendeth him to Padan-aram. 12 The vision of Jacob's ladder. 18 The stone of Beth-el. 30 Jacob's vow.

AND Isaac called Jacob, and blessed him, and charged him, and said unto him, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan.

2 Arise, go to <sup>b</sup> Padan-aram, to the house of <sup>c</sup> Bethuel thy mother's father; and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of <sup>d</sup> Laban thy mother's brother.

3 And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a <sup>e</sup> multitude of people;

4 And give thee the <sup>f</sup> blessing of Abraham, to thee, and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the <sup>g</sup> land wherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham.

5 And Isaac sent away Jacob: and he went to Padan-aram unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebekah, Jacob's and Esau's mother.

6 ¶ When Esau saw that Isaac had blessed <sup>h</sup> Jacob, and sent him away to Padan-aram, to take him a wife from thence; and that as he blessed him, he gave him a charge, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan;

7 And that Jacob obeyed <sup>i</sup> his father, and his mother, and was gone to Padan-aram;

8 And Esau seeing that the daughters of <sup>j</sup> Canaan pleased not Isaac his father;

9 Then went Esau unto Ishmael, and took unto the wives which he had <sup>k</sup> Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham's son, the sister of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

10 ¶ And Jacob <sup>l</sup> went out from Beer-sheba, and went toward <sup>m</sup> Haran.

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set: and he took of the stones of that place, and put <sup>n</sup> them for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.

garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants." (2 Sam. viii. 14.) In this state they continued about 150 years; afterwards, however, in the reign of Jehoram, they shook off the yoke, and made a king over themselves. (2 Kings viii. 20.) They were again subdued by Amaziah, king of Judah, (2 Kings xiv. 7.) who brought them back under the yoke, and slew many thousands; as did also Judas Maccabæus, and Hyrcanus, his nephew, who compelled a great number of them to embrace Judaism, and they were incorporated with that nation; but many fled to the Arabians; and thus the prophecy received its full completion.—(1 Mac. v. 2.; Joseph. Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 9.)

The issue of this business is such as might have been expected. Esau vows revenge; and Jacob, having obtained his father's leave, goes to Padan-aram to avoid the consequences, and, at the same time, to provide himself a wife among his father's kindred. As to Isaac, he was almost blind; and, as appears, very infirm and feeble, inasmuch that Esau expected his speedy decease: for he said, "The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I slay my brother." Thus "he comforted himself," as his mother expresses it, with purposes of murder!—O how awful must that state of mind be, that can find no relief but in revenge and blood! Rebekah, who had been the occasion of this animosity, was now alarmed for the consequences. "Why (said she) should I be deprived of you

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 3. A multitude of people.—Hebrew, "An assembly of people;" or congregation, or church of people.—Dr. A. Clarke. But the word is used also of a body of military, Ezek. xxiii. 24.

Ver. 5. Sent away Jacob.—[Whoever observes Jacob's life, after he had surreptitiously obtained his father's blessing, will perceive that he enjoyed very little worldly felicity. His brother proposed to murder him, to avoid which he was in a manner banished from his father's house;—his uncle Laban deceived him, so he had deceived his father, and treated him with great rigour;—after a servitude of twenty-one years, he was obliged to leave him in a clandestine manner, not without danger of being brought back, or murdered by his enraged brother;—no sooner were these fears over, than he experienced the baseness of his son Reuben, in defiling his bed;—he had next to bewail the treachery and cruelty of Simeon and Levi towards the Shechemites;—then he had to feel and lament the loss of his beloved wife;—he was next informed that he had deceived his sons, and had to lament the supposed untimely end of Joseph;—and to complete all, he was forced by famine to go into Egypt, and there died in a strange land. So just, wonderful, and instructive are all the ways of Providence!]—Bagster.

both in one day?" That is, of Jacob by the hand of Esau, and of Esau by the hand of the avenger of blood. (Gen. ix. 6.) Rebekah also reaped the fruit of her own folly, for she lost her favourite son for ever; for Jacob returned not till she was no more numbered among the living.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—22. The vision of Jacob's ladder.—Isaac, in parting with Jacob, seems to recollect, that in blessing him under the disguise of Esau, he had omitted an important part of the blessing, which he now adds:—"God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a multitude of people; and give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee and to thy seed with thee: that thou mayest inherit the land wherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham."—"Who does not perceive (says Fuller) the difference between this blessing and the former? In that, he was thinking of one person and blessing another; in this, he understands what he is about. Then, his mind was straightened by carnal attachment; now it is enlarged by faith. The rich promises of Abraham's covenant seem there to have been almost forgotten; but here they are expressly named, and dwelt upon with delight."

We may remark, also, how human policy often disappoints itself by overreaching others. Rebekah, when she plotted to get Esau's blessing for Jacob, did not consider the difference of

Ver. 14. Thou shalt spread abroad.—Hebrew, "Break forth," like waters, on the right and left.

Ver. 17. The gate of heaven.—It was probably from some tradition of this event, that the term was used astronomically by the Platonists and others. The sign Cancer, was considered by them the gate through which souls descended; and Capricorn, that by which they ascended, in their migration. The Hindus believe in fourteen spheres, through which souls migrate into a state of reward or punishment. Maurice, speaking of the caverns used as sacred temples in India, says, "In these they erected a high ladder, which had seven gates, through which the soul ascends to the mansions of felicity."

Ver. 18. Took the stone.—[The practice of setting up stones as a memorial by travellers still exists in Persia and other parts of the East. Morier states that he had frequently seen it in the East, particularly on a high road leading to a great town, whence the town is first seen.]—Bagster. Poured oil upon the top of it.—Some of the Rabbins pretend that this very stone was placed under the ark of the covenant in the second temple; and the Mahometans flatter themselves that it forms the foundation of the temple of Mecca.—Calmet.

Tavernier (the celebrated traveller) relates, that it is a part of the duty of the priests of their pillar idols, to anoint them daily. From these stones also originated the Batyli, or Betuli, of the ancients, used as oracles, and worn as charms.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Jacob cometh to the well of Haran: 13 Laban entertaineth him. 18 Jacob covenanteth for Rachel: 23 he is deceived with Leah: 28 he marrieth also Rachel.

THEN Jacob <sup>a</sup> went on his journey, and came into the land of the <sup>b</sup> people of the east.

2 And he looked, and beheld a well in the field, and lo, there were three flocks of sheep lying by it; <sup>c</sup> for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great stone was upon the well's mouth.

3 And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth and watered the sheep, and put the stone again upon the well's mouth in his place.

4 And Jacob said unto them, My brethren, whence be ye? And they said, Of <sup>d</sup> Haran are we.

5 And he said unto them, Know ye Laban the son of Nahor? And they said, We know him.

6 And he said unto them, <sup>e</sup> Is he well? <sup>f</sup> And they said, He is well: and behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep.

8 And they said, We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the stone <sup>h</sup> from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

9 ¶ And while he yet spake with them, Rachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them.

10 And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, and rolled the stone from the well's <sup>i</sup> mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his <sup>j</sup> voice, and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he was her <sup>k</sup> father's brother, and that he was Rebekah's <sup>l</sup> son; and she ran and told her father.

their characters; or, that what would be most gratifying to Esau, would not make Jacob happy. He had obtained, indeed, the pre-eminence and the blessing of the firstborn, but it is the blessing of Abraham and of Abraham's God—to be the father of the church and of the Messiah, and, above all, to be personally interested in his covenant—these were the blessings to make Jacob happy, and to which he was now about to be introduced.

How far Esau understood the principal design of Jacob, in going to Padan-aram, we are not informed. It was ostensibly to get a wife, upon the ground that both his parents were averse to his marrying a Hittite. Esau had already married two of these; but having (as we may suppose) an inclination for a third wife, he married a daughter of Ishmael, Abraham's son by Hagar, with a view to gratify his father; though we do not see how this could relieve Rebekah's trouble, while he still retained the daughters of Heth, who were probably idolaters.

We follow Jacob to Padan-aram, the northern part of Mesopotamia. In his way thither, he came to a place called Luz, (a little town, perhaps only an encampment,) where being overtaken by night, he took a large stone for his pillow, and laid himself down to sleep; and, as this seems to be the first communion he held with heaven, it merits our attentive examination. A great many fanciful things have been said on this subject, which we shall pass by, and consider this vision, 1. As an exhibition of Divine Providence by the ministration of angels, ascending and descending upon a ladder of light, which reached even from earth to heaven. 2. It may be considered as an exhibition of the scheme of human redemption; so our Lord himself explains it: "Hereafter ye shall see heaven opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the son of man." (John i. 51.) In either case the angels are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation." (Heb. i. 14.) Jacob must have heard the doctrine of angels in his father's house; and it is not improbable he had heard, that when Abraham sent his father Isaac to seek a wife in the country whither he was now going, he said to him, the Lord "shall send his angel before thee;" and now he was led to expect a like convoy and conductor. (Chap. xxiv. 7.) We must remark also, that while the Shechinah (the glory of the Lord, as the Chaldee reads) stood above the ladder, the Lord proclaimed himself the God both of Abraham and of Isaac, and renewed to Jacob the promise he had made to them of the land of Canaan, including the spot whereon he lay. "And, behold, I am with thee, (saith the Lord,) and will keep thee in the places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land: for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." And Jacob awoke out of his sleep, and said, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not. How dreadful (or rather awful) is this place!—the house of God, and the gate of heaven!" that is, the residence of the Deity, and the entrance into heaven! Jacob, therefore, rose up early in the morning, took the stone on which he had laid his head, set it upright as a pillar, and consecrating it by pouring oil on it, named it Bethel, which signifies "God's house."

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 2. A great stone was upon the well's mouth.—In Arabia, and other places, they cover up their wells of water, lest the sand, which is put into motion by the winds, should fill and quite stop them up. (Charatān.) So great was their care not to leave the well open any length of time, that they waited till the flocks were all gathered together before they began to draw water; and when they had finished, the well was immediately closed again.—Harmer's Observ.

Ver. 2, 3. For sheep, the Samaritan and Arabic read shepherds, which the Hebrew sufficiently implies; for sheep would not come without a shepherd; neither could sheep roll away the stone.

Ver. 6. Is he well? And they said, He is well.—The Hebrew reads, "Is there peace? And they said, Peace." This is the usual form of expression

This stone, (as Ainsworth tells us,) some of the Hebrew doctors make to signify Messias, "the stone which the builders (afterwards) refused, but which is now become the head of the corner—the chief corner stone." (Psalm cxviii. 22. Matt. xxi. 42.) And he vowed a vow, saying, "If God will be with me," or, "O that God would be with me! and keep me, and give me necessary food and raiment, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall Jehovah be my God—this stone shall be God's house, . . . and of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Thus Jacob, who had but a short time before affixed the name of Jehovah to a lie, is now filled with awe of that holy name—takes up the words of the divine promise, and makes a solemn devotion of himself, and a tenth of all the property he might acquire, to his service, who had thus graciously appeared to him. This promise he accordingly fulfilled many years afterwards, by the erection of a permanent altar, after having buried all the secret idols and instruments of superstition belonging to his family, beneath the oak near Shechem, (see chap. xxxv. 1, &c.)

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 1—14. Jacob meets Rachel at the well of Haran.—"And Jacob lift up his feet," as the Hebrew reads, which is allowed to express cheerfulness and alacrity in his journey to the people (or rather children) of the east, whither he was travelling. The sacred vision with which he had been just favoured, animated and encouraged him to pursue his journey with new vigour, and it appears he soon accomplished it. A devotional spirit should not make us negligent and idle in our temporal concerns.—When he arrives in the neighbourhood of his uncle Laban, he finds three flocks of sheep, and, of course, shepherds with them, waiting for a fourth flock, which was Laban's, and which Rachel came to water. The historian here intimates, that it was customary to roll a large stone to the mouth of every well, doubtless to protect it from the sands of the desert; and that this stone was so weighty, that it required the aid of several shepherds to remove it; but Jacob, the moment he saw Rachel, ran and rolled away the stone, intending, perhaps, by this act of prowess and attention, to recommend himself to her notice; in this he evidently succeeded, and was soon after conducted into Laban's house and family, where he was so well received, that he abode with him "a month of days," as the Hebrew phrase is.

There is something very affecting in the first interview between Jacob and Rachel. First, he runs and waters her flock; then he returns and kisses her; "and then lifted up his voice, and wept." Ah! who can tell what a multitude of thoughts now rushed into his mind to produce those tears? First, he thought of Rachel, and in her saw every thing amiable and engaging; then of himself—alas! what a contrast to the situation of his father Isaac! Poor Jacob, alone and unattended, comes to seek a wife, with no presents to offer her, and with no means to procure his wish but long servitude. Then, again, might he think of his aged and apparently dying father—of his fond, though faulty mother, whose cruel kindness had plunged him into these circumstances, and driven him from his father's house, perhaps never to return: and yet, at the in the East; and a salam, which is a wish of peace, implies their usual form of salutation.

Ver. 7. It is yet high day.—The Hebrew reads, "Yet the day is great;" intimating there was time to give the flocks another feed before watering.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 9. For she kept them.—(In those primitive times, a pastoral life was not only considered useful but honourable; nor was it beneath the dignity of the daughters of the most opulent chiefs to carry water from the well, or tend the sheep. Jacob, Moses, and David, were shepherds; and the scholiast on the Odyssey, informs us, that the sons of kings were often keepers of flocks. Indeed the title given to Agrammon, and other ancient monarchs was, "shepherd of his people."—Bagster.

14 And Laban said to him, Surely thou art my bone and my flesh. And he abode with him the space of a month.

15 ¶ And Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for nought? tell me, what shall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel.

17 Leah was tender-eyed, but Rachel was beautiful and well-favoured.

18 And Jacob loved Rachel; and said, I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban said, It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her.

21 ¶ And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife, for my days are fulfilled, that I may go in unto her.

22 And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, and made a feast.

23 And it came to pass in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and brought her to him; and he went in unto her.

24 And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah Zilpah his maid for a handmaid.

25 And it came to pass, that in the morning, behold, it was Leah: and he said to Laban, What is this thou hast done unto me? did not

I serve with thee for Rachel? wherefore then hast thou beguiled me?

26 And Laban said, It must not be so done in our country, to give the younger before the first-born.

27 Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years.

28 And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also.

29 And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter Bilhah his handmaid to be her maid.

30 And he went in also unto Rachel, and he loved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him yet seven other years.

31 ¶ And when the LORD saw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb: but Rachel was barren.

32 And Leah conceived, and bare a son; and she called his name Reuben: for she said, Surely the LORD hath looked upon my affliction; now therefore my husband will love me.

33 And she conceived again, and bare a son: and said, Because the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this son also: and she called his name Simeon.

34 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Now this time will my husband be joined unto me, because I have borne him three sons: therefore was his name called Levi.

35 And she conceived again, and bare a son: and she said, Now will I praise the LORD: therefore she called his name Judah, and left bearing.

same time, it was impossible for him to forget the gracious encouragement he had met with in his way at Bethel, or the pleasing prospect of a kind reception, especially from the object of his affection. Ah! how many ingredients go to form the bliss or misery of a moment! Jacob kissed Rachel and wept!

Ver. 15–35. Jacob contracts for Rachel, and is married to Leah.—When Jacob was introduced to Laban, we are informed he “told him all things;” that is, explained his situation, so far as to account for his appearance alone and unattended, for otherwise Laban might well wonder to find him come in such a humble form, with a staff only; when Abraham sent his head servant with rich presents, and camels, and attendants, when he sent for a wife for Isaac. Laban appears to sympathize with him, saying, “Surely thou art bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh;” while, at the same time, finding Jacob so active and useful a servant, he endeavours to turn these circumstances to his own advantage. “True,” said he, “thou art my brother,” (or kinsman,) but that is no reason thou shalt serve me for nothing: What shall thy wages be? Jacob then makes the offer of seven years servitude for Rachel, which is accepted, and such was his affection, that they appear to him but as a few days. When they were expired, however, he demanded his wife, to which Laban appeared cheerfully to agree, and made a marriage feast; but, at the consummation of the marriage, Laban fraudulently introduced his eldest daughter instead of Rachel, which was not difficult, as the bride was always closely veiled. In the morning, when the imposition was discovered, and Jacob complained to Laban, the latter excused himself from the custom of the country, which would not allow him to marry off his younger daughter before the elder. But this, if true, Laban knew from the beginning, and should have candidly informed him: but Laban’s plan was doubtless to retain Jacob for another seven years, and to marry off both his daughters.

It seems not difficult in this case to penetrate Jacob’s feelings and reflections, and it is not impossible but a confession of the manner in which he had deceived his father Isaac, first suggested to Laban the plan of deceiving him. On this occasion, Bishop Hall very properly remarks as follows:—“Jacob’s mother had before, in a cunning disguise, substituted him, who was the younger son, for the elder; and now his father-in-law, by a like fraud, substitutes to him the elder daughter for the younger. God comes oftentimes home to us in our own kind; and even by the sin of others pays us (for) our own, when we look not for it. It is doubtful whether it were a greater cross to marry whom he would not, or to be disappointed of her whom he desired.”

As the marriage was, however, consummated, it was too late to recal it; Laban, therefore, proposes to complete the marriage feast, and then gives him Rachel also, thus economically making one feast serve for both weddings: and that Jacob might not fear another disappointment, he allows him to take Rachel beforehand; or, as he expresses it, “for the service thou shalt serve with me yet other seven years.” Thus Jacob was drawn into polygamy, evidently without intention, and gave another example of its evils; for he loved Rachel better than her sister, who seems to have had weak or tender eyes, which made her the less likely to be sought in marriage.

The partiality of Jacob to Rachel appears to have afforded great uneasiness to Leah, and therefore Providence compensated her want of personal charms by rendering her fruitful; for she bare to Jacob four children, while his beloved Rachel continued barren, which was considered as a great misfortune among the Hebrew women. Thus “God setteth one thing over against the other,” balancing circumstances of prosperity and affliction, that we may not have reason to say his ways are not equal. (Eccl. vii. 14. Ezek. xviii. 2.) Leah had the honour to bear the four first of the twelve Patriarchs, and she named them, as was common among the ancients, from existing circumstances. Thus, because her firstborn was a son, according to her wishes, she named him Reuben, which our translators explain in the margin, “See a son!” The second was called Simeon, that is, “Hearing;” because, saith she, brought her to him.—“This deceit of giving Leah to Jacob instead of Rachel, was the more easy, because the bride was introduced veiled to the bridegroom. The following passage from Quesada (Travels in Persia) is particularly applicable here:—“If they are people of any consideration, they bring up their daughters locked up in their chambers, to hide them from view; and they cannot be seen by the bridegroom till they are received in the chamber. In this manner many a one is deceived, and receives, instead of a handsome and a deformed and ugly girl; nay, instead of the daughter, some other relation, or even a servant maid.”—Orient. Cost.

Ver. 24. And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah, Zilpah his maid for a handmaid.—Chardin observes, that none but very poor people marry a daughter in the East, without giving her a female slave for a handmaid; there being no hired servants there as in Europe. So Solomon supposes they were extremely poor that had not a servant. Prov. xii. 9.—Harmer’s Observ.

Ver. 26. It must not be so done in our country.—There is certainly a law among the Hindoos to this effect.—Hindoo’s Code.
Ver. 28. And Laban gave unto his daughter Rachel, Bilhah his maid for a handmaid.—The public marriage feast, made on this occasion, seems to have formed the regular method of recognising the marriage, and lasted seven days; it would therefore have been improper to have broken off the solemnities to which all the men of the place had been invited, Ver. 17. Tender-eyed.—(Dr. Adam Clarke thinks that the original word denotes just the reverse of the signification generally given to it; and that it signifies “soft, delicate, lovely.”) The design of the inspired writer, he observes, is to compare both the sisters together, that the balance may appear greatly in favour of Rachel. The chief recommendation of Leah, was her soft and beautiful eyes; but Rachel was yephath toar, beautiful in her shape, person, mien, and gait; and yephath mareh, beautiful in her countenance.—“The words plainly signify a fine shape and fine features; all that can be considered as essential to personal beauty.”—Bagster.

Ver. 18. And Jacob loved Rachel, &c.—Because he had no money or other goods, which he could give to the father for his daughter, he offers seven years servitude. For among many people of the East, in ancient and modern times, we find it customary, not for the bride to bring a dowry to the bridegroom, but the bridegroom must, in a manner, purchase the girl whom he intends to marry from the father, by either cattle or money; and sometimes (when poor) by personal service. Thus the Burdooranees in Cabul, even at this day, live some of them with their future father-in-law, and earn their bride by their services, like Jacob and Rachel, without ever seeing the object of their wishes.—Edgington’s Cabul. Orient. Lit.

and brought them unto his mother Leah. Then Rachel said to Leah, Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes.

15 And she said unto her, Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? and wouldest thou take away my son's mandrakes also? And Rachel said, Therefore he shall lie with thee to-night for thy son's mandrakes.

25 ¶ And it came to pass, when Rachel had borne Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, Send me away, that I may go unto mine own place, and to my country.

26 Give me my wives and my children, for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for "the Lord hath heard that I was hated." Again, the third time, she bore a son, and called his name Levi, that is, "joined" (or united), "because (said she) now will my husband be joined to me, because I have borne him three sons." A fourth time she conceived and bare Judah, which signifies "Praise;" saying, "Now will I praise the Lord"—in all which she seems to discover good sense and piety. And now she left off bearing for the present, with a strong expression of her gratitude to Divine Providence.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1—21. Jacob's other children enumerated.—There appears to us something very extraordinary, and in some respects unseemly in the desire so universally expressed by good women of old, to have children. In Leah, indeed, it is not to be wondered at, as she was anxious to engage the affections of her husband, who had married her under a mistake; but Rachel possessed his warmest love, and was not slighted because she had no offspring. On the contrary, well knowing that "children are an heritage from the Lord" (Ps. cxxvii. 3.) Jacob is angry with her for repining, and reproves her sharply: "Am I in God's stead?" saith he, "who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?" But "the blessing of Abraham" was a numerous posterity; and, in particular, one illustrious person, (Christ,) in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed." It was then, we may reasonably believe, an object of their laudable ambition to contribute to fulfil the prophecy; and we must not wonder if many of Eve's daughters flattered themselves, like their first parent, with the hope of being the mother of the Messiah. (Gen. iv. 1.) Rachel was, however, so impatient, that she entreated him to take her handmaid Bilhah to his bed, that, as Sarah had said with respect to Hagar, (chap. xvi. 1—6.) she might be "built by her;" knowing that the children, in this case, would be reckoned to her account.

Notwithstanding the confusion that had been brought by Hagar into the family of his grandfather Abraham, Jacob agrees to this proposal, and Bilhah bears a son, whom Rachel, as claiming it for her own, calls Dan, that is, "Judging;" for God (said she) hath "judged me, and heard the voice of my supplications." And when Bilhah bears another son, she called his name Naphtali, meaning, "My wrestlings;" because "with great wrestlings had she wrestled with her sister, and prevailed."

Leah now began to be jealous; and, supposing she had herself done bearing children, gave her handmaid Zilpah also unto Jacob, who bore him two sons. The former was named by Leah, Gad, "a troop cometh," probably expecting several more to follow; but if so, she was disappointed, for she bore one other only, and she called his name Asher, which signifies "Happy," or blessed; saying, "Happy am I, for the daughters will call me blessed." Leah herself, however, had two other children, Issachar and Zebulun. The former name signifies "Hire;" because, said she, God has given me my hire, or rather rewarded me; and the latter "Dwelling;" for "now my husband will dwell with me, because I have borne him six sons." Leah bare also a daughter, and called her name Dinah, which is the feminine of Dan, and of the same import.

Ver. 22—43. The birth of Joseph, and Laban's new contract with Jacob.—At length, God remembers Rachel, and she bears a son, whose eventful history occupies more room, and creates greater interest, than the fate of all his brethren. "She bare a (ver. 22.) and probably Laban wished to keep the fraud from the public eye. It is perfectly plain that Jacob did not serve seven years more before he got Rachel to wife.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 6. Rachel said, God hath given me a son.—It was remarked above, (Expos. of chap. xvi. 1—6.) that the children of the slave were reckoned to the mistress; and therefore, as it seems in those early times to have been the prerogative of the mother to name her children, Rachel names the son which Bilhah bore as her own, "God hath judged me." &c.

Ver. 8. Rachel said, With great wrestlings.—Margin, "With wrestlings of God;" i. e. "with divine and vehement wrestlings."—Atinsworth. But Parkhurst translates, "By the twistings, agency, or operation of God, I am intertwined with my sister;" i. e. my family is now interwoven with my sister's, and has a chance of producing the promised seed." The LXX., Aquila, and Vulgate, give nearly the same meaning.—Dr. A. Clarke.
Ver. 11. Gad is commonly explained to mean "a troop," as in the margin: but the LXX., Vulgate, Montanus, and Castellus, render it "prosperity;" and so Dr. Boothroyd; and some think it has an allusion to the goddess Fortuna. Theodoret therefore censures it as Paganish, and supposes that Leah might be still attached to idolatry.

Ver. 14. And Reuben . . . found MANDRAKES in the field.—What these were is much disputed. The Hebrew word is Dudaïm, which according to some, means love-apples. Hasselquist, in his Voyages, found a great number of these plants (as he says) in Galilee, which were ripe in May, (when the wheat harvest begins in Judea) and with agreeable travellers and naturalists, describes them of a strong nauseous smell, and not good to eat; but then, as a Samaritan priest told Marandrell, "they were supposed to help conception, by being laid under the bed." 2. Others think the Dudaïm a kind of melon. The editor of Calmet says, the word signifies a woman's breast, (mamma; see Ezek. xxiii. 3, &c.) and that there is a species of melon (chama), so called in Persia to this day, "nearly the figure of the coloquintida; colour milled red and yellow, and of a very agreeable odour. The Syrians and Egyptians call it shemama. It is held in the hand, by way of nosegay, and the Persians call it perfume of the hands."—Taylor's Expos. Index. Parkhurst's Heb. Lex.

Ver. 18. God hath given me mine hire.—Alluding, probably, to the incident related ver. 14—16.

Ver. 25. Send me away.—[The 14 years which Jacob had engaged to serve for Rachel and Leah, being expired, he was willing to depart, depending on God's promise, without any other recompense from Laban for his hard service, than his large family: though he could appeal to Laban himself, that he had served him with diligence, fidelity, and success.]—Bagster.

thou knowest my <sup>a</sup> service which I have done thee.

27 And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have found <sup>d</sup> favour in thine eyes, tarry <sup>e</sup> for I have learned by experience that the LORD hath blessed me <sup>e</sup> for thy sake.

28 And he said, Appoint me thy <sup>f</sup> wages, and I will give it.

29 And he said unto him, Thou knowest how I have served thee, <sup>g</sup> and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now <sup>h</sup> increased unto a multitude; and the LORD hath blessed thee <sup>i</sup> since my coming: and now, when shall I provide for mine own <sup>j</sup> house also?

31 And he said, What shall I give thee? And Jacob said, Thou shalt not give me any thing: if thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock:

32 I will pass through all thy flock to-day, removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats: and of such shall be my <sup>k</sup> hire.

33 So shall my <sup>l</sup> righteousness answer for me <sup>m</sup> in time to come, when it shall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

34 And Laban said, Behold, I would it might be according to thy word.

35 And he removed that day the he-goats that were ring-streaked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into the hands of his sons.

36 And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob: and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks.

37 ¶ And Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chesnut-tree; and pilled white streaks in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering-troughs when the flocks came to drink; that they should conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks conceived before the rods, and brought forth cattle <sup>n</sup> ring-streaked, speckled, and spotted.

40 And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ring-streaked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban: and he put his own flocks by themselves, and put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to pass whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: so the feebler were Laban's and the stronger Jacob's.

43 And the man <sup>o</sup> increased exceedingly, and had much <sup>p</sup> cattle, and maid-servants, and men-servants, and camels, and asses.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 Jacob upon displeasure departed secretly. 22 Laban pursued after him. 44 The covenant of Laban and Jacob at Galeed.

AND he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, Jacob hath taken away all that son, and said, God hath taken away my reproach." for as such barrenness was always considered among the Hebrews; "and she called his name Joseph," that is, "Adding;" and said, "the Lord shall add (or may be add) to me another son!" He did so some time after in the person of Benjamin, with whom she died in childhood. Alas! how often are our wishes fatal!

So soon as Rachel was recovered from her lying-in, Jacob began to think seriously of returning to his father's house, and applied to Laban for his dismissal. Laban, however, entreated him to stay; for, said he, "I have learned by experience that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." He was, therefore, anxious to retain his services, and offers to give him wages; but Jacob having seen an admonitory vision, (ch. xxxi. 11.), offers to continue his services for the spotted cattle only. This narrative is confessedly obscure, and appears confused; but the antiquity of the book, and the want of collateral records, are sufficient to account for this; what appears intelligible and certain may be brought under two or three remarks.

1. It appears evident, that before Laban agreed to Jacob's proposal, he carefully separated all the spotted cattle from his flocks, and sent them by his own sons to the distance of three days' journey, which not only prevented Jacob from claiming any of these speckled sheep or goats already in existence, but, in a great measure, the chance of such being produced in future; and it should seem that Laban so understood it, by the readiness with which he assented to this plan. Jacob having now no spotted cattle to produce their like, has recourse to a stratagem, which completely answered his design.—2. How far Jacob can be vindicated from a selfish policy, it may be hard to say; yet certainly Providence favoured him in a singular manner, though that by no means justifies Jacob, for God often prospers worldly and covetous men, as to their temporal concerns: but as the God of Jacob claims the cattle on a thousand hills, he has certainly a right to dispose of them as he pleases. 3. As Jacob was justly punished for deceiving his father, in the fraud practised upon him by Laban; so Laban was as justly punished for the cheat practised in imposing Leah upon Jacob, after making him serve seven years for Rachel; and thus, in fact, defrauding him of seven years' labour, besides fixing on him for life a woman he disliked. 4. Though it is not easy to explain exactly all the particulars, Laban certainly was a hard and capricious master, who had changed the wages of his son-in-law ten times, as he complains. First, he was to have Rachel, then Leah, then again Rachel; then the spotted cattle, and the ringstreaked; and probably other changes, of which we know not. Both his wives, Leah as well as Rachel, admitted the harsh conduct of their father, and proposed to accompany Jacob wherever he might go. Lastly, God himself confirms the charge against Laban, as we shall see in verse 12 of the following chapter. Indeed, the hand of God is evident in all these transactions; and if, for the last six years, Jacob was enriched at the expense of Laban, Laban himself admits that, for the fourteen years preceding, he had been blessed for Jacob's sake.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1—24. Jacob departs secretly from Laban.—Jacob having overheard the murmuring of Laban's sons, not admitted, it seems strange that we had not heard of this dream before the relation of it by Jacob, though it seems to have taken place immediately after the bargain of Jacob with Laban—the very order in which it here is placed.—Bagster.

Ver. 32. And he set the rods which he had pilled, (or peeled.) &c.—Writers on the breeding of sheep affirm, and shepherds in general believe, that there is no animal on which the imagination has so much influence on the young, as the sheep, during their gestation. Hence Jacob employed the stratagem of placing something spotted before the sheep when they came there, that their lambs might be speckled. So much is certain, that even in the latest times a similar method is adopted to obtain a contrary result, white cloths hung up in their field; and even water-troughs of perfectly white stone given them, in order to have white lambs.—Michaëlis.—That they should conceive. Hebrew. (as margin) "be in heat."

Ver. 43. And the man increased exceedingly.—Margin, "Broke forth much much."

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1. Hath he gotten all this glory.—The Hebrew Cab d, besides glory, signifies both weight and riches; (hence we read of a weight) was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this <sup>μ</sup> a glory.

2 And Jacob beheld the <sup>b</sup> countenance of Laban, and behold, it was not <sup>c</sup> toward him <sup>d</sup> as before.

3 And the Lord said unto Jacob, Return unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be <sup>e</sup> with thee.

4 And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock,

5 And said unto them, I see your father's countenance, that it is not toward me as before: but the God of my father hath been with <sup>f</sup> me.

6 And ye know that with all my power I have served <sup>g</sup> your father.

7 And your father hath deceived me, and changed my <sup>h</sup> wages ten times: but God suffered him not to hurt <sup>i</sup> me.

8 If he said thus, The speckled shall be thy wages; then all the cattle bare speckled: and if he said thus, The ring-streaked shall be thy hire; then bare all the cattle ring-streaked.

9 Thus God hath taken away the cattle of your father, and given <sup>j</sup> them to me.

10 And it came to pass at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and saw in a dream, and behold, the <sup>k</sup> rams which leaped upon the cattle were ring-streaked, speckled, and <sup>l</sup> grizzled.

11 And the angel of God <sup>m</sup> spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob: And I said, <sup>n</sup> Here am I.

12 And he said, Lift up now thine eyes and see, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ring-streaked, speckled, and grizzled: for I have seen <sup>o</sup> all that Laban doeth unto thee.

13 I am the God of <sup>p</sup> Beth-el, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto me: now arise, get thee out from this land, and return <sup>p</sup> unto the land of thy kindred.

14 And Rachel and Leah answered, and said unto him, Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house?

15 Are we not counted of him strangers? for he hath sold <sup>q</sup> us, and hath quite devoured also our money.

16 For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that <sup>r</sup> is ours, and our children's: now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do.

17 ¶ Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives upon <sup>s</sup> camels;

18 And he carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram; for to go to Isaac his <sup>t</sup> father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to shear his sheep: and Rachel had stolen the <sup>u</sup> images <sup>v</sup> that were her father's.

20 And Jacob stole away <sup>w</sup> unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had; and he rose up, and passed over the <sup>x</sup> river, and set his face <sup>y</sup> toward the mount Gilead.

22 And it was told Laban on the third day that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took his brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days' journey: and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.

24 And God came to Laban the Syrian in a <sup>z</sup> dream by night, and said unto him, Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either <sup>aa</sup> good or bad.

25 ¶ Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jathat he had taken unfair advantages of their father, and observed that Laban's looks and conduct recently had expressed the same sentiment, thinks it now expedient for him to return to his father's house; at the same time being aware that, as in a former instance, some plan would be proposed to detain him, and, perhaps, under one pretence or another, to keep back his wives, he resolves on withdrawing privately, when Laban was absent shearing his sheep, (ver. 19.) probably with his sons, at three days' journey distance. (Chap. xxx. 36.) These circumstances he lays before his two wives, the daughters of Laban; and at the same time relates to them a vision, in which he had been encouraged to act as he had done with respect to the cattle; and that he was now commanded, by the God of Bethel, to return home. His wives perfectly agree with him, as to the disposition and conduct of their father, and express the utmost readiness to accompany him wherever he might go, having no longer any portion or interest in their father's house, but treated by him as strangers: "Now, therefore," say they, "whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do."

Jacob, therefore, immediately collects together his property, places his wives and children upon camels, and sets off privately with his cattle and other property, to go to the land of Canaan, and had proceeded as far as mount Gilead before Laban could overtake him. This journey must have taken Jacob ten days, incumbered as he was with the cattle; though it took Laban but seven, accompanied only by his sons and other male relatives, here called his brethren. (See chap. xxix. 15.) It was, no doubt, Laban's object to carry back Jacob's property, and perhaps his wives; but on the night preceding their meeting, he had been warned of God not to injure him: "Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad;" which in our idiom, means, Do nothing to vex or grieve him.

The most mysterious circumstance in this section of the sacred narrative is, that Rachel stole Laban's images; in the Hebrew, Teraphim. The word differs but in one letter from: Seraphim, and some think they were images resembling the sacred Cherubim, or the human form in them. (See 1 Sam. xix. 13-16.) Not public idols, but images of superstition; a sort of household gods, consulted, perhaps, as oracles, or used as instruments of divination. In this view they might have been employed by Laban; and Rachel may have been induced to take them, to prevent his employing them to direct him in his pursuit. This is the notion of some of the Rabbins, and the interpretation most favourable to Rachel, who, it should be remembered, lived in a pagan country, and whose father probably divided his devotions between the God of Abraham and the gods of Nahor and of Terah. (See ver. 53.) From her taking these secretly, it is evident that she knew Jacob would have disapproved of her conduct; and if she made use of them hereafter, it must be by stealth. This, however, it should seem she did, and they proved such a snare, that Jacob insisted on their being all buried beneath the oak in Shechem. (Chapter xxxv. 2-5.)

Ver. 25-42. Laban overtakes Jacob.—Laban is so far softened by the vision of the preceding night, that, instead of an hostile attack, he only reproaches Jacob with unkindness; and complains that, by stealing away thus privately, he had deprived him of the pleasure of taking leave of his daughters and his sons, (that is, his grandchildren;) and that, instead of being attended "with mirth and songs," his daughters were carried of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 17.) and with great propriety, for though riches are the chief glory of men, (Eccl. vi. 2) yet are they also a great weight and burden. So in the original of Gen. xiii. we read, Abraham was very weighty. This phrase originated in paying money by weight. See Ainsworth.

Ver. 2. As before.—Hebrew, "As yesterday and the day before;" meaning some time since.

Ver. 7. Changed my wages ten times.—That is, frequently. See Num. xiv. 22. Job xix. 3.

Ver. 10. Grizzled.—[The original word beroodim, from barad, "hail," means marked with white spots like hail: to which our word grizzled, from the old French grais, now gris, hail, perfectly agrees; hence gresle, spotted with white on a dark ground.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. And devoured also our money.—Money (Heb. silver) must be taken in the general sense of price, and is so rendered by Dr. Boothroyd: for Jacob paid for his wives by labour, not by silver.

Ver. 19. Laban went to shear his sheep.—The time of sheep-shearing, according to Harmer, is in March; this, therefore, marks the time when Jacob fled.—Rachel had stolen the images; in Hebrew, Teraphim. Having expressed above what we think most probable, we only add, from Rosenmüller, that the Persians have small images, used in the Sabian worship, and called Teraphim, made of metal, for the most part in the human form, and cast under particular aspects of the planets, and inscribed with magical characters. They were said to make oracular answers, and discover lost goods, &c. The Pagan nations of the north of Europe had similar superstitions.—Orient. Lit.

Ver. 20. Stole away unawares.—Margin, "Stolen away the heart of Laban." But Ainsworth reads, "Stolen (from) the heart of Laban;" meaning, without his knowledge. We have a vulgar phrase somewhat similar: to steal a march, is to decamp privately.

Ver. 21. He passed over the river.—This was the river Perah, or Euphrates, sometimes called the great river.—Univ. Hist. Dr. Clarke thinks, that notwithstanding the greatness of this river, there might be fords passable, at least at times. —See his face toward mount Gilead. We have remarked before, that Moses often names places, not as they were previously known, but subsequently: so the name Gilead is applied to a considerable range of mountains. S. E. of Lebanon, and to the adjacent country, all which doubtless were named from Galeed, the heap of witness.—Wells's Geog.

Ver. 24. Either good or bad.—Hebrew, "From good to bad." Dr. Clarke thinks the meaning is not to begin with smooth and kind language, (as La-cob had pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban said to Jacob, What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and carried away my daughters, as captives <sup>a</sup> taken with the sword?

27 Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and <sup>b</sup> steal away from me, and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and with <sup>c</sup> songs, with tabret, and with harp?

28 And hast not suffered me to kiss my <sup>d</sup> sons, and my daughters? thou hast now done foolishly in so doing.

29 It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt: but the God of your father spake unto me yesternight, saying, Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now, though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house; yet wherefore hast <sup>e</sup> thou stolen my gods?

31 And Jacob answered and said to Laban, Because I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With whomsoever thou findest thy gods, let him not <sup>f</sup> live: before our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee: for Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into Leah's tent, and into the two maid-servants' tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

34 Now Rachel had taken <sup>g</sup> the images, and put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them. And Laban <sup>h</sup> searched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot rise up <sup>i</sup> before thee; for the custom of women is upon me. And he searched, but found not the images.

off clandestinely, as if they had been captives taken in war. "I, 'his (said he,) thou hast done foolishly." And he tells Jacob, that now it is in his power to "do him hurt;" but he had received a divine admonition to the contrary. "And now, (continues he,) though thou wouldest need be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house, yet wherefore hast thou stolen my gods?" To all the other charges Jacob pleads a justification; but on this he is indignant, and challenges the search, declaring his readiness to give up the thief, when discovered; little thinking that it was one so dear to him as his beloved Rachel. She, however, by artifice, concealed them. Jacob, now, in his turn, was wroth, and reproached Laban with unkind and ungenerous treatment; justifying his own fidelity, and ascribing all that he possessed, not to the generosity of his father-in-law, but to the mercy of God, even "the God of his father Abraham, and the fear of Isaac," but for whose bounty he should have been sent "away empty." The Patriarch then adds, "God hath seen my affliction and the labour of my hands, and rebuked thee yesternight." Laban evidently wished to make a merit of his kindness; but Jacob gives him to understand, that it was no thanks to him: he had gone as far as he dare go, after the rebuke he had met with from the Almighty. Sleeping or waking, what easy access has the Almighty to the man was wont to do, and end with severe and harsh. But Ainsworth thinks the meaning to be, that he was to say nothing as to his main design of forcing them to return.—See 2 Sam. xiii. 22.

Ver. 34. Furniture.—[The word car, rendered "furniture," from the Arabic root "to be round," properly denotes "a large round panier," as cur, and karr, also signify in Arabic, placed one on each side of a camel, for a person, especially women, to ride in. It is a hamper, like a cradle, having a back, head, and sides like a great chair. Morison describes them as "two long chairs like cradles, covered with red cloth, to hang on the two sides of the camel."—Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem. Hanway, (Travels.) calls them kedgavays, which "are a kind of covered chairs, which the Persians hang over their camels in the manner of panniers, and are big enough for one person to sit in." Thevenot, who calls them croues, says that they lay over them as covered cages, hanging on each side of a camel. (See Harmer, Obs.) The late editor of Calmet has furnished a correct delineation of these cars, as seen on one side of a camel, copied from Dalton's Prints of Egyptian Figures.—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Let it not displease my lord.—This very respectful address of Rachel to her father, seems to have dissipated his suspicions as to her; and not only 39 That which was torn of beasts, I brought not unto thee; I bare the loss of it; <sup>l</sup> of my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, or stolen by night.

40 Thus I was; in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night; and my sleep departed from mine eyes.

41 Thus have I been twenty years in thy house: I served thee <sup>m</sup> fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle: and thou hast changed my wages <sup>n</sup> ten times.

42 Except <sup>o</sup> the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and the <sup>p</sup> fear of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. God hath seen mine <sup>q</sup> affliction, and the labour of my hands, and rebuked <sup>r</sup> thee yesternight.

43 ¶ And Laban answered, and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine; and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have borne?

44 Now therefore come thou, let us make a <sup>s</sup> covenant, I and thou; and let it be for a <sup>t</sup> witness between me and thee.

45 And Jacob took a <sup>u</sup> stone, and set it up for a pillar.

46 And Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones, and made a heap: and they did eat there upon the heap.

mind of man, to withdraw him from his purpose. (See Chap. xx. 3. and Exposition.)

Ver. 43—55. The covenant between Laban and Jacob.—God having warned Laban, he now drops all hostile language, and proposes a covenant with Jacob, reminding him that they were all one family: "These daughters are my daughters," &c. "and what can I do this day unto (or rather for) these my daughters," &c. At the same time he insinuates, there was little need for him to do any thing, as all which Jacob now possessed he had received from him—his wives and children, his cattle, and all his property. "Now, therefore, come thou, (said he,) let us make a covenant, I and thou." Jacob, therefore, takes a great stone, and sets it up for a pillar, and directs his kinsmen to gather other stones, till they formed a kind of round table, or altar, out of a heap of stones, and ate and sacrificed thereon, both necessary ceremonies in all covenants of those early ages, as we have before observed. And here we have the first instance of distinct and different languages; Laban naming this "heap of witness" in Chaldee, while Jacob named it in Hebrew, both names signifying the same thing. Another name, given to it by both, is Hebrew, namely, Mizpah, which signifies "a watch-tower," for Laban said, "JEHOVAH watch between me and thee, if thou shalt afflict," or ill was it indelicate to disturb her, but defiling even to touch her. Besides, he would be unwilling to suppose she would treat his domestic gods with such contempt. See Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 40. In the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night.—Col. Campbell, travelling in Mesopotamia, says, "At night we found the weather as piercing cold, as it was distressfully hot in the day time."

Ver. 46. Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones, &c.—Niebuhr, relating his audience with the Imam of Yeman, says, "I found near the door some of the principal officers of the court, who were sitting in the shade upon stones, by the side of the wall. Among them was the Nakib, (or master of the house) . . . He immediately resigned his place to me, and applied himself to draw together stones into a heap, in order to build himself a new seat. . . . The stones are often flat and smooth."—Harmer.—Made a heap.—[The word gal, rendered "heap," properly signifies a round heap or circle; probably like the Druidical remains in England, which have been traced in India, Persia, Western Asia, Greece, and Northern Europe. These usually consist of irregular circles of large stones, with a principal one in the midst; the former probably being used for seats, (See Harmer), and the latter for an altar; corresponding to the stone set up as a pillar by Jacob, and the heap of stones collected by his brethren. They appear to have been used, as Gil-

47 And Laban called it <sup>v</sup> Jegar-sahadutha: but Jacob called it <sup>w</sup> Galeed;

48 And Laban said, This heap <sup>x</sup> is a witness between me and thee this day. Therefore was the name of it called Galeed:

49 And <sup>y</sup> Mizpah; <sup>z</sup> for he said, The LORD watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another.

50 If thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou shalt take <sup>a</sup> other wives besides my daughters, no man <sup>b</sup> is with us; see, God <sup>c</sup> is <sup>d</sup> witness betwixt me and thee.

51 And Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heap, and behold <sup>e</sup> this pillar, which I have cast betwixt me and thee;

53 The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of <sup>j</sup> their father, <sup>k</sup> judge betwixt <sup>l</sup> us. And Jacob <sup>m</sup> swore by the fear <sup>n</sup> of his father Isaac.

54 Then <sup>o</sup> Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount, and called his brethren to eat bread: and they did eat <sup>p</sup> bread, and tarried all night in the mount.

55 And early in the morning Laban rose up, and kissed his sons and his daughters, and <sup>q</sup> blessed them: and Laban departed, and returned unto his <sup>r</sup> place.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 Jacob's vision at Mahanaim: 3 his message to Esau: 9 he prayeth for his deliverance: 24 he wrestleth with an angel at Peniel, where he is called Israel.

AND Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God <sup>s</sup> met him.

2 And when Jacob saw them, he said, This <sup>t</sup> is God's <sup>u</sup> host: and he called the name of that place <sup>v</sup> Mahanaim.<sup>d</sup> trear, "my daughters:" and this be witness that "I will not pass over this heap to thee," nor shalt "thou unto me, for harm." The original term also implies a curse or imprecation on the party who should violate this covenant. "The God of Abraham, the God of Nahor, and the God of their father, judge betwixt us." This language, while it is a most solemn appeal to heaven, seems also to imply, as already intimated, that Laban worshipped other gods besides Jehovah; like many persons halting between two opinions, and wishing "to serve" both "God and mammon."

Jacob, however, swear by "the fear of his father Isaac;" that is, by the God whom Isaac feared, who had never worshipped idols: and Jacob killed beasts, both for food and sacrifice, and they ate together, and "tarried all night in the mount. And early in the morning Laban arose, and kissed his sons and his daughters, and blessed them, and returned to his own place."—"This parting," says Fuller, "proved final. We hear no more of Laban, nor of the family of Nahor. They might for several ages retain some knowledge of Jehovah; but mixing with it the superstitions of the country, they would in the end sink into gross idolatry, and be lost among the heathen."

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 1—23. Jacob sends to meet Esau.—Jacob having reason to fear the resentment of Esau on his return, who was like enough to hear of it through some of La-

4 And he commanded them, saying, Thus shall ye speak unto my <sup>a</sup> lord Esau; Thy servant Jacob saith thus, I have sojourned with Laban, and stayed there until now:

5 And I have oxen, and asses, flocks, and men-servants, and women-servants: and I have sent to tell my lord, that I may find grace <sup>b</sup> in thy sight.

6 ¶ And the messengers returned to Jacob, saying, We came to thy brother Esau, and also he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him.

7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid and <sup>c</sup> distressed: and he divided the people that <sup>d</sup> was with him, and the flocks, and herds, and the camels, into two bands;

8 And said, If Esau come to the one company, and smite it, then the other company which is left shall escape.

9 ¶ And Jacob said, <sup>e</sup> O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac, the LORD which saidst unto me, <sup>f</sup> Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

10 I am <sup>g</sup> not worthy of the least of all the <sup>h</sup> mercies, and of all the <sup>i</sup> truth, which thou hast showed unto thy servant; for with my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am <sup>j</sup> become two bands.

11 Deliver me, <sup>k</sup> I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the <sup>l</sup> mother with the <sup>m</sup> children.

12 And thou <sup>n</sup> saidst, I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 ¶ And he lodged there that same night, and took of that which came to his hand <sup>o</sup> a present for Esau his brother;

gal undoubtedly was, as temples, and as places for holding councils, and assembling the people. For a satisfactory elucidation of this subject, consult the Fragments to Calmet, Nos. 156, 735, 736.]—Bagster.

Ver. 51. Behold this heap, &c.—Is it not highly probable that here were two heaps and two pillars; the one erected by Jacob, and the other by Laban? the one named in Chasdee, Jegar-sahadutha, and in Hebrew, Galeed. Jacob erected this pillar, and called his family to cast stones around it, and form a circular heap, as the term galeed certainly imports. But Laban says he also "cast," or set up (for it is the same word used by Jacob) a pillar and perhaps stones around it, as Jacob and his family had done. This was called Galeed and Mizpah. Otherwise we must suppose two pillars, or large stones, in one heap; one placed there by Jacob, the other by Laban. The question is as unimportant as the text is obscure; but the action used by the speakers, in pointing to this and that must have made all clear at the time.

Ver. 53. Their father.—For avthem. "their father," several MSS. read avchem. "your father," which is probably the genuine reading, as Terah was certainly an idolater.—See Jos. xxiv. 2.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 2. Mahanaim.—This word means two hosts, or camps, as explained in the margin. [Mahanaim, near which a city of Gad of the same name was afterwards built, was evidently situated between Gilead and the river Jabbok, probably near the present Diezan.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. The land of Seir, the country of Edom.—[The land, or mountains, of Seir, was situated south and east of the Dead Sea; forming a continuation of the eastern Syrian chain of mountains, beginning with Antilibanus, and ban's family, prudently sends messengers to soften his resentment; by them he learned that Esau was coming against him with 400 men, doubtless armed and unencumbered; Jacob is, of course, much alarmed. To compose his fears, however, another set of messengers is sent from heaven; so it is necessary to understand it, (notwithstanding the word for angels, verse 1. "and messengers," verse 3, is precisely the same in the original,) because Jacob calls the former "God's host," which are indeed his messengers of mercy or of judgment, and were now sent to assure the trembling Patriarch, that, as Elisha said in a similar instance, (2 Kings vi. 16.) that there were "more for him than against him." On this circumstance, good Bishop Hall thus pertinently remarks:—"An host of men came with Esau; an army of angels met Jacob. Esau threatened; Jacob prayed. His prayers and presents melted the heart of Esau into love. And now, instead of the grim and stern countenance of an executioner, Jacob sees the face of Esau as the face of God. He that can wrestle earnestly with God, is secure from the harms of men. Those minds which are exasperated with violence, and cannot be broken with fear, yet are bowed with love: when the ways of a man please God, he will make his enemies to be at peace with him."

In this painful dilemma, when the messengers sent to Esau had just returned, and brought the alarming intelligence of extending from thence to the eastern gulf of the Red Sea. It is evidently comprehended under the modern names of Djebel and Shera, mentioned by Burckhardt.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. And he divided the people, &c.—This is a common practice in the East to this day, and for the same reason.

Ver. 10. I am not worthy.—The Hebrew reads as in our margin, "I am less than all thy mercies," &c. So the Chasdee.—With my staff. That is, "with my staff only." See Remarks on chap. xxix. ver. 1, &c.

Ver. 14. Two hundred, &c.—[This was a princely present; and such was as sufficient to compensate Esau for any temporal loss he might have sustained in being deprived of his birth-right and blessing. The "thirty milch camels" were particularly valuable; for among the Arabs they constitute a principal part of their riches, being every way so serviceable, that the providence of God appears peculiarly kind and wise in providing such animals for those countries, where no other animal could be of equal service. "The she-camel," as Pliny remarks, "gives milk continually, not ceasing even when with young; the milk of which, when mixed with three parts of water, affords the most pleasant and wholesome beverage."—Hist. Nat.]—Bagster. Nubian names camel's milk among the dishes presented to him by the Arabs.—Orient. Lit.

Harmer remarks that in all these droves, there were neither lambs, kids, or calves. One reason was, they were driven on hastily to meet Esau: see chap. xxxiii. 13. Another, that in case Esau should prove hostile, these might be preserved.

15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine and ten bulls, twenty she-asses and ten foals.

16 And he delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by themselves; and said unto his servants, Pass over before me, and put a space betwixt drove and drove.

17 And he commanded the foremost, saying, When Esau my brother meeteth thee, and asketh thee, saying, Whose art thou? and whither goest thou? and whose are these before thee?

18 Then thou shalt say, They be thy servant Jacob's: it is a present sent unto my lord Esau: and behold also he is behind us.

19 And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying, On this manner shall ye speak unto Esau, when ye find him.

20 And say ye moreover, Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us. For he said, I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me.

21 So went the present over before him; and himself lodged that night in the company.

22 And he rose up that night, and took his two wives, and his two women-servants, and his eleven sons, and passed over the ford of Jabbok.

23 And he took them, and sent them over the brook, and sent over that he had.

24 ¶ And Jacob was left alone; and there was wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day.

25 And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh: and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him.

26 And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh: And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

27 And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

28 And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.

29 And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name: And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask me after my name? And he blessed him there.

30 And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

31 And as he passed over Penuel, the sun rose upon him, and he halted upon his thigh.

32 Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day; because he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh in the sinew that shrank.

Esau's approach, Jacob applies himself to humble and ardent prayer—acknowledging his own unworthiness, ascribing all his possessions to the goodness of divine providence, and pleading the order of God for his return, and the promise of divine protection in his journey—"Return to thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee."

"Jacob and his company (says Fuller) seem now to have been north of the river Jabbok, near to the place where it falls into the Jordan. Here he is said to have 'lodged that night.' Afterward, we read of his 'rising up,' and sending his company 'over the ford.' Probably it was during one single night that the whole of what follows in this chapter occurred. The messengers having returned towards evening, he divided his company into two bands, and then committed his cause to God. After this he halted for the night: but whatever sleep might fall to the lot of the children, or rest to the beasts of burden, there was but little of either for him. First, he resolves neither to flee nor fight, but to try the effects of a present. Upwards of 500 head of cattle were sent off in the night, under the care of his servants; and, to produce greater effect, they were divided into droves, with a space between drove and drove. Having sent off the present, he seems to have tried to get a little rest; but not being able to sleep, he rose up, and took his whole family, and all that he had, and sent them over the ford Jabbok. Every servant presenting his drove in the same words, would strike Esau with amazement. It would seem as if all the riches of the East were coming to him; and every one concluding by announcing his master as coming behind them, would work upon his generosity."

Ver. 24—32. Jacob wrestles with an angel.—This narrative has so great difficulties, that the ablest commentators are divided, whether to consider it as a simple matter of fact, or as a prophetic vision, with which Jacob was favoured, while employing the night in devotion in the open air. Many expositors, Jewish and Christian, ancient and modern, adopting this idea, explain the wrestling here mentioned in a moral sense, as an act of ardent prayer; and so the prophet Hosea seems to have understood it, (chap. xii. 4.) "He wept, and made supplication: he had power over the angel, and prevailed." Also, by the angel wrestling, he seems to understand neither real man nor created angel, but the same divine person whom he met with at Beth-el,—"JEHOVAH, God of Hosts," so called in allusion to the Mahanaim, or "hosts of God," mentioned in verse 2 of this chapter. "Our doctors, of blessed memory," says Rabbi David Kimchi on Hosea, "have said, this angel was Michael; and of him he saith, (Gen. xlviii. 16.) 'The angel that redeemed me from all evil.'" That this also was Jacob's sentiment, is very evident from his calling the place Peniel: "for (said he) I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."

The following remarks of the late ingenious Dr. Henry Hunter, on this mysterious Scripture, are highly instructive and appropriate:—"Jacob was that very morning to meet Esau his brother, who was advancing towards him, at the head of 400 men. Uncertain as to his disposition and intentions, conscious of having given him much cause of offence, and apprized of the menacing and resentful language which he had formerly held concerning him, he shudders to think of the consequences of this formidable rencontre. And, having first poured out his soul to God in such a dreadful emergency, and then adopted the measures for safety which wisdom and the necessity of his situation suggested, he again, it is natural to suppose, might have recourse to earnest prayer and supplication, and continue in it during a great part of the night and morning. This, in the forcible and figurative phrase of oriental language, might be expressed by his 'wrestling with God to the dawning of the day;' and his at length prevailing, so far as to obtain from God some sensible sign or token, to assure him that he should be carried through this, as through his other dangers and distresses, undestroyed, unhurt. The sign given him was calculated at once to express approbation of his faith, fortitude, and perseverance; and to convince him of his inferiority and weakness. The unknown wrestler, though seemingly foiled in the combat, by a simple touch dislocates a joint in the hollow of Jacob's thigh, and thereby disables him from continuing the struggle. Might not the wisdom of God employ such mystical representation and expression to instruct men in the nature of prayer, and to enforce the obligation of it, 'to the end, that we should pray always, and not faint?' Do we prevail in our applications at the throne of grace? It is because our Heavenly Father is disposed to yield, and stands out only to heighten our exertions, and to call forth our importunity. Have we power with God and prevail? Then, what is man, who shall die, and the son of man, who is a worm? Did Jacob sink and fail in the very moment of victory? We are just what God makes, or permits us to be.

"Whatever were the real circumstances of this extraordinary

Ver. 24. A man wrestled with him.—The verb "wrestled," is evidently from the same root as Abak, dust; because in wrestling they usually raise a dust.—Leigh's Crit. Sac. Of those who interpret this as a vision, Maimonides among the Jews, Origen among the fathers, and Le Clerc among the critics, are the most considerable. It is adopted by Dr. Boothroyd.

Ver. 25. He touched the hollow of his thigh.—This effect might literally take place, as well in a vision as otherwise. An apparent stroke on that part, seems to have sprained, or partly dislocated the joint; not so as to prevent his walking, for he walked the same morning to meet Esau; but he walked limping, and would probably relate to him the cause of his so doing.

Ver. 28. As a prince hast thou power with God, &c.—(Or, according to the LXX., Vulgate, Houbigant, Dathe, and Rosenmüller, "because thou hast had power with God thou shalt also prevail with men." This rendering is also supported by Jerome, and the old Italic version in Augustine. There is a beautiful antithesis between the two terms—with Elohim, God, the ALMIGHTY, with anashim, weak, feeble men, as the word imports—seeing thou hast had power with the ALMIGHTY, surely thou shalt prevail over perishing mortals.)—Bagster.

Ver. 30. Peniel.—(i. e. the face of God. Peniel or Penuel, was evidently situated near the ford of Jabbok, on the north of that stream, about forty miles from Jerusalem. In after ages, the Israelites built a city in this place, which was given to the tribe of Gad.)—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Therefore the children of Israel eat not, &c.—"By the Hebrew canons, they were bound to abstain from eating this sinew in beasts, (either on the right side or left;) and whose eateth of the sinew that shrank the quantity of an olive, is to be beaten with forty stripes." (Thal. Bab. and Maimon.)—Ainsworth.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 The kindness of Jacob and Esau at their meeting. 17 Jacob cometh to Succoth. 18 At Shalem he buyeth a field, and buildeth an altar.

AND Jacob lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, Esau came, and with him four hundred men. And he divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachel, and unto the two handmaids.

2 And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindmost.

3 And he passed over before them, and bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother.

4 And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him: and they wept.

5 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children, and said, Who are these with thee? And he said, The children which God hath graciously given thy servant.

6 Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves.

7 And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves; and after came Joseph near and Rachel, and they bowed themselves.

8 And he said, What meanest thou by all this drove which I met? And he said, These are to find grace in the sight of my lord.

9 And Esau said, I have enough, my brother; keep that thou hast unto thyself.

10 And Jacob said, Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy sight, then receive my present at my hand: for therefore I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me.

scene, it procured for Jacob a new and an honourable name, which obliterated to his posterity, if not altogether to himself, that less honourable appellation which commemorated a little, though significant incident attending his birth; and which recorded the infamy of his unfair dealings with his father and brother. Jacob, the supplanter, is transformed into Israel, a prince with God.

CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 1—20. Esau and Jacob meet.—The interview so dreaded on Jacob's part now takes place, without any of the hostility which he had apprehended, and for which his conscience, as to his past conduct, might suggest sufficient reason. Jacob, on the first view of his elder brother, begins to bow to him, and repeated the compliment at different intervals as he approached him, until Esau stopped him by running to him, and falling on his neck, and kissing him. Here, on the one part, is all timidity and submission, not to say flattery, and on the other, all courtesy and kindness. All the branches of the family make their obeisance as they pass before "my lord" Esau, and he inquires very kindly who they are. When he sees, also, the droves of cattle, he is filled with surprise; and on being told they are intended for a present to himself, he recoils at the idea. Jacob, however, urges it, knowing that would be the best pledge for his security; and Esau at length accepts it, not being willing to create suspicions in his brother's mind. Esau offers to conduct Jacob home, or to leave a part of his troop for convoy; but Jacob, apparently anxious only for his departure, excuses himself, with a sort of half promise to visit Esau at mount Seir. They then part, on the most friendly terms, each to his own home. Jacob, however, rests by the way, first at Succoth, CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 4. Fell on his neck, and kissed him.—According to Dr. Shaw, intimates and equals "kiss the hand, head, and shoulder of each other." In travelling, the women are always placed last. See Gen. xiv. 61.

Ver. 8. What meanest thou?—Hebrew, "What is all this band to thee?" That is, Do all these belong to thee?

Ver. 9. Keep that thou hast.—Hebrew, "Be that to thee that is thine." Margin. The Chaldees explain this, "What thou hast, much good may it do thee!"—Ainsworth.

Ver. 10. Receive my present.—[To accept a present from an inferior was a customary pledge of friendship; but returning it implied disaffection. It is the same in eastern countries at the present day. If your present be received by your superior, he necessarily becomes your friend, and you may rely on his friendship; if it be not received, you have every thing to fear. It was on this ground that Jacob was so urgent with Esau to receive his present.]—Bagster. As though I had seen the face of God.—This is a very high eastern compliment, especially after the vision at Peniel. Some therefore soften it to "the face of a prince;" but this is no compliment; he was a prince, rich and powerful.

Ver. 13. The flocks and herds with young.—Or, "which give suck," as the word is used, 1 Sam. vi. 7, 10. So the Chaldees here.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 14. Until I come unto my Lord unto Seir.—This seems to intimate his intention to visit Esau at Seir; but surely not with all his cattle. The middle of the verse may be parenthetical, and the expression elliptical; as if he had said, "Let my lord pass on for the present, and let our farther intercourse be deferred till I can come to Seir."

Ver. 15. Let me now leave with thee.—Hebrew "Set, or place, with thee."

11 Take, I pray thee, my blessing that is brought to thee; because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have enough: and he urged him, and he took it.

12 And he said, Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go before thee.

13 And he said unto him, My lord knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me, and if men should over-drive them one day, all the flock will die.

14 Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant: and I will lead on softly, according as the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure; until I come unto my lord unto Seir.

15 And Esau said, Let me now leave with thee some of the folk that are with me: And he said, What needeth it? Let me find grace in the sight of my lord.

16 ¶ So Esau returned that day on his way unto Seir.

17 And Jacob journeyed to Succoth, and built him a house, and made booths for his cattle: therefore the name of the place is called Succoth.

18 ¶ And Jacob came to Shalem, a city of Shechem, which is in the land of Canaan, when he came from Padan-aram; and pitched his tent before the city.

19 And he bought a parcel of a field, where he had spread his tent, at the hand of the children of Hamor, Shechem's father, for a hundred pieces of money.

20 And he erected there an altar, and called it El-elohe-Israel.

(Booths,) so called from his erecting booths there for his cattle; and then at a city belonging to Shechem, and called by his name. Here he purchased a field, and erected an altar, which he dedicated to El-elohe-Israel, that is, to "God, the God of Israel," as a memorial of the mercies he had lately received, and of the new name (Israel) with which he had recently been honoured. On the friendly interview we have just passed, the reader will be gratified by some farther remarks from the elegant pen of Dr. Hunter, whom we have above quoted. After observing the remarkable manner in which Esau's heart had been changed towards his brother, he thus proceeds:—

"They meet, they converse, they love, as brothers ought. And, 'O how good and how pleasant it is, for brethren to dwell together in unity!' We apprehend a strife of fierce and angry looks, of reproachful words, of violence, and blood. But how joyful the disappointment! Behold, a contention of kindness, a blessed contest of affection; the honest, heart-melting triumph of nature, the noble victory of goodness. Let the proud and the resentful peruse with care this inimitable scene of tenderness, painted in colours so bright and so touching, by the pencil of inspiration; and say whether it be possible for any gratification of revenge, any depression of a hated rival, any triumph of violence and blood, to yield any thing that deserves the name of joy, compared with the sweet satisfaction which must have filled the bosoms of this pair of brothers, burying animosity and discord in mutual endearments, and expressions of good will. Ah! why should so many wretched brothers as there are of us, pass through a world in which there is so much unavoidable misery, estranged from each other; or madly,

Esau means as a convoy, which Jacob declines as unnecessary; "Wherefore this?"

Ver. 17. Succoth,—[i. e. Booths. Succoth was on the east of Jordan, between the brook Jabbok and that river, about 40 miles from Jerusalem, and consequently near Peniel; where a city was afterwards built, which Joshua assigned to the tribe of Gad. Jerome says, that Succoth was in the district of Scythopolis; and the Jews inform us, that the name of Darala was sometime afterwards applied to it.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. And Jacob came to Shalem.—Ainsworth, Clarke, Boothroyd, and others, following the Chaldees, render it, "Came (in) peace," or safely. There is no mention elsewhere in Scripture of such a city; but Jerome says there was such a place to the west of Jerusalem.—Calmet. A city of Shechem.—[Or, rather, "the city Shechem," which was situated in a narrow valley, abounding with springs, between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, having the former on the north, and the latter on the south; ten miles from Shiloh, and thirty-four from Jerusalem. It became the capital of Samaria, after the ruin of the city of that name, and was called by the Greeks and Romans Neapolis, whence its present name, Neapoli, Naplosa, or Nablous, as the Arabic renders, is derived. At the present time it is populous and flourishing, and the environs bear the marks of opulence and industry, being adorned with small gardens which skirt the banks of the stream by which the valley is watered.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. A hundred pieces.—The Hebrew shekel is the oldest coin we read of, and they were weighed in payment Gen. xxiii. 16. These shekels bore the image of a lamb. So the Hebrew Keritub implies (as in the margin.)—Maurice's Ind. Antiq.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

4 Shechem sueth to marry Dinah. 13 The sons of Jacob offer the condition of circumcision to the Shechemites. 20 Hamor and Shechem persuade them to accept it. 25 The sons of Jacob slay them, and spoil their city.

AND <sup>a</sup> Dinah the daughter of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob, went out <sup>b</sup> to see the daughters of the land.

2 And when Shechem the son of Hamor the Hivite, prince of the country, saw <sup>c</sup> her, he took her, and lay with her, and <sup>d</sup> defiled her.

3 And his soul <sup>e</sup> clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob, and he loved the damsel, and <sup>f</sup> spake kindly unto the damsel.

4 And Shechem spake unto his father Hamor, saying, Get me this <sup>g</sup> damsel to wife.

5 And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his daughter: now his sons were with his cattle in the field: and Jacob held his <sup>h</sup> peace until they were come.

6 ¶ And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob to commune with him.

7 And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were grieved, and they were <sup>i</sup> very wroth, because he had wrought <sup>j</sup> folly in Israel, in lying with Jacob's daughter; which thing ought not to be <sup>k</sup> done.

8 And Hamor communed with them, saying, The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

9 And make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you.

10 And ye shall dwell with us: and the land shall be before <sup>l</sup> you; dwell and trade ye therein, and get you possessions therein.

11 And Shechem said unto her father, and unto her brethren, Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me, I will give.

12 Ask me never so much <sup>m</sup> dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife.

13 And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father <sup>n</sup> deceitfully, and said, Because he had defiled Dinah their sister:

14 And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is uncircumcised: for that <sup>o</sup> were a <sup>p</sup> reproach unto us:

15 But in this will we consent unto you: If ye will be as we <sup>q</sup> be, that every male of you be <sup>r</sup> circumcised;

wantonly, wickedly, interrupt and disturb each other's passage, by bitterness and wrath! What wretched things are wealth and pomp, and state and power, which will not permit brothers to live together in love, as they ought, and as, but for one or other of these disturbers of human quiet, they would!"—Hunter's Lect.

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 1—31. The leading fact in this chapter is, that Shechem, the son of Hamor, a prince of the Hivites, having seen Dinah, the daughter of Leah, probably at one of their festivals, fell in love with her, and "humbled her," as the Hebrew phrase

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 12. Dowry.—[To what has already been adduced on the practice of purchasing wives, may be added the testimony of De la Roque, who says, "Properly speaking, a young man who would marry must purchase his wife; and fathers among the Arabs are never so happy than when they have many daughters. They form part of the riches of a house. Accordingly, when a young man would treat with a person, whose daughter he is inclined to marry, he says to him, 'Will you give me your daughter for fifty sheep, for six camels, or for a dozen cows?' If he is not rich enough to make such offers, he will propose giving her to him for a mare, or a young colt; considering in the offer, the merit of the young woman, the rank of her family, and the circumstances of him who desires to marry her."—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Hamor.—[The name of this Hivite prince signifies, "an ass." Such a name would be thought very reproachful among us, and very unbecoming the dignity of a prince; but in the East they thought very differently.—Mervan, the last khalif of the Ommyads, was surnamed, according to D'Herbelot, Hemar, "the ass," and "the ass of Mesopotamia," because of his strength and vigour. And as the wild ass is supposed by the Orientals to surpass all others in swiftness, Baharam, king of Persia, he says, was surnamed Jour, which signifies, "a wild ass."—Harmer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. And unto Hamor.—harkened all, &c.—[In thus falling into this measure, the Shechemites must either have had great affection for their chief and his son, or have been under the influence of the most passive 16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if ye will not hearken unto us, to be circumcised; then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

18 And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem, Hamor's son.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, because he had <sup>a</sup> delight in Jacob's daughter: and he <sup>b</sup> was more <sup>c</sup> honourable than all the house of his father.

20 ¶ And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto the gate of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, 21 These men <sup>d</sup> are peaceable with us, therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein: for the land, behold, it is large enough for them: let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only <sup>e</sup> herein will the men consent unto us <sup>f</sup> for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumcised, as they <sup>g</sup> are circumcised.

23 Shall not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of <sup>h</sup> theirs <sup>i</sup> be ours? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor, and unto Shechem his son, hearkened all that <sup>j</sup> went out of the gate of his city: and every male was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day, when they were sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his sword, and <sup>k</sup> came upon the city boldly, and slew all the males.

26 And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the <sup>l</sup> edge <sup>m</sup> of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out.

27 The sons of Jacob came upon the <sup>n</sup> slain, and spoiled the city; because they had defiled their sister.

28 They took their sheep, and their oxen, and their asses, and that which <sup>o</sup> was in the city, and that which <sup>p</sup> was in the field.

29 And all their wealth, and all their little ones, and their wives, took they captive, and spoiled even all that <sup>q</sup> was in the house.

is. Still, however, "his soul clave unto her;" and so honourable were his intentions, that he not only offered to marry her, but to give any amount of dowry; even though they should, as the margin literally expresses it, "multiply upon him vehemently" their demands. Her father was in this case silent, and left the negotiation to his sons, who, pleading that they must not form any matrimonial alliance with an uncircumcised nation, artfully persuaded them to be all circumcised, that they might intermarry with each other. To these hard conditions (as they appear to us) they all complied; and when they had lulled them obedience. The petty princes of Asia have always been absolute and despotic; their subjects paying them the most prompt and blind obedience. The following instance, will sufficiently illustrate and confirm this statement: Abu Thaher, chief of the Carmathians, about the year 830, with only 500 horse, went to lay siege to Bagdad; the khalif's general marched out to sieze him; but before the attack, sent an officer to summon him to surrender. "How many men has the khalif's general," said Abu Thaher, "30,000," replied the officer.—"Among them all," says the Carmathian chief, "has he got three like mine?" Then ordering his followers to approach, he commanded one to stab himself, another to throw himself from a precipice, and a third to plunge into the Tigris; all three instantly obeyed and perished! Then turning to the officer, he said, "He who has such troops need not value the number of his enemies!"—Bagster. Moses gives another reason,—the advantages likely to result from an alliance with Jacob's family; "Shall not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of theirs, be ours?" Now if the Shechemites, as seems intimated, meant to avail themselves of this alliance, to defraud the children of Abraham, Providence suffered them to meet a just reward. This, however, is no apology for the conduct of Jacob's sons. God often punishes one crime by another.

Ver. 27. Because they had defiled their sister.—In the East, the nearest relations consider themselves bound to revenge such an injury; and more so to a sister than to a wife; because a wife may be repudiated, but not a sister if ever so guilty.—Orient. Cust.

the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites, and the Perizzites: and I being few in number, they shall gather themselves together against me, and slay me, and I shall be destroyed, I and my house.

31 And they said, Should he deal with our sister as with a harlot?

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 God sendeth Jacob to Beth-el: 2 he purgeth his house of idols: 3 he buildeth an altar at Beth-el. 9 God blesseth Jacob at Beth-el. 16 Rachel dieth in the way to Ephrath. 23 The sons of Jacob. 28 The age, death, and burial of Isaac.

AND God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Beth-el, and dwell there: and make there an altar unto God, that appeared unto thee when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother.

2 Then Jacob said unto his household, and to all that were with him, Put away the strange gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments:

3 And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I will there make an altar unto God, who answered me in the day of my distress, and was with me in the way which I went.

4 And they gave unto Jacob all the strange gods which were in their hand, and all their ear-rings which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under the oak which was by Shechem.

5 And they journeyed: and the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, and they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob.

6 ¶ So Jacob came to Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, that is, Beth-el, he and all the people that were with him.

7 And he built there an altar, and called the place El-beth-el; because there God appeared unto him, when he fled from the face of his brother.

into security, and at a moment when they were not capable of self-defence, Simeon and Levi (with their servants and dependants) basely and treacherously murdered all the men, took captive the women and children, and carried off all the property; in which act of spoliation it is probable that other sons of Jacob might partake, though not in the massacre. Jacob, so far from having any concern in this act of treachery, reprobated it most severely; and reproached the actors in this dreadful tragedy, for having made his name to stink among the heathen, and exposed him to the danger of being destroyed by the other surrounding nations; from which he was saved only by a protecting providence. As to Jacob, it is but justice to acknowledge, that he is not chargeable with any act of cruelty.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 1—15. Jacob returns to Bethel.—After some years residence at Shechem, Jacob, being directed to return to Bethel, and to dwell there, commands his family to purify themselves and put away "the strange (or foreign) gods that were among them;" meaning, doubtless, those taken in the plunder of the Shechemites, and probably those also Rachel purloined from her father, Laban; and on their being delivered up to him, he buries them all under an oak near Shechem, that they should no longer remain in his family a monument of his sons' guilt, or a temptation to idolatry and superstition. For it were inconsistent for Jacob, when he erected a public altar to the true God, to allow his family to worship idols secretly within their tents. Consistency is a great point in religion; and it is a great affliction to a good man, when his exertions

8 But Deborah, Rebekah's nurse died, and she was buried beneath Beth-el, under an oak: and the name of it was called Allon-bachuth.

9 ¶ And God appeared unto Jacob again when he came out of Padan-aram; and blessed him.

10 And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name; and he called his name Israel.

11 And God said unto him, I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins;

12 And the land which I gave Abraham and Isaac, to thee I will give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land.

13 And God went up from him, in the place where he talked with him.

14 And Jacob set up a pillar in the place where he talked with him, even a pillar of stone: and he poured a drink-offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon.

15 And Jacob called the name of the place where God spake with him, Beth-el.

16 ¶ And they journeyed from Beth-el; and there was but a little way to come to Ephrath: and Rachel travailed, and she had hard labour.

17 And it came to pass when she was in hard labour, that the midwife said unto her, Fear not; thou shalt have this son also.

18 And it came to pass as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name Ben-oni: but his father called him Benjamin.

19 And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Beth-lehem.

20 And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave:

to support it are counteracted by the conduct of his own family.

Jacob and his family now set out upon their journey, under the protecting wing of divine providence, the terror of which prevented their being pursued, as Jacob had anticipated. Soon after their settlement at Bethel, Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died, who had accompanied her from Padan-aram, and who had since been incorporated into Jacob's family. She must have now been very aged and infirm; but she was highly respected and beloved, and her death was deeply regretted: she was honourably buried, and the oak under which she was entombed was called Allon-Bachuth, "the oak of weeping;" from the general lamentation at her funeral. Tender nurses and faithful servants should never be slighted, nor soon forgotten.

Jacob had now another heavenly communication, in which the promises made to him when he was before at Bethel, and also at Peniel, were repeated and confirmed. It may seem strange to us that such extraordinary interviews with the Almighty should so frequently occur: but they seem to form the distinguishing feature of the patriarchal dispensation, when the faithful had no written word to direct or to console them, or even an oracle to recur to, as under the Mosaic economy: we have, however, vastly the advantage of both since divine revelation has been completed, for in the sacred volume we possess the whole. (Gen. xxviii. 11—19. xxxii. 27—30.)

Ver. 16—29. Rachel's travail and death; also the death of Isaac.—This is a chapter on death. The decease and burial of very high esteem, and considered as being entitled to constant and lasting regard. The nurse in an eastern family is always an important personage. Modern travellers inform us, that in Syria she is considered as a sort of second parent, whether she has been foster-mother or otherwise. She always accompanies the bride to her husband's house, and ever remains there an honoured character. Thus it was in ancient Greece.—Orient. Cust.

Ver. 9. When he came out.—Rather, "when he was come out." The Greek addeth, "in Luz," i. e. Bethel.—Atinsworth. "God appeared to Jacob (after that he had come from Padan-aram) in Luz."—Boothroyd.

Ver. 18. Benjamin.—(The son of the right hand. The Samaritan has ben jamin, "the son of days," i. e. of his old age, (ch. xlv. 20.) which Houbigant contends is the true reading, and that the present is a corruption; but if it be a corruption, it is as old as Jerome, who renders Benjamin, "the son of the right hand.")—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Rachel's grave unto this day.—Meaning the days of Moses. Buckingham found hereabouts a Mahometan building, in which was a square piece of masonry, supposed to enclose this ancient pillar, or at least some fragment of it.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 2. Put away the strange gods.—Or, "gods of the strangers;" that is, of the Hivites, &c. All were strange gods, but Jehovah, the God of Israel. See Stackhouse.

Ver. 4. Their ear-rings.—These, and jewels for the forehead, reaching from ear to ear, were dedicated to their idols, and sometimes inscribed with astrological and mystical characters, and worn as amulets and charms. They are traced back to the Syrians, and were in the early times of Christianity, introduced into Africa Augustine severely condemns them as instruments of superstition and idolatry. Biblioth. Bib.—Stackhouse.

Chardin says, "I have seen some of these ear-rings with figures upon them, and strange characters, which I believe, may be talismans, or charms," &c.—Harmer.

Dr A. Clarke mentions a beautiful one in his possession, brought from Egypt, cut out of a solid piece of cornelian, and engraved all over with characters and images, which prove it was intended for a talisman, or amulet.

Ver. 7. El-beth-el.—That is, "The God of Bethel." But the first El is wanting in some MSS., in LXX., Vulgate, Syriac, and some copies of the Arabic; and is therefore omitted by Boothroyd, Clarke, &c. as redundant. But the God of Jacob had before designated himself as "the God of Bethel." Chap. xxxi. 13.

28 And the days of Isaac were a hundred and fourscore years.

1 Esau's three wives; 9 his sons: 15 the dukes which descended of his sons.

NOW these are the generations of Esau, who is <sup>a</sup> Edom.

2 Esau took his wives of the daughters of Canaan; <sup>b</sup> Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite, and Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite;

3 And Bashemath, Ishmael's daughter, sister of Nebajoth.

5 And Aholibamah bare Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah: These are the sons of Esau, which were born unto him in the land of Canaan.

Deborah we have already noticed, and that of Rachel seems to have followed shortly after. This is the woman who, but a short time before, had complained that she should die for want of children; and, with the second child she bears, she dies in childbirth. So little do we know the effects and consequences of our own wishes! This should teach us to moderate our desires, and submit all our temporal circumstances to a wisdom infinitely superior to our own. Thoughts like these probably occupied her last moments. The midwife now tells her she is about to have another son, according to her wish, (chap. xxx. 24); and, in the moment of her departure, she names the newborn infant Ben-oni, "the son of my sorrow." Jacob, however, calls him Benjamin, "the son of the right hand," which seems to express affection—dear to him as his right hand; and so indeed he was, as we shall see in his subsequent history. This was the only one of the twelve Patriarchs born in Canaan. As Jacob had repeatedly set up a pillar to commemorate his mercies, so now he erects one to be the memorial of his loss. To forget our mercies is ingratitude; to forget our afflictions, insensibility.

Another calamitous event now visits Israel. Two of his sons have been already murderers; a third, even Reuben his first-born, becomes an adulterer, and commits incest with one of his father's concubines! For this they obtained a curse instead of a blessing with their brethren: and Reuben also lost his birth-right. (Gen. xlix. 4. 1 Chron. v. 1.)

The chapter closes with the death of Isaac, at the age of 180, old and full of days; and his sons Esau and Jacob buried him, a circumstance, that is to be remarked with the same pleasure as we noticed the meeting of Isaac and Ishmael at the funeral of Abraham. poor, obscure, and despised! But soon the state of things will be reversed: the wicked shall be cut down, and wither as the grass; while "the righteous shall flourish as the cedar in Libanus;" and having their good things, when those of the sinner are spent and gone, they shall have them durably, yea, eternally. Let us then seek an interest in these blessings; and not covet, envy, or glory in those fading distinctions which are so often lavished upon the enemies of God, and "the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction."—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. Ver. 1—17. Joseph envied and hated by his brethren.—We now come to a character the most amiable, and to a history, one (at least) of the most interesting in the Old Testament; for if any child accustomed to read the Scriptures were asked to name such, he would say, the history of Joseph. There is no part of Scripture, indeed, which affords richer materials for practical reflections; yet these reflections so naturally suggest themselves to every serious reader, that there is no part less requires the labour of a commentator, except as to a few circumstances, occasioned by the high antiquity and the peculiar manners of the country. We have not found the lives of any of the Patriarchs barren of instructive incidents, but Joseph's life is peculiar for the reverses it exhibits, in the depth of misery in which he was sunk, through the faulty indulgence of his father, and the height of power and splendour to which he was advanced by the guardian, fostering care of Divine Providence. We have laid the foundation of Joseph's misfortunes, if they may be so called, in the overweening affection of an injudicious parent. His fine coat of different colours raised the envy of his brothers, and, probably, too much self-importance in the manners of the youth himself, who dreamed of nothing but superiority and distinction, which, though verified in the issue, appeared now improbable and presumptuous.

These dreams were injudiciously related to his brethren, and increased their animosity till it grew to a settled hatred; and even his father, when he heard them, seems to have been some-the open plain, two hours distant from Aare, and is at present the last inhabited place in the south-east extremity of the Hauran. It is of an oval shape, its greatest length being from east to west; and its circumference three quarters of an hour.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

2 Joseph is hated of his brethren: 5 his two dreams: 13 his brethren conspire his death: 21 Reuben saveth him: 26 they sell him to the Ishmaelites: 36 he is sold to Potiphar in Egypt.

AND Jacob dwelt in the <sup>a</sup> land wherein his father was <sup>b</sup> a stranger, in the land of Canaan.

2 These are the generations of Jacob. Joseph being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren, and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah, and with the sons of Zilpah, his father's wives: and Joseph brought unto his father their <sup>c</sup> evil report.

3 Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the <sup>d</sup> son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many <sup>e</sup> colours.<sup>f</sup> told it his brethren: and they hated him yet the more.

6 And he said unto them, Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed:

7 For behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf.

8 And his brethren said unto him, Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams and for his words.

9 ¶ And he dreamed yet another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more: and behold, the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me.

10 And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?

11 And his brethren envied him; but his father observed the saying.

12 ¶ And his brethren went to feed their father's flock in Shechem.

13 And Israel said unto Joseph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? Come, and I will send thee unto them. And he said to him, Here am I.

14 And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of Hebron, and he came to Shechem.

15 ¶ And a certain man found him, and behold, he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, What seekest thou?

16 And he said, I seek my brethren: tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks.

17 And the man said, They are departed hence: for I heard them say, Let us go to Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan.

18 And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, they conspired against him to slay him.

19 And they said one to another, Behold this dreamer cometh.

20 Come now therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit; and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him; and we shall see what will become of his dreams.

21 And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

23 ¶ And it came to pass when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they stripped Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many colours that was on him.

24 And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 And they sat down to eat bread: and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and behold, a company of Ishmaelites came from Gilead, with their camels bearing spicery, and balm, and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah said unto his brethren, What profit is it if we slay our brother, and conceal his blood?

27 Come, and let us sell him to the Ishmaelites, and let not our hand be upon him; for he is our brother, and our flesh: and his brethren were content.

28 Then there passed by Midianites, merchant-men; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, and sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver: and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

what disgusted at the vanity with which they were related: and at their obvious interpretation, that all the family were to bow down to one of the youngest sons; and he reproved him: yet his father observed the sayings, and kept them in his heart. (Luke ii. 49, 51.) But thus it is that God governs the world. The weakness of one, the vanity of another, and the crimes of a third, all conspire to bring about the divine purposes; and yet without excusing either. The elevation of Joseph was decreed; but the mystery lies in its being brought about by means so apparently opposite to such an end. "God's way is in the great deep, and his foot-steps are not known." (Ps. lxxvii. 19.)

By his repeated dreams, and probably his frequent conversations about them, Joseph had acquired among his brethren the name of "the dreamer;" and when his father sent him to them on a message of kind inquiry, their first remark is, "Behold, this dreamer cometh!" and they conspired against his life. But we need not wonder at this, for Simeon and Levi were there, whose hands had been already stained with blood at Shechem, in the neighbourhood of which they were now feeding cattle. That God, however, who had destined him to save their lives, led some of them to preserve his for that purpose, and it is observable who they were: Reuben, who had defiled his father's bed; and Judah, who (as we may see in the next chapter) committed incest with his own daughter. Their besetting sin was unrestrained lewdness; yet these were the men employed, and their softer passions perhaps made them the fitter instruments to counteract the sanguinary designs of their more cruel brothers. At present, however, we leave him safe in the hands of that God, who is at no loss for means to effect his great designs.

Ver. 18—36. Joseph sold into Egypt.—Joseph now ap-

Ver. 9. The sun and moon, and (the) eleven stars.—The article the should be here omitted, as not in the original; and it is observable how promptly Jacob interpreted these images, as they were afterwards used in Scripture prophecy, and generally in the Eastern nations. According to Achmet, as quoted by Mede, "the sun signifies a king; the moon, the next to him in dignity; the morning star, the third in rank; and the other stars inferior nobles."—Boothroyd.

Ver. 19. This dreamer.—Hebrew, "This master of dreams;" this artful dreamer. So his brethren are afterwards called, in the Hebrew, "masters of arrows;" which is properly rendered by Attsworth, "cunning archers."

proaches to inquire after the welfare of his brethren; but their only answer is, to strip him of his party-coloured coat, and cast him into a pit. Here he was to be left to perish, and it was only by the arguments of Reuben and of Judah that he had this mercy; for they, at least Reuben, meant to rescue him from the pit, and restore him to his father; perhaps thinking by this to make him some atonement for the dishonouring of his bed. Providence, however, had designed to save him in a different way, and another guilty passion, their cupidity, is to be the means of his deliverance; they will sell him to strangers, and reveal, perhaps, on the price of blood.

Behold Ishmaelites and Midianites are passing by in their way to Egypt, with various merchandise, and Joseph is sold to them, to be carried to the scene of his aggrandizement. Ah! little did they think that, in the person of this persecuted boy, they were carrying into Egypt its supreme governor, and the temporal saviour of the world!

This is the first instance of the slave trade upon record, though there is no reason to believe it even now an incipient trade. It is as old as war, and originated in the sale of its miserable captives. We leave Joseph, however, to pursue his journey, and remark the agony of Reuben, who was not present at the sale of his brother, and supposed him to be destroyed: "And I, (said he,) whither shall I go?" Reuben was, however, soon undeceived; and the cold-blooded plan which some of them formed to deceive their father, shows them to have been hardened in their villany. To stop his inquiries, they pierce his heart with agonies, under the idea of his son being rent in pieces by wild beasts, and then hypocritically attempt to comfort him. But Jacob refuses to be comforted. "I will go down mourning (said he) to the grave;" or rather (as we should say)

Chap. xlix. 23. They probably meant to insinuate, that he had fabricated these dreams.

Ver. 20 and 33. Evil beast.—That is, a wild beast.

Ver. 25. Spicery.—[Nechoth, is rendered by the LXX. "incense;" Syriac, "resin;" Samaritan, "balsam;" Aquila, "storax;" which is followed by Bechart. This drug is abundant in Syria, according to Pliney, and here Moses joins with it resin, honey, and myrrh; which agrees with the nature of the storax, which is the resin of a tree of the same name, of a reddish colour, and peculiarly pleasant fragrance. 29 ¶ And Reuben returned unto the pit; and behold, Joseph was not in the pit: and he rent his clothes.

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and said, The <sup>b</sup> child is not: and I, whither shall I go?

31 And they took Joseph's <sup>c</sup> coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood:

32 And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no.

33 And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat: an evil <sup>m</sup> beast hath devoured him: Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces.

34 And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days.

35 And all his sons and all his <sup>d</sup> daughters rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted; and he said, For I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him.

36 And the Midianites sold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, an <sup>p</sup> officer of Pharaoh's, and <sup>q</sup> captain of the guard.

to "the other world"—"the world of souls," the state of all the dead—"where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest." (Job iii. 17. See also Psalm xvi. 10.)

CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1—11. Onan's wickedness.—What a melancholy view do these records give us of Jacob's family, of the trouble which he had with his children, and of the state of religion in the visible church of God!—Is this "Judah, whom his brethren shall praise"? Rather let us praise God for his patience with him; and that "where sin had abounded, grace," as we have reason to conclude, "much more abounded" in his salvation.—The friendship of those who flatter young persons, and assist them in gratifying their licentious inclinations, is often much valued, and their company courted and preferred before that of pious friends and relations; but it corrupts good manners and principles, and makes bad ones worse. Though, all things considered, it is best for most men to marry early in life; yet surely not when they are incapable of judging for themselves, and will not be counselled or directed by their parents and friends; but are influenced by those who fear not God, to form connexions with others of the same character. Indeed, parents themselves frequently lead their children into the mistakes and sins of which they themselves have been guilty; and are instrumental in their ruin, temporal and eternal.—The Scriptures sparingly hint at those vile practices, which, being done in secret, are a shame to be spoken of: this suffices to show, that the Lord notices and abhors them, and will bring to light all the lasciviousness, of which it is to be feared multitudes are guilty in heart and life, who stand fair in the world's esteem. Then the secret history of every individual, who hath not truly repented, and washed away his sins in the blood of Christ, will be written with an impartial pen, and published to the world of men and angels: every mouth will be stopped; and God's

Ver. 29. Rent his clothes.—One of the most ancient modes of expressing extreme grief and sorrow. Compare ver. 34.

Ver. 33. Joseph is without doubt rent.—The Hebrew has here an eloquent and expressive repetition, "Joseph is rent, is rent in pieces."

Ver. 36. An officer.—Hebrew, "A eunuch;" but our translators properly add, in the margin, "The word doth signify, not only eunuchs, but also chamberlains, courtiers, and officers." Est. i. 10. — Captain of the guard.—Hebrew, "Chief (or marshal) of the slaughtermen, or executioners." His office was to cut off the heads of all whom the king might order him. See Dr. Clarke.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1. At that time.—That is, when Jacob returned from Mesopotamia to dwell in Canaan; connecting this history, not with that of Joseph, but with the first verse of the preceding chapter.—Adullamite. Dr. Boothroyd renders it "During this period," &c. The incidents here related, probably take in the compass of several, perhaps many, years. Adullamite.—[An inhabitant of Adullam, a city of Canaan, afterwards given to Judah, situated in the southern part of that tribe, west of Hebron.]—Bagster.

3 And she conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name <sup>b</sup> Er.

4 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name <sup>c</sup> Onan.

5 And she yet again conceived and bare a son; and called his name <sup>d</sup> Shelah: and he was at Chezib, when she bare him.

6 And Judah took a wife for Er his first-born, whose name was Tamar.

7 And Er, Judah's first-born, was wicked in the sight of the LORD; <sup>e</sup> and the LORD slew him.

8 And Judah said unto Onan, Go in unto thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother.

9 And Onan knew that the seed should not be his: and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, lest that he should give seed to his brother.

10 And the thing which he did <sup>f</sup> displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew him also.

11 Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter-in-law, Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shelah my son be grown; (for he said, Lest peradventure he die also as his brethren did:) and Tamar went and dwelt in her father's house.

12 ¶ And <sup>h</sup> in process of time, the daughter of Shuah, Judah's wife, died: and Judah was comforted, and went up unto his sheep-shearers to Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite.

13 And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold, thy father-in-law goeth up <sup>i</sup> to Timnath, to shear his sheep.

righteousness, in the condemnation of sinners, manifested to the whole universe.—T. Scott.

Ver. 12—30. Judah deceived.—Mirth, festivity, and vain company, furnish fuel to licentious inclinations, and opportunity inflames the heart; then interest, credit, and conscience, are sacrificed, and the wisest of men act as if bereft of common sense: for "wine and whoredom take away the heart," and stupefy the conscience.—What need have we, then, to "watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation!" Unthought-of consequences will soon prove the folly of those who give license to their lusts: and they who fear shame before men, more than condemnation before God, often find the very thing come upon them which they feared, notwithstanding all their care to prevent it.—Injurious suspicions and unjust treatment frequently drive those to evil practices, who were not previously disposed to them; but miserable and infatuated beyond expression are they, who barter chastity, reputation, and even their souls, for the paltry reward of sin. Nor are any more hardened against compassion, or more disposed to treat others with unrelenting severity, than they who are most indulgent to themselves, and heedlessly continue in unrepented wickedness: yet it is hopeful, when being put to shame before men produces conviction of guilt, humiliating confessions, and renunciation of the sin thus exposed, never more to return to it.—But while we compassionate pious Jacob, thus wounded on every side by the misconduct of his family, let us admire the sovereign purpose and grace of God, who by all these events, was preparing for the manifestation of his Son in human nature. Our Redeemer sprang from Judah by Tamar, and from Pharez: for his excellency was personal; and, though himself sinless, it suited the end of his appearance, for him to be "made in the likeness of sinful flesh."—T. Scott.

ite; and the fruit was as might have been expected: the second, that he neglected to give Shelah his son to Tamar his daughter-in-law, according to his promise, and according to the law respecting widows; and the third, that he himself committed incest with her, under the disguise of a harlot.

Ver. 5. Chezib.—(Cezib is said by Eusebius and Jerome to have been situated near Adullam, and to be then uninhabited.)—Bagster.

Ver. 8—10. We have here the first instance of a custom enjoined in the Jewish law, but practised, as appears, under a divine sanction among the Hebrews long before; namely, that if a man died without children, and left a widow, the next brother (if he had one) was to take her, and raise up children to his brother. Onan, the first (as far as appears) who refused to do this, was struck dead for his disobedience. "The thing which he did was evil in the eyes of the Lord." (Margin) wherefore he slew him also."

Ver. 12. Timnath.—(Timnath is, in all probability, that in the border of Judah, between Jerusalem and Diospolis, given to Dan, and mentioned in the history of Samson as belonging to the Philistines.)—Bagster.

Ver. 14. The conduct of Tamar was that of an artful woman, not governed by any religious principle, with a view to be revenged on her father-in-law. She sat in an open place, say our translators; but the Hebrew reads, "in the door of Enaim," (eyes, or fountains,) as in the margin. This, Answorth explains "a race of two ways;" that is, where two roads met, and where, probably, there were springs of water. Jer. iii. 2. Ezek. xvi. 25 from her, and covered her with a veil, and wrapped herself, and sat in an open <sup>k</sup>place, which is by the way to Timnath: for she saw that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be a harlot; because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee; (for he knew not that she was his daughter-in-law :) and she said, What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, I will send thee <sup>a</sup> kid from the flock: and she said, Wilt thou give me a pledge, till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, Thy <sup>m</sup>signet, and thy bracelets, and thy staff that is in thy hand: and he gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him.

19 And she arose and went away and laid by her veil from her, and put on the <sup>n</sup>garments of her widowhood.

20 And Judah sent the kid by the hand of his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand: but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying, Where is the harlot that was <sup>o</sup>openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, lest <sup>p</sup>we be <sup>q</sup>shamed: behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 ¶ And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter-in-law hath played the <sup>r</sup>harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom. And Judah said, Bring her forth, and let her be <sup>s</sup>burnt.

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, By the man whose these are, am I with child: and she said, <sup>t</sup>Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, the <sup>u</sup>signet, and bracelets, and staff.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Joseph advanced in Potiphar's house: 7 he resisteth his mistress's temptation: 13 he is falsely accused: 20 he is cast into prison. 21 God is with him thence.

AND Joseph was brought down to Egypt: and <sup>a</sup>Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Ishmaelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And the LORD was with <sup>b</sup>Joseph, and he was a prosperous man: and he was in the house of his master the Egyptian.

3 And his master saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD made all that he did to prosper <sup>c</sup>in his hand.

4 And Joseph found <sup>d</sup>grace in his sight, and he served him: and he made him <sup>e</sup>overseer over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand:

5 And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that the LORD blessed the <sup>f</sup>Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the <sup>g</sup>house, and in the field.

6 And he left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat. And Joseph was <sup>h</sup>a <sup>i</sup>goodly person, and well-favoured.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that his master's wife cast her <sup>j</sup>eyes upon Joseph: and she said, <sup>k</sup>Lie with me.

8 But he <sup>l</sup>refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand;

9 There is none greater in this house than I;

CHAP. XXXIX. Ver. 1-23. Joseph resists temptation; but is imprisoned.—Joseph, being sold into Egypt, becomes the slave of Potiphar, who is so highly pleased with his diligence and attention, that he appoints him to attend upon himself, and makes him overseer, or steward, of his household. Here he finds his fidelity equal to his diligence, and every thing so prospers under his management, that he withholds nothing from him. But it was the misfortune of Potiphar to have an unfaithful, intriguing wife; and it was Joseph's misfortune (as it has been that of many young men) to be <sup>a</sup>a goodly person, and well-favoured; whereby he innocently attracted ner wanton passions, so that she tempted him, day by day, to commit adultery with her. Here, however, we see the advantage of a religious education, and of pious principles. He spurns at the temptation, and replies, "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?"—the best argument a Christian can use against temptation. At length, one day, when his duty required

Ver. 18. Singlet.—[Chothem, or chothemeth, as in ver. 25. is properly a ring-seal, with which impressions were made to ascertain property, &c. From Jer. xxii. 24. we find that it was worn on the hand; though it might also have been suspended from the neck by a ribband, as the Arabs still wear it.—Bracelets.—Pathil, from pathal, to twist, wreath, may denote either a wreath for the arm or neck, a twisted collar, or bracelet. The Vulgate renders it by armillum. It was probably a collar by which the signet was suspended; though its being used in the plural seems to favour the opinion of its being a bracelet.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Harlot.—[Tamar is not here called a harlot, as in our version, but kedalshah, which, from kadash, to consecrate to religious purposes, must mean a person consecrated by prostitution to the worship of some impure goddess. So Strabo calls the public prostitutes, who, it is well known, were dedicated to Venus, among the Greeks, holy, or consecrated servants or volaries.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Bring her forth.—The sequel finally exposes the hypocrisy of Judah, and constrains him to confess, that she was more righteous than him-him to go into the apartment where she was, she impudently seized hold of his upper garment, to constrain him to comply. Well knowing that the best way to resist this temptation was to fly from it, he fled, and left his garment in her hands; and that which was, in fact, the witness of his innocence, is produced by this artful and wicked woman to prove his guilt. His master had certainly a high opinion of Joseph, but he had also probably a strong persuasion of the virtue of his wife, and could not resist her story, supported with such a proof. Joseph is therefore committed to the king's prison, of which his master had the guard, probably without a hearing. But had he been heard, his account, which was just the reverse of hers, would certainly have appeared incredible.

But this disgrace was one of the steps necessary to his promotion. God was with him in the prison, and preserved him from the rage of his lord, though he was "chief of the executioners;" and he gave him the same favour with the keeper of self. We should take care in censuring others, that we do not condemn ourselves. Burning was the death denounced against the daughter of a priest for whoredom; (Lev. xxi. 9.) and Judah wished to go to the utmost extremity, till he was found out to be the chief criminal.

Ver. 6. Joseph was a goodly person.—[Yephthah toar, yosephath marath, "beautiful in person and beautiful in countenance." Joseph is the Adonis of the East; his beauty being so celebrated that a handsome man is frequently compared to him; and the Persian poets vie with each other in descriptions of his comeliness. Mohammed spends the 12th chapter of the Koran entirely on Joseph; whom he represents as a perfect beauty, and the most accom-neither hath he kept back any thing from me, but thee, because thou art his wife: how then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?

10 And it came to pass, as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, or to be with her.

11 And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was none of the men of the house there within.

12 And she caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth,

14 That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in a Hebrew unto us to mock us: he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a loud voice:

15 And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And she laid up his garment by her, until his lord came home.

17 And she spake unto him according to these words, saying, The Hebrew servant which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me:

18 And it came to pass as I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled out.

19 And it came to pass, when his master heard the words of his wife, which she spake unto him, saying, After this manner did thy servant to me; that his wrath was kindled.

20 And Joseph's master took him, and put him into the prison, a place where the king's prisoners were bound: and he was there in the prison.

21 ¶ But the LORD was with Joseph, and showed him mercy, and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison.

22 And the keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did there, he was the doer of it.

23 The keeper of the prison looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because the LORD was with him, and that which he did, the LORD made it to prosper.

CHAPTER XL.

1 The butler and baker of Pharaoh in prison. 4 Joseph hath charge of them: 5 he interprets their dreams: 23 the ingratitude of the butler.

AND it came to pass after these things, that the butler of the king of Egypt and his baker had offended their lord the king of Egypt.

2 And Pharaoh was wroth against two of his officers, against the chief of the butlers, and against the chief of the bakers.

3 And he put them in ward in the house of the captain of the guard, into the prison, the place where Joseph was bound.

4 And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them; and they continued a season in ward.

5 ¶ And they dreamed a dream both of them, each man his dream in one night, each man according to the interpretation of his dream, the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, which were bound in the prison.

6 And Joseph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, and behold, they were sad.

7 And he asked Pharaoh's officers that were with him in the ward of his lord's house, saying, Wherefore look ye so sadly to-day?

8 And they said unto him, We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joseph said unto them, Do not interpretations belong to God? Tell me them, I pray you.

9 And the chief butler told his dream to Joseph, and said unto him, In my dream, behold, a vine was before me;

10 And in the vine were three branches: and it was as though it budded, and her blossoms shot forth; and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes:

11 And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand.

the prison as he had before enjoyed with his master, Potiphar. Still, whatever he did, "the Lord made it to prosper." Joseph, though a prisoner, is made the head turnkey, (as we should say,) and circumstances are now rapidly advancing, to raise him to a much higher honour than that from which he fell.

CHAP. XL. Ver. 1—23. Joseph interprets the butler and baker's dreams.—Pharaoh's chief butler and baker had both offended "their Lord, the king of Egypt." The ground of their offence is not stated; but it is enough for arbitrary princes that they are displeased, and it was well for these prisoners that their heads were not immediately struck off. They were, however, to be the instruments of Joseph's advancement, and are therefore brought under his care, and "continued a season in ward;" for it was not the custom in those days, nor is it now in arbitrary countries the custom, to hasten the process of justice. Both, however, dreamed in one night, "each man his dream." Joseph seeing by their countenances that something had distressed them, on inquiry finds that each had "dreamed a dream," and there was no interpreter. Being in prison, they could have no access to the professed interpreters of dreams,

"the wise men" of Egypt, and they themselves knew not what to make of them.

Joseph told his fellow-prisoners, as he afterwards told Pharaoh, that interpretations belong to God; that he is the fountain of wisdom and of knowledge, and begs them to tell him their dreams, with an intimation, doubtless, that he would seek to him for the interpretation. The butler first tells his dream, and Joseph gives the interpretation; but we are not to conclude, from the rapid manner in which events are here related, that no interval occurred between. In all probability he applied himself secretly to prayer, and received in answer thereto a communication from above.

Under these circumstances, we might wish to know in what light Joseph considered his own dreams and their interpretation. The probability is, that he continued unshaken in his conviction of their truth, notwithstanding the non-appearance of their fulfilment, and was therefore the more deeply interested in the dreams of his companions. The interpretation he gave of the dream of the chief butler was so encouraging, that the baker (or confectioner rather) was induced to request the interpreta(verse 20.) was the king's prison. All the officers in the employment of the ancient kings of Egypt, according to Diodorus Siculus, were taken from the most illustrious families of the priesthood in the country; no slave or common person being ever permitted to serve in the presence of the king. As these persons, therefore, were of the most noble families, it is natural to expect they would be put, when accused, into the state prison.—Bagster.

Ver. 4. A season.—Yamim, literally days; how long is uncertain, though the word probably signifies, as many suppose, a complete year, (see Gen. iv. 8. xxiv. 55.) and as Pharaoh called them to an account on his birthday, (ver. 20.) Calmet supposes they had offended on the preceding birthday, and thus had been one whole year in prison.—Bagster. See note on ch. xxiv. 55.

Ver. 11. I took the grapes, &c.—[From this we find, that wine anciently was the mere expressed juice of the grape, without fermentation. The Sôky, or cup-bearer, took the bunch, pressed the juice into the cup, and instantly delivered it to his master.]—Bagster. The Egyptians drank no wine; they considered it as the invention of the evil genius, Typhon; but they did not object to drink the juice of the grape, provided it had not become wine by being fermented.—Michaëlis.

plished of mortals. Two of the finest poems in the Persian language were written on the subject of Joseph and his mistress, by the poets Jamy and Nisammy.—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Brought in a Hebrew.—[The base affection of this woman, being disappointed, was changed into rancorous hatred, and she exults in the opportunity of being revenged on Joseph. She begins her accusation, in the affected language of offended modesty, rage, and disdain, by charging her husband, whom we may reasonably suppose she did not greatly love, with being an accessory to the indignity she pretended to have received: "he hath brought in a Hebrew," a very abomination to an Egyptian, "to mock us," insult and treat me in a base unworthy manner. The fable of the brave and virtuous Bellerophon and Sthenobia, wife of Prætus, king of the Argives, is supposed to have been founded on this history.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Into the prison.—Hebrew, "The round house, or tower."

CHAP. XL. Ver. 1. The butler.—More properly, "the cup-bearer;" and his baker; rather, cook, or confectioner.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 2. Two of his officers.—See note on chap. xxxvii. 36.

Ver. 3. Where Joseph was.—[Or, "Where Joseph was confined," for he doubtless had his personal liberty. This place, we learn from the preceding chapter, 12 And Joseph said unto him, This is the interpretation of <sup>a</sup> it: The three branches are three days:

13 Yet within three days shall <sup>b</sup> Pharaoh lift up thy <sup>c</sup> head, and restore thee unto thy place: and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler.

14 But <sup>d</sup> think on me when it shall be well with thee, and show kindness, <sup>e</sup> I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house:

15 For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews: and here also have I done <sup>f</sup> nothing that they should put me into the dungeon.

16 When the chief baker saw that the interpretation was good, he said unto Joseph, I also was in my dream, and behold, I had three <sup>g</sup> white baskets on my head:

17 And in the uppermost basket there was of all manner of <sup>h</sup> bake-meats for Pharaoh: and the birds did eat them out of the basket upon my head.

18 And Joseph answered, and said, This is the interpretation thereof: The three <sup>i</sup> baskets are three days:

19 Yet within <sup>j</sup> three days shall <sup>k</sup> Pharaoh lift up thy head from off thee, and shall hang thee on a tree; and the birds shall eat thy <sup>l</sup> flesh from off thee.

20 ¶ And it came to pass the third day, tion of his dream also: the result was very different, but both came literally true. On giving his interpretation, however, to the chief butler, Joseph makes a pathetic appeal to him, to remember him. "Think of me when it shall be well with thee; and show kindness, I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house; for indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews."—"But was this a just account?" says Fuller, "Did not the Ishmaelites buy him? They did; but it was of those who had no right to sell him, and therefore it was in reality stealing him. Such would be the purchase of a child by a kidnapper of an unprincipled nurse; and such is the purchase of slaves to this day on the coast of Africa." He adds, "And here also have I done nothing, that they should put me into this dungeon." He contents himself, however, with pleading his own innocence, without attempting to criminate others. Not a word about his unnatural brothers, or his abandoned mistress; but, O this dungeon! Here "the iron entered into his soul;" and those who know what dungeons are in the East, and were formerly in our own country, will feel the force of this appeal; but, alas! "the butler forgot Joseph!"

The interpretation of the chief baker's dream was, however, of a very different complexion. Bishop Patrick remarks, "that he was not an agent, but a sufferer, in his dream; for he did not give a cake or confection to the king, as the other did the cup, but the fowls of the air descended upon his basket, and flew off with the dainties that were in it." Both dreams appear to have been admonitory, and proved true; but the leading design of Providence in both, was to advance Joseph to the government of Egypt.

Ver. 12. The three branches are three days.—This symbolical language appears to have been common in Greece. In the portentum exhibited to the Greeks in Aulis, and there explained by Calchas, as Homer reports it, the eight young birds with the mother, (which is the ninth,) being swallowed up by a dragon, signify that the Greeks should spend nine years in war against Troy, and take it in the tenth.—Orient. Lit.

Ver. 13. Will lift up thy head.—This is literal, but the meaning somewhat doubtful. The margin says, "Reckon with;" Dr. Boothroyd, "Decide concerning thee;" By Law, "Call thee to account;" all to much the same effect. But we have a phrase of "holding up the hand" at the bar of judgment; and the Hebrews might use "lifting up the head" in a similar manner. So when Ahab brought Naboth to a mock trial, it is said, "they set him up on high." 1 Kings xxi. 9. Both the butler and baker had a hearing, probably, when one was acquitted and the other condemned.

Ver. 15. From the land of the Hebrews.—It has been objected, that Canaan was not known by this name till the time of Joshua; but it is probable that "Hebron might, from the long residence of the patriarchs in that quarter, and their treaties with surrounding nations. Genesis, xxi. 23. xxii. 6. xvi. 28. xxxiv. 6. But if we were to admit that Joshua inserted these words, it would detract nothing from the authority of the book.—See Ep. Patrick.

Ver. 19. Lift up thy head from off thee.—The criminal was beheaded before he was hanged, and then hanged upon hooks, or by the hand. Lam. v. 13.—Dr. Clarke.

CHAP. XLI. Ver. 2. Came up out of the river.—Jolliffe mentions, in his late trav in Egypt, that the cattle not employed in agriculture, in the heat of the day immerse themselves in water, except the head. "I have seen long strings of them, guided only by a peasant boy, traverse the current (of the Nile) where it is broadest and most rapid." The Hebrew leor, translated "river,"

CHAPTER XLI.

1 Pharaoh's two dreams. 25 Joseph interpreteth them: 33 he giveth Pharaoh counsel: 38 Joseph is advanced: 60 he begetteth Manasseh and Ephraim. 63 The famine

AND it came to pass at the end of two full years, that <sup>a</sup> Pharaoh dreamed: and behold, he stood by the river.

2 And behold, there came up out of the river seven well-favoured kine and fat-fleshed; and they fed in a meadow.

3 And behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed; and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river.

4 And the ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

5 And he slept and dreamed the second time: and behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, <sup>b</sup> rank and good.

6 And behold, seven thin ears and blasted with the east wind sprung up after them.

ler forgot Joseph, but the God of Abraham did not. The friendship of the world is treacherous, but "there is a friend who sticketh closer than a brother." (Prov. xxiii. 24.) We have here another instance of the influence which God has often exerted upon the human mind. We remarked this in the cases of Abimelech and Abraham, Laban and Jacob, and this was evidently the more necessary before a written revelation was given to men. In this case, at least, divine interference was necessary to raise Joseph from the dungeon, to save Egypt from absolute famine, and to bring Israel into Egypt, which was destined to be the scene of God's mighty power and goodness. On Pharaoh's dream we need make no remark, but shall leave it to the interpretation of Joseph. In the mean time, the spirit of Pharaoh was troubled, and he calls for "all the magicians and wise men" of Egypt, but, alas! in vain. On the character of these wise men, we shall have farther occasion to remark; at present, we may notice the extreme anxiety of the king, which naturally led him to inquire of all his courtiers, if they knew any skilful interpreter of dreams. Among others, it is highly probable that he inquired of his chief butler, or cup bearer; at least, he saw Pharaoh's agitation, and his conscience now smote him. I do remember (said he) my fault this day, ungrateful creature as I am! He remembers a Hebrew youth, divinely skilled in this art, and he had promised to speak for him to the king; but, alas! he had forgotten it. Now, however, he can recollect, when it may be the means of ingratiating himself with his royal master. Joseph is therefore sent for in all haste. But for this, he might have staid in the dungeon till his hairs became like feathers, and his nails talons; (Dan. iv. 33.) but now he must run and shave himself, or at least trim his beard, and wash and change his raiment, which was doubtless provided for him, to appear before the king. He does so; and his majesty instantly demands whether he can inis applied exclusively to the Nile.—Seven well-favoured kine.—Clemens of Alexandria says, "The ox signifies, in the sacred symbolical writings of the Egyptians, agriculture. Pharaoh saw them come out of the Nile, because the fertility of Egypt entirely depends on the overflowing of that river."—Orient. Lit. They have a standard to measure this, which Pliny gives us. The ordinary height of the inundation is sixteen cubits. If it rise only twelve cubits, a famine is the consequence; even at thirteen cubits hunger prevails; fourteen produce general rejoicing; fifteen, perfect security; sixteen, all the luxuries of life. But when it rises to eighteen, it prevents sowing of the land in due season; and (this also) produces a famine.

Ver. 2 and 18. Fed in a meadow.—Rather, "Fed on the achu," the reeds which grow on the banks of the Nile.—Dr. Wall's Crit. Notes. Hasselquist describes them as having scarce any branches, but numerous leaves, which are narrow, smooth, channelled on the upper surface, and the plant about eleven feet high. The Egyptians (says he) make ropes of the leaves.

Ver. 5. Seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk.—(This remarkable emblem, which appears to us an unusual and monstrous production, has always been considered as a liberty taken with nature, by way of furnishing a symbol; whereas the fact is, that a species of wheat, which grows in Egypt, does actually bear, when perfect, scarce any number of ears on one stalk, as its natural conformation. It differs from ours in having a solid stem, or at least a stem full of pith, in order to yield sufficient nourishment and support to so great a weight as the ears which it bears.)—Bagster. Taylor gives an engraving of this species, from a plant which grew in England.—Fragmenta, 147. Dr. Shaw says, "In Barbary it is common to see one grain produce ten or fifteen stalks. Even some grains of the Murwan wheat, which I brought with me to Oxford and sowed in the physic garden threw out each of them fifty."

7 And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and behold, it was a dream.

8 And it came to pass in the morning, that his spirit was troubled: and he sent and called for all the magicians of Egypt, and all the wise men thereof; and Pharaoh told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

9 ¶ Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, I do remember my faults this day:

10 Pharaoh was wroth with his servants, and put me in ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me, and the chief baker:

11 And we dreamed a dream in one night, I and he: we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, a Hebrew, servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he interpreted to us our dreams; to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

13 And it came to pass, as he interpreted to us, so it was: me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 ¶ Then Pharaoh sent and called Joseph, and they brought him hastily out of the dungeon: and he shaved himself, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

15 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and I have heard say of thee, that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.

16 And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, In my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the river:

18 And behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, fat-fleshed, and well-favoured; and they fed in a meadow:

after them, poor and very ill-favoured and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness:

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine:

21 And when they had eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them; but they were still ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I saw in my dream, and behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good:

23 And behold, seven ears, withered, thin, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them:

24 And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears: and I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

25 ¶ And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: God hath showed Pharaoh what he is about to do.

26 The seven good kine are seven years; and the seven good ears are seven years: the dream is one.

27 And the seven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them are seven years; and the seven empty ears blasted with the east wind shall be seven years of famine.

28 This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: what God is about to do he sheweth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, there come seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt:

30 And there shall arise after them seven years of famine; and all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt; and the famine shall consume the land:

31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land by reason of that famine following: for it shall be very grievous.

32 And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharaoh twice; it is because the thing is established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass.

terpret dreams. Joseph, who without doubt had been admonished of God, meekly replies, "It is not in me; God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace." This was so different from the style of his magicians, that the king must certainly have been struck with it. He therefore immediately relates his dreams, as he had done to them—but to them in vain. Joseph wishes him to know that there was a God in heaven who revealeth secrets, and directs him to give him the praise. (Dan. ii. 28.)

Ver. 25—57. Joseph's interpretation and advancement.—This interpretation was so natural, that the king appears to have been instantly struck with its simplicity and probability, with the air of oracular authority with which it was delivered, and, above all, as coming from so young a man, (only thirty years of age,) with the wisdom and propriety of his advice. But "Where (says the king) can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?"

It is probable, that when Pharaoh laid his dreams before his magicians, they applied to their books of symbols—to their astrological calculations: and it seems wonderful they could hit on no scheme of interpretation to pacify the king; but he that giveth wisdom to the simple, "turneth wise men backward, and maketh the diviners mad." (Isa. xlv. 25.) The principles of the interpretation appear to be these: Cattle being the instruments of agriculture, are the proper emblems of harvests, good or bad: their coming up out of the river (into which they retired in the sultry heat) implies, that the Nile was the source of fruitfulness with them, as rain is with us, and its inundations being too much, or too little, were equally fatal. (See Note on verse 2.) This is the first set of emblems: the others are of the like import. A species of Egyptian wheat bears seven ears on one stalk, (note on verse 5.) and those ears blasted with the east (or south-east) wind, the Simoom, which, blowing from the parched deserts of Arabia, blasts and destroys every thing it reaches. (Hos. xiii. 15.) The incongruity of cattle devouring each other, and of plants consuming one another, agrees exactly with the nature of dreaming, which, in scenes the most natural, always mixes such incongruous circumstances.

The king's mind being happily relieved from anxiety, his first object was to reward Joseph, and place him in a situation which would enable him to execute the plan he had just recommended. He accordingly appointed Joseph his Grand Vizier, or Prime Minister, by delivering to him his ring, containing the royal signet, (which was the seal of office,) and made him the second person in his kingdom; and, that he might be duly revered and acknowledged as such, he clothes him in vestures of fine linen, (or cotton rather,) with a chain of gold about his neck, and places him in the second chariot, with a herald to proclaim before him, "Bow the knee." The name given to it is not unlikely that he was sent to fetch him before the king. So mysterious are the ways of Providence.

Ver. 23. Blasted.—[It has been very properly observed, that all the mischief done to corn or fruit, by blasting, smutting, mildew, &c. are attributed to the east wind. In Egypt it is peculiarly destructive, because it comes through the parched deserts of Arabia, often destroying vast numbers of men and women. The destructive nature of the Sam, Simoom, Smoom, or Samiel, is mentioned by almost all travellers. When this pestilential wind advances, which it does with great rapidity, its approach is indicated by a redness in the air; and when sufficiently near to admit of being observed, it appears like a haze, in colour resembling the purple part of the rainbow, but not so compressed or thick. The principal stream of the blast always moves in a line, about 20 yards in breadth, and twelve feet above the surface of the earth; but its parching influence pervades all places to a considerable distance. The only means of preservation from its noxious influence, is to lie flat, with the face upon the ground, till the blast be over. Camels and other animals instinctively perceive its approach, and bury their

Ver. 8. Magicians.—[Charumtmim, the word here used, may probably mean no more than interpreters of abstruse or difficult subjects; especially of dreams and visions, which formed a considerable part of the ancient Pagan religion; and the Egyptian priests were the first who professed this art. The word may probably be of affinity with, or derived from, the Persian chiradmand, wise, learned, judicious, intelligent, from chirad, understanding, judgment, and mand, endowed with. They seem to have been such persons as Josephus calls sacred scribes, or professors of sacred learning.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Brought him out hastily.—Hebrew, "Made him run," for the king's command required expedition. This could hardly be without the knowledge of Potiphar, who commanded the guard; but "where the word of a king is, there is power," (Eccles. vii.) 4, and must be no resistance. It is probable, however, that before this, which was full two years after Joseph's committal, Potiphar had received convincing proof of his wife's infidelity; and though he might not think it prudent to restore him, it seems that he must have connived at, if not promoted, his advancement in the prison. But now, Joseph is raised far above his master; and as he was captain of the prison 33 Now therefore let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt.

34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint officers over the land, and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plentiful years.

35 And let them gather all the food of those good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh; and let them keep food in the cities.

36 And that food shall be for store to the land against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; that the land perish not through the famine.

37 And the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants.

38 And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?

39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Forasmuch as God hath showed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art:

40 Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou.

41 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt.

42 And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck;

43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had: and they cried before him, Bow the knee: and he made him ruler over all the land of Egypt.

44 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah priest of On: and Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.

46 ¶ And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt.

And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

47 And in the seven plentiful years the earth brought forth by handfuls.

48 And he gathered up all the food of the seven years which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field which was round about every city laid he up in the same.

49 And Joseph gathered corn as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering; for it was without number.

50 And unto Joseph were born two sons before the years of famine came: which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah priest of On bare unto him.

51 And Joseph called the name of the first-born Manasseh; for God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house.

52 And the name of the second called he Ephraim: For God hath caused me to be fruitful in the land of my affliction.

53 ¶ And the seven years of plentifulness that was in the land of Egypt, were ended.

54 And the seven years of dearth began to come, according as Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.

55 And when all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do.

56 And the famine was over all the face of the earth: and Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt.

57 And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn; because that the famine was so sore in all lands.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 Jacob sendeth his ten sons to buy corn in Egypt: 16 They are imprisoned by Joseph for spies: 18 they are set at liberty, on condition to bring Benjamin: 21 they have remorse for Joseph: 25 they return. 36 Jacob refuseth to send Benjamin.

NOW when Jacob saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Why do ye look one upon another?

him is, indeed, somewhat doubtful as to its exact import; but it certainly implies the highest rank, and the fullest power: and if this name implied an "Interpreter of dreams," it is used not to class him with the magicians, but rather to distinguish him from them; as if Pharaoh meant to say they were but pretenders: this was "the man to whom secrets were revealed;" or, as he had before said, "This is a man in whom the Spirit of God is." The Egyptians, we may remember, boasted of their knowledge and their wisdom. Hence the encomium on Solomon, (1 Kings iv. 30.) that his "wisdom excelled all the wisdom of Egypt;" and so did that of Joseph.

Pharaoh having thus promoted Joseph, seeks for him the most honourable alliance. Then he has two sons, the former of whom he calls Manasseh, "forgetting;" because, said he, "God hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house," being now the founder of a family of his own; and the other Ephraim, that is, fruitful; "for God hath caused me to be fruitful in the land of my affliction."

Joseph, soon after his appointment, made the tour of Egypt, and had the satisfaction to see the complete fulfilment of the first part of his prediction, in seven years of very extraordinary plenty; inasmuch that, without difficulty, he "gathered corn as the sand of the sea, very much," and laid it up in storehouses in all the cities; but the trying season now approached. "The seven years of dearth began to come, according as Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands;" that is, in all the lands round about; "but in all the land of Egypt there was bread." It is evident that this dearth could not arise solely from any deficiency in the rising of the Nile, for Canaan and other surrounding countries were equally distressed. It was a dearth throughout all the East; and many thousands, but for the Providence that raised up Joseph, must have been famished.

CHAP. XLII. Ver. 1—20. Jacob sends his sons to buy corn.—"Behold, this dreamer cometh," said Joseph's brethren, when he went to visit them in Dothan; and, behold, now his unkind and unnatural brethren come to Egypt, unwittingly, to fulfil his dreams! Joseph was thirteen years in Egypt before his promotion, and great part of that time had been spent in the deepest affliction, and the most humiliating circumstances. Even his character had been reproached, and he wore the Geddes, Boothroyd, Clarke; for the latter, Parkhurst, and others. But the Chaldee explains it, "Father of the king;" which seems countenanced by Gen. xiv. 8.

Ver. 44. I am Pharaoh.—That is, "I am king;" for so the name is agreed to mean.—No man shall lift hand or foot.—The Chaldee explains this, "Without thy word shall not a man lift up his hand to hold a weapon, nor his foot to ride a horse," &c.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 45. Zaphnath-paaneah.—The margin explains this, "A revealer of secrets;" or, "one to whom secrets are revealed." So the Chaldee, the Greek, and Oriental versions, and the Rabbins generally. Jerome makes this name to mean, "Saviour of the world;" but this, says Dr. Clarke, is "worthy of no regard."—Potiphar, priest of On.—This is evidently not the Potiphar to whom Joseph was sold, but the high-priest of On; in Greek, Heliopolis; (the City of the Sun,) so that he was an idolater. These high-priests were, however, princes, (so margin,) and were the chief persons in the cities where they resided; and those of On were the most learned in the country.—Ainsworth. CHAP. XLII. Ver. 1. Jacob saw, [i. e. heard, from the report of others, that there was plenty in Egypt. The operations of one sense are frequently put for those of another in Hebrew.]—Bagster.

mouths and nostrils in the ground. It rarely lasts more than seven or eight minutes, but so poisonous are its effects, that it instantly suffocates those who are unfortunate enough to inhale it.]—Bagster.

Ver. 40. According to thy word (Heb. "mouth") shall all my people be ruled.—The Chaldee says, "Be armed;" but the Hebrew rather means "kiss." The sense is evidently "to reverence, obey;" and imports, that there was to be no access to the sovereign but through his means. "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry." Psal. ii. 12.

Ver. 42. Pharaoh took off his ring.—"In the ring there is generally a seal, on which the name of the sovereign is engraved. This signet is dipped in a coloured matter, and impressed over the royal orders, instead of the king's title. The symbol of power and authority given to the Grand Vizier, is the seal of the Sultan, with his cipher."—Orient. Lit.

Ver. 43. Bow the knee.—The custom of having criers to make their proclamations of praise before all great personages, when they appear in public, is common through all India.—Dubois India. Our translators go upon the supposition of the word Abrech being Coptic or Egyptian; but those who take it to be Hebrew, explain it "king" or "blessed father." For the former interpretation see Jablonski, Aquila, and the Vulgate; Origen, Jerome, &c.

2 And he said, Behold, I have heard that there is corn in Egypt: get you down thither, and buy for us from thence; that we may live and not die.

3 And Joseph's ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt.

4 But Benjamin, Joseph's brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren: for he said, Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

5 And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: for the famine was in the land of Canaan.

6 And Joseph was the governor over the land, and he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth.

7 And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake roughly unto them; and he said unto them, Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him.

9 And Joseph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

10 And they said unto him, Nay, my lord, but to buy food are thy servants come.

11 We are all one man's sons; we are true men; thy servants are no spies.

12 And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

13 And they said, Thy servants are twelve brethren, the sons of one man in the land of Canaan: and behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one is not.

q an interpreter sits between them.

14 And Joseph said unto them, That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies:

15 Hereby ye shall be proved: By the life of Pharaoh ye shall not go forth hence, except your youngest brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be kept in prison, that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else, by the life of Pharaoh, surely ye are spies.

17 And he put them all together into ward three days.

18 And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live; for I fear God:

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in the house of your prison: go ye, carry corn for the famine of your houses:

20 But bring your youngest brother unto me; so shall your words be verified, and ye shall not die. And they did so.

21 ¶ And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.

22 And Reuben answered them, saying, Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore, behold, also his blood is required.

23 And they knew not that Joseph understood them; for he spake unto them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himself about from them, and wept; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 ¶ Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's chains of a criminal, "until the time that his word came; the word of the Lord tried him." (Ps. cv. 19.) Then his dungeon was exchanged for a palace, and his chains of iron for a chain of gold. Our plan allows but little room for amplification; but it seems unpardonable to pass over this history without remarking, how beautiful a type Joseph affords of a once suffering, but now exalted Saviour. Fairer and wiser than the sons of men; yet meek and humble, despised and persecuted, and that too by his brethren; consigned to the pit of death, and loaded with reproaches and accusations; but lo! at the appointed moment, the bars of death give way, and the gates of Hades open! "Out of prison he comes to reign." He is exalted to the right hand of the Majesty on high. Every knee is commanded to bow before him; and the Sovereign of the universe proclaims, "Let all the angels of God worship him."—"To him be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

But to return to Joseph: We are now called to contemplate the just retribution of Divine Providence. In the ensuing narrative we see his inhuman brethren are in their turn tortured with the same tortures (to use a Hebrew phrase) as they inflicted on their younger brother. Did they reproach him? they also are reproached—did they commit him to a pit? they also are imprisoned and in peril of their lives; but there was a bitter ingredient in their cup of which he never tasted—they had a guilty conscience. On the other hand, there was a degree of mercy, as well as equity, mixed with their temporary sufferings; they were gently used, compared with his treatment, and the object evidently was to bring them to reflection: he therefore commits them for three days to prison; but no sooner were they brought to a proper sense of their situation, than Joseph pours into their wounded minds a balm like that of Gilead—"This do, and live; for I fear God!" You have therefore nothing unjust to fear from me. "Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him." How should they? when they last saw him he was a lad; now he was a man—a prince—the governor of the land. "They bowed themselves down before him with their faces to the earth; and he remembered the dreams which he had dreamed of them." And here is one of his dreams now literally fulfilled; he stands upright, and they make obeisance to him. (Gen. xxxvii. 7.) Ah! what tender emotions now agitated his heart! but he is resolved to conceal himself, and therefore thus roughly addresses them:—"Ye are spies," are ye not? and "to see the nakedness of the land are ye come." By the life of Pharaoh, ye are spies." Commentators differ as to the question, whether this language can be justified, or even excused. We may leave it as we find it. "Scripture history exhibits men just as they are, not what they ought in all respects to be. Dark spots are most easily discerned on the whitest garments, and foul blemishes on the fairest reputations. But let no sanctity of character (says Dr. Hunter) presume to shelter the slightest deviation from the path of God's commandment." It is not likely that Joseph would have used these forms of expression, if he had not learned them in Pharaoh's court. We must remember, however, that he was acting under the character of Viceroy of Egypt, and that his ultimate object was to bring his father and all the family to reside under his protection. They return, therefore, with corn to Jacob, under an understood promise to bring their youngest brother Benjamin; and Simeon is left in pledge.

Ver. 21—38. They return with corn to Jacob.—"While Joseph, (says the writer last quoted,) the better to conceal himself, talks and acts like a true Egyptian, God employs his affected sternness and severity, to awaken their slumbering consciences, and to show the sons of Jacob to themselves. Treated as spies, roughly spoken to, their most solemn protestations disregarded, put into prison, and bound—their treatment of Joseph, in the evil day which put him in their power, rushes upon their memory in all its guilt and horror, and they mutually upbraid and reproach each other with their barbarity; saying one to another, "We are verily guilty concerning our bro-

Ver. 6. Governor.—[Shallit, an intendant, protector, ruler, from shalat, to be over as a protector, to rule; hence the Arabic salita, to obtain and exercise dominion, rule; and sultan, ruler, lord, prince, and king.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. Ye are spies.—"Suspensions of this kind are still entertained by the Arabs of foreign travellers. Dr. Shaw says that "the Arabs take every stranger to be a spy who comes to examine their country." But this excuse is not seldom a mere pretence for extortion; so that travellers find themselves exactly in the same situation as Joseph's brethren." Rosenmüller gives several instances of threatenings being employed for that purpose.

Ver. 11. We are all one man's sons, &c.—By this they suggested the impossibility of their being spies, since no man in his wits would send so many, and all his own sons, upon so dangerous an enterprise.—Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 15. By the life of Pharaoh.—Hanway says, the most sacred oath among the Persians is, "By the king's head." But this was not strictly an oath, but a solemn protestation, as in 1 Sam. xx. 3. and elsewhere; and so Reuben appears to have understood it: see ch. xliii. 3. Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "As Pharaoh liveth."

Ver. 23. Interpreter.—[Heb. an interpreter was between them:—the malitz, does not seem to have been an interpreter in our sense of the term; as we have many evidences in this book that the Egyptians, Hebrews, Canaanites, and Syrians, could understand each other in a general way; and it appears from several passages in this very chapter, (particularly verse 24.) that Joseph and his brethren understood each others' language, as his brethren and Joseph's steward also did. (ch. xlii. 19, &c.; compare ch. xxxix. and xlix.) It seems to denote an officer who is called in Abyssinia, according to Bruce, Kel Hatzze, "the voice or word of the king," who always stands at the side of a lattice window of a balcony, within which the king sits; who is never seen, but who speaks through a hole in the side of it, covered in the inside with a curtain, to this officer, by whom he speaks to the persons present.]—Bagster.

28 And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored ; and lo, it is even in my sack : and their heart failed them, and they were afraid, saying one to another, What is this that God hath done unto us ?

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 Jacob is hardly persuaded to send Benjamin. 15 Joseph entertaineth his brethren : 31 he maketh them a feast.

AND the famine was sore in the land.

2 And it came to pass, when they had eaten up the corn which they had brought out of Egypt, their father said unto them, Go again, buy us a little food.

3 And Judah spake unto him, saying, The man did solemnly protest unto us, saying, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you.

4 If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy thee food :

5 But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down : for the man said unto us, Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you.

6 And Israel said, Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, as to tell the man whether ye had yet a brother ?

CHAP. XLIII. Ver. 1—34. Jacob sends Benjamin into Egypt.—Heart-breaking as the thought was to part with Benjamin, there is no other alternative; Benjamin must go into Egypt, or he and his father must starve at home; for "the famine was sore in the land," and his brethren would not go without him. Reuben, indeed, had offered to pledge his two sons, and Judah pledged himself for the security of the lad; and it is observable, that these are the only two who in different ways laboured to save the life of Joseph, which marks them as the most humane of the family, though it is evident that their security amounted to nothing; for if any thing happened to Benjamin, the death of Reuben's sons would not restore him, any more than the reproaches that could be heaped on Judah. It was, however, a case of necessity, and upon that ground alone the aged Patriarch gives his consent. "If it must be so," said he, "carry down the man a present"—"A man's gift maketh room for him;" (Prov. xvii. 16.)—and though it be but "a little," it will look respectful, and may be received with kindness. "And God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. If I be bereaved, I am bereaved." As if he had said, "I throw myself into the hands of God Almighty, who is all-sufficient, either to deliver or support me!" Similar seems to have been the language of queen Esther, in a like desperate situation—"If I perish, I perish." (Esther iv. 16.)

Joseph no sooner saw Benjamin with his brethren, than he ordered his steward to prepare dinner for them; and, it is observable, it was to consist of animal food, such as his brethren had been accustomed to: "Slay, and make ready;" or, as the margin reads, "Kill a killing;" from which circumstance it should seem, that this man also was of the family of Abraham. Hence he says, when Joseph's brethren came trembling before him to return the money found in their sacks, "Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure: I had your money."—"A guilty conscience," we often say, "needs no accuser;" so these men, the moment they were ordered to Joseph's house, supposed it must be to answer to the charge of fraud: and though in this respect they knew themselves to be innocent, yet they had so much guilt upon their consciences, that they might well expect the judgment of God would follow them. All fear is, however, dissipated, when ther, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us—therefore, behold, also his blood is required of us." This they said in the hearing of Joseph, not imagining that he understood them, because he spake to them by an interpreter. Such assistance was not only proper for the purpose of dignity, but convenience, as he had to treat with persons from all the surrounding countries, who came to Egypt to buy corn, and whose languages having continued to diverge more and more from the parent Hebrew since the confusion of Babylon, must of course now considerably vary; though not so much, but that the family of Abraham, retaining (as we suppose) the parent language, and continually travelling through Canaan and the neighbouring countries, were able to make themselves understood. Joseph, however, affected not to understand them; but their words pierced his heart, and he was constrained to turn aside and weep. But he speedily returned, took Simeon as a hostage—probably the man who bound him and cast him into the pit—and the rest he sent home to their aged father, and secretly returned their money into their sacks, charging them not to come again without their youngest brother, whom his heart yearned to see. They return accordingly to Jacob, relate all that passed, and, moreover, that their money had been given back, and was found on emptying out their sacks; but they were obliged to add, also, that Simeon had been left as a hostage till they should bring Benjamin. At this the old man's heart was ready to burst with grief. "Joseph is not, (said he,) and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away; all these things are against me!" Thus are we always apt to construe adverse providences, when, like Jacob's trials in the present instance, they are all "working together for our good." Reuben now offers his two sons to Jacob as security for Benjamin, but in vain. "My son (replied Jacob) shall not go down with you; for his brother (meaning Joseph) is dead, and he is left alone; if mischief befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave." Here, it is thought, the aged Patriarch insinuates a suspicion, that they had not dealt fairly by Joseph; that they had perhaps quarrelled among themselves, and that he had fallen a victim to their jealousy or resentment; and it is not unlikely that, by their actions, or expressions, they might have given occasion for such surmises.

Ver. 27. In the inn.—(Malon, from loon, to stay, abide, lodge, denotes any place to stay and lodge in, particularly a place where travellers usually stop to lodge, which is generally near a well, where they fill their girbels, or leather bottles, with fresh water, and having unladen and clogged their camels, asses, &c. permit them to crop any little verdure there may be in the place, keeping watch over them by turns. Our word inn here gives us a false idea—there was no such places of entertainment in the desert which Joseph's brethren had to pass; nor are there any at the present day; the only accommodation such a place affords is either a well, or a khan or caravanserai, which is generally no more than four bare walls, perfectly exposed, the place being open at the top, and furnishing a wretched lodging; and even these, it is probable, were not in use at this early period.—Bagster.

Ver. 28. Heart failed them.—(Heb. went forth. This refers to the spasmodic affection which is felt in the breast at any sudden alarm or fright. Among the common people in our own country, an expression exactly alike is used on similar occasions: "My heart seemed to leap out at my mouth."—Bagster.

Ver. 36. Things against me.—(Alay hayoo cullanah, literally, "upon me are all these things;" not badly rendered by the Vulgate, "all these evils fall back upon me;" they lie upon me as heavy loads, hastening my death; they are more than I can bear.)—Bagster.

Ver. 38. My gray hairs.—Hebrew, "Gravness, or hoariness." CHAP. XLIII. Ver. 3. The mandid solemnly protest.—Hebrew, "Protesting he protested." The same form of expression occurs ver. 7, "asking he asked us;" and "knowing could we know?" It is indeed a very common Hebrewism.

7 And they said, The <sup>c</sup> man asked us straitly of our state, and of our kindred, saying, Is your father yet alive? have ye another brother? and we told him according to the <sup>d</sup> tenor of these words: Could <sup>e</sup> we certainly know that he would say, Bring your brother down?

8 And Judah said unto Israel his father, Send the lad with me, and we will arise and go; that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, and also our little ones.

9 I will be <sup>f</sup> surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him: if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever:

10 For except we had lingered, surely now we had <sup>g</sup> returned this second time.

11 And their father Israel said unto them, If it must be so now, do this; take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and carry down the man a <sup>h</sup> present, a little <sup>i</sup> balm, and a little honey, spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds:

12 And take double money in your hand; and the money that was <sup>j</sup> brought again in the mouth of your sacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an oversight:

13 Take also your brother, and arise, go again unto the man:

14 And God Almighty give you mercy <sup>k</sup> before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin: If <sup>l</sup> I be <sup>m</sup> bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.

15 ¶ And the men took that present, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin; and rose up, and went down to Egypt, and stood before Joseph.

16 And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them, he said to the <sup>n</sup> ruler of his house, Bring these men home, and <sup>o</sup> slay, and make ready: for these men shall <sup>p</sup> dine with me at noon.

17 And the man did as Joseph bade: and the man brought the men into Joseph's house.

18 And the men were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house; and they said, Because of the money that was returned in our sacks at the first time are we brought in; that he <sup>q</sup> may <sup>r</sup> seek occasion against us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our asses.

19 And they came near to the steward of Joseph's house, and they communed with him at the door of the house, 22 And other money have we brought down in our hands to buy food: we cannot tell who put our money in our sacks.

23 And he said, <sup>t</sup> Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks: <sup>u</sup> I had your money. And he brought Simeon out unto them.

24 And the man brought the men into Joseph's house, and gave them <sup>v</sup> water, and they washed their feet; and he gave their asses provender.

25 And they made ready the <sup>w</sup> present against Joseph came at noon: for they heard that they should eat bread there.

26 ¶ And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and <sup>x</sup> bowed themselves to him to the earth.

27 And he asked them of their <sup>y</sup> welfare, and said, <sup>z</sup> Is your father well, the old man of whom ye <sup>a</sup> spake? Is he yet alive?

28 And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive: and they bowed down their heads and made obeisance.

29 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, his <sup>b</sup> mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, of whom ye spake unto me? And he said, God be gracious unto thee, my <sup>c</sup> son.

30 And Joseph made haste; for his bowels did <sup>d</sup> yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep; and he entered into his chamber, and wept there.

31 And he washed his face, and went out, and refrained himself, and said, Set on bread.

32 And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians which did eat with him, by themselves: because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is an <sup>e</sup> abomination unto the Egyptians.

33 And they sat before him, the first-born according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

34 And he took and sent <sup>f</sup> messes unto them from before him; but Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs. And they drank, and <sup>g</sup> were <sup>h</sup> merry with him.

Simeon is brought out to them; their present is accepted, they are admitted to an audience, and the most affectionate inquiries are made after their father's welfare. But when he comes to lay his hand on the head of Benjamin, with "God be gracious to thee, my son!" he can go no farther; "he made haste" to retire from the overwhelming scene, and "entered into his chamber, and wept there." But he recovered himself sufficiently to return to dine with them.

Here again all appears mystery and amazement. They were seated according to their age, and they "marvelled one at Ver. 11. A little balm and a little honey, spices and myrrh, nuts and almonds.—It is not easy to ascertain the precise nature of the articles here enumerated, though Scheuchzer seems to have exhausted the subject, in his Physica Sacra. The first article seems to have been a fragrant gum; by spices, the Hebrews meant perfumes; and the nuts, probably Pistachio nuts: the whole were doubtless of the choicest quality, and what might be esteemed rarities in Egypt. See Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 14. God give you mercy.—(Dr. A. Clarke renders this verse: "And God, the All-sufficient, shall give you tender mercies before the man, and send to you your other brother, and Benjamin: and I, as I shall be childless, so I shall be childless;" i. e. I shall submit to this privation, till God shall restore my children to me. He considers this verse as spoken prophetically, and that God, at this time, gave Jacob a supernatural evidence that his children should be restored.)—Bagster. If I am bereaved, &c.—Margin, And "I, as I have been," &c. but the text is preferable, though the words "of my children," seem unnecessarily supplied.

Ver. 18. Seek occasion against us.—Hebrew, "Roll himself upon us;" i. e. overwhelm us. [A metaphor taken from wrestlers; when a man has overthrown his antagonist, he rolls himself upon him, in order to keep him down.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. In the mouth of his sack.—Chardin says, the Hebrew term here used does not mean the sacks in which their corn was stowed, but those used for their baggage. They were made of coarse woollen, and guarded with leather.—Harmer.

Ver. 23. I had your money.—(Heb. your money came to me.—Caspemba batat, "your money comes to me;" as I am the steward, the cash for the corn belongs to me. Ye have no occasion to be apprehensive of any evil; the whole transaction is between myself and you; receive therefore the money as a present from "the God of your father," no matter whose hands he employs to convey it.)—Bagster.

Ver. 27. He asked them of their welfare.—The Hebrews comprised every blessing in peace. The original therefore reads, "He asked them of their peace," and said, "Is there peace to your father?" &c.

Ver. 31. Set on bread.—The word bread is certainly used here, and very generally, in the sense of provisions. So we are taught to pray for "daily bread." In this case, we know the steward was ordered "to kill a killing;" i. e. prepare animal food. Ver. 16.

Ver. 32. For the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews.—The Chaldee version, attributed to Onkelos, explains the reason of this to be, "because the Hebrews eat animals considered as sacred by the Egyptians;" namely, in particular, the cow: hence shepherds, who kept kine, as well as sheep and goats, were an abomination to the Egyptians. See Exod. viii. 26. "The same is the case with the Hindoos, who hold the cow sacred. They see with horror Christian Europeans kill and eat the cow; they therefore consider every vessel or utensil which they use in eating, to be defiled, as if it is touched by an European."—Reports of Danish Missionaries. "Among the Hindoos, (even) different castes will not eat food cooked in the same vessel."—Ward's Hindoos.

Ver. 34. Benjamin's mess was five times as much as any of theirs.—The manner of eating among the ancients was, not for all the company to eat out of one dish, but for every one to have one or more dishes to himself. The whole were set before the master of the feast, and he distributed to every one his portion.—Stachhouse. Sir J. Chardin says, "In Arabia, Persia, &c. the great men of the city are always served by themselves in the feasts made for them, and with greater profusion, their part of each being always double the

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 Joseph's policy to stay his brethren. 14 Judah's supplication to Joseph.

AND he commanded the <sup>a</sup> steward of his house, saying, Fill the men's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his sack's mouth.

2 And put my cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn-money: and he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

3 As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they, and their asses.

4 And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the <sup>b</sup> men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, Wherefore have ye rewarded evil <sup>c</sup> for good?

5 Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed <sup>d</sup> he divineth? ye have done evil in so doing.

6 ¶ And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words.

7 And they said unto him, Wherefore saith my lord these words? God <sup>e</sup> forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing:

8 Behold, the money which we found in our sacks' mouths, we brought again unto <sup>f</sup> thee out of the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?

9 With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, both let <sup>g</sup> him die, and we also will be my lord's bond-men.

10 And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: he with whom it is found shall be my <sup>h</sup> servant; and ye shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack.

and left at the youngest: and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

13 Then they rent their <sup>i</sup> clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

14 ¶ And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house, (for he was yet there:) and they fell before <sup>j</sup> him on the ground.

15 And Joseph said unto them, What deed is this that ye have done? wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly <sup>k</sup> divine?

16 And Judah said, What shall we say unto my lord? what shall <sup>l</sup> we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found <sup>m</sup> out the iniquity of thy servants: behold we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found.

17 And he said, God forbid that I should <sup>n</sup> do so: but the man in whose hand the cup is found, he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up in peace unto your father.

18 ¶ Then Judah came near unto him, and said, O, my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ears, and let not thine anger <sup>o</sup> burn against thy servant: for thou art even as Pharaoh.

19 My lord asked his servants, saying, Have ye a father, or a brother?

21 And thou saidst unto thy servants, Bring him down unto <sup>q</sup> me, that I may set mine eyes upon him.

22 And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father: for if he should leave his father, his father would die.

23 And thou saidst unto thy servants, Ex-another." How should the governor or his steward know this? for if there had been inquiry, there could have been no amazement. And then, again, Benjamin's mess was five times larger than the others, and this was another mystery; but they were all made welcome. They ate and they drank, and, as the margin says, "drank largely," or freely, "and were merry." It does not follow, however, that they drank to excess, or became intoxicated: the expression is parallel to that used relative to the marriage in Cana of Galilee; (John ii. 10.) when, our Lord being present, we may be assured he would not sanction drunkenness. Wine was given to make the heart merry, but not the head mad.

CHAP. XLIV. Ver. 1—34. Joseph's stratagem to detain Benjamin.—Joseph's object, through all this part of his history, is evidently to bring his brethren to deep reflection and contrition; and every circumstance is contrived to suggest the idea, that the justice of God was following them for their former conduct. This so far succeeds, that at length Judah confesses the fact before Joseph, though in language somewhat equivocal: "God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants." What do they mean to confess, the theft of the cup? Certainly not. But there was a worse crime that haunted them, and they could not conceal their anguish.

There is some difficulty about this cup. It is a silver cup, out that is the smallest part of its value; "It is the cup (says the steward) in which my lord drinketh;" nor is that all—"and whereby indeed he divineth." It is certain, that divination by the cup was practised in the East, and particularly in CHAP. XLIV. Ver. 5. Is not this it? &c.—There seems something defective in this part of speech. The LXX. and Syriac supply, "Why have ye stolen my cup, the silver cup? Is it not that?" &c. Geddes and Boothroyd, therefore, both adopt it in their text.—Kennicott's Remarks. Boothroyd's Hebrew Bible and Note.

Supposing this cup to have been used at the feast given to Joseph's brethren, as is very probable, the crime is thereby much enhanced; for it was then a breach of hospitality. The ingenious Editor of Calmet supposes it to be a cup of office. So Bruce says the governor of Tigris had an official cup of gold.—Fragments to Calmet, No. 21. But may we not connect with this the probability that it was a present from Pharaoh, and given him for the purpose of divining, though not so employed by him? This would fully justify the expression. Clemens Alexandrinus speaks of a cup employed in the sacred rites of Egypt; and Lucian rallies them for this practice.—Geddes.

When Norden was at Egypt, in the farthest part of Egypt, a powerful Arab, in a threatening way, told one of their people, whom they had sent to him, that he knew what sort of people they were; that he had consulted his cup, and had found by it that they were those, of whom one of their prophets had said, that Franks would come in disguise, and, passing every where, examine the state of the country, and afterwards bring over a great number of Franks, conquer the country, and exterminate all. It was precisely the same thing that Joseph meant when he talked of "divining by his cup."—Harmer.

Egypt. Christian commentators, however, are unwilling to believe that Joseph was so superstitious; we would rather suppose that he might find it politic to preserve appearances, and inspect his cup, as others did, without any faith in its discoveries; and certain it is, that the words may be so rendered as to exclude all idea of divination.

The stratagem adopted by Joseph was certainly intended to detain Benjamin, as the last and severest trial of his brethren; and the proposal of the steward, knowing, as he did, into whose sack the cup was put, though it has an appearance of candour and equity, had evidently the same design. When Joseph had been sold into Egypt, the ten brethren, though they had not acted unanimously, agreed upon a made-up story to pacify their father, and he means now to try if they will do the same respecting Benjamin: as if he had said, "Let all go but him, and let us see what tale they will now forge to excuse themselves." But they were now in a very different temper, and their hearts were much softened.

Dr. Clarke very justly remarks, that "No paraphrase can heighten the effect of Judah's address to Joseph. To add, would be to diminish its excellence; to attempt to explain, would be to obscure its beauties; to clothe the ideas in other language than that of Judah, and his translators in our Bible, would ruin its energy, and destroy its influence. It is, perhaps, one of the most tender, affecting pieces of natural oratory ever spoken or penned: and we need not wonder to find, that when Joseph heard it he could not refrain himself, but wept aloud. His soul must have been insensible beyond what is common, to human

Compare Gen. xlii. 9. "Ye are spies: to see the nakedness of the land are ye come."

Whereby he divineth.—The margin reads, "Maketh trial;" and again, ver. 15. "Can make trial;" perhaps intimating, that by this cup he meant to try their honesty. But Dr. Boothroyd renders ver. 5. "Is it not that (the cup) in which my lord drinketh, and for which he indeed will make inquiry?" And, ver. 15. "Knew ye not that I should certainly make inquiry?" The Hebrew Nacasch, (whereof the serpent hath his name—see Note on Gen. iii. 1.) signifieth, 1. A diligent observation, trial, or search; Gen. xxx. 27. 1 Kings xx. 33. 2. A too curious search by divination, or soothsaying, which God's law forbiddeth, Deut. xviii. 10.—Leigh's Crit. Sac. The Chaldee, Aben Ezra, Ainsworth, &c. favour the former interpretation; but the LXX., Vulgate, Jerusalem Targum, and others, the latter; and the current of Oriental tradition certainly runs strong that way. [In the East, there is an ancient tradition, that there was a cup which possessed the strange property of representing in it, the whole world, and all the things which were then doing. The cup is called Jamt Jemsheed, "the cup of Jemshed," a very ancient king of Persia; and they say that it was discovered, filled with the elixir of immortality, when digging to lay the foundations of Persepolis. The Persian poets are full of allusions to this cup, which they stile Jam جهان نما, the cup showing of the universe; and to it they ascribe all the prosperity of their ancient monarchs. Many of the Mohammedan princes and governors affects still to have cept your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more.

24 And it came to pass, when we came up unto thy servant my father, we told him the words of my lord.

25 And our father said, Go <sup>a</sup> again, and buy us a little food.

26 And we said, We cannot go <sup>a</sup> down: if our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down; for we may not see the man's face, except our youngest brother be with us.

27 And thy servant my father said unto us, Ye know that my wife bare me <sup>a</sup> two sons:

28 And the one went out from me, and I said, Surely he is <sup>a</sup> torn in pieces; and I saw him not since:

29 And if ye take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

30 Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; seeing that his life is <sup>a</sup> bound up in the lad's life;

31 It shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die: and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave.

32 For thy servant became <sup>a</sup> surety for the lad unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever.

33 Now therefore, I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the <sup>a</sup>lad a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.

nature, had he not immediately yielded to a speech so delicately tender, and so powerfully impressive." We must, however, turn to the next chapter, in order to witness the effects which this speech produced upon the heart of Joseph.

CHAP. XLV. Ver. 1—28. Joseph makes himself known, and sends for his father.—"The close of Judah's speech must have been succeeded by a solemn pause. Every heart is full, but every tongue is silent. The audience, if they understood the language, would be all in tears. The ten brethren, viewing the whole as the righteous judgment of God upon them, would be full of fearful amazement as to the issue. Benjamin would feel both for his dear father and his beloved brother, who had offered to give himself for him! But what saith the judge? How does he stand affected? I have no doubt but that he must have covered his face during the greater part of the time in which Judah had been pleading; and now this will not suffice. The fire burns within him, and it must have vent. 'Cause every man (said he) to depart from me!' and then breaks out into a loud weeping, so that the Egyptians from without heard him. Their minds, no doubt, must be filled with amazement, and desire to know the cause of this strange affair; while the parties within would be still more confounded, to witness such a burst of sorrow from him who, but a while before, was all sternness and severity. But now the mystery is at once revealed, and that in a few words—"I AM JOSEPH! Doth my father yet live?" If they had been struck with an electrical shock, or the most tremendous peal of thunder had instantly been heard over their heads, its effect had been nothing in comparison of that which these words must have produced. They are all struck dumb, and, as it were, petrified with terror. If he had been actually dead, and had risen and appeared to them, they could not have felt greatly different. The flood of thoughts which would at once rush in upon their minds is past description. No words could better express the general effect than those which are used: 'They could not answer him, for they were troubled at his presence.'" information by means of a cup. Now, though it is not probable that Joseph practised divination, yet according to the superstition of those times, supernatural influence might be attributed to his cup; and as the whole transaction was intended to deceive his brethren, he might as well affect divination by the cup as affect that they had stolen it.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XLV. Ver. 1. Joseph could not refrain.—"The word Hitkaphek is very emphatic; it signifies, to force one's self to do something against nature; to do violence to one's self. Joseph could no longer constrain himself to act a feigned part."—Dr. Clarke.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 Joseph maketh himself known to his brethren: 9 he sendeth for his father. 25 Jacob is revived with the news.

THEN Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren.

2 And he <sup>a</sup>wept <sup>b</sup>aloud; and the Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard.

3 And Joseph said unto his brethren, I am Joseph; doth my father yet live? And his brethren could not answer him; for they were <sup>a</sup>troubled <sup>d</sup>at his presence.

4 And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you: and they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, whom ye <sup>a</sup>sold into Egypt.

5 Now therefore be not <sup>f</sup>grieved, nor <sup>g</sup>angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me <sup>b</sup>before you to preserve life.

6 For these two years <sup>i</sup>hath the famine been in the land: and yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be <sup>i</sup>earing nor harvest.

7 And God sent me before <sup>k</sup>you, to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great <sup>i</sup>deliverance.

8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but <sup>m</sup>God: and he hath made me <sup>a</sup>a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

9 Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt; come down unto me, tarry not:

10 And thou shalt dwell in the land of <sup>e</sup>Goshen, and thou shalt be near unto me, thou,

Joseph having thus opened his heart, and disclosed the painful secret that had long struggled in his breast for utterance, now converses freely with his brethren; and finding them deeply affected with grief and self-reproach, endeavours to guard them against being overwhelmed therewith. He saw them truly humbled, but wishes to caution them against despair. "Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves: for God did send me before you to preserve life." Not that they should forget their sin, and abuse the doctrine of Providence; but that they should trace the hand of God in all his dispensations. "So now (said he) it was not you that sent me hither, but God." Yet they were not to comfort themselves, and say, it was a good thing that they had sold their brother into Egypt; for all the good that arose out of it was from God, and to him they must give the praise. Thus is it in the doctrine of the cross. Nothing can be more glorious than the salvation arising from it, no act more criminal than the crucifixion. "Him, (Christ,) being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," saith St. Peter, "ye, by wicked hands, have crucified and slain." (Acts ii. 23.)

The remainder of this chapter is a scene of great activity and bustle. Joseph rouses the energy of his brethren to go and hasten his father to come down into Egypt to reside; and they are no less ready to communicate the glad tidings to their anxious parent, who had doubtless counted the days and hours since their departure, and watched for their return with every rising and setting sun. At length they arrive, Simeon and Benjamin among the rest, and the eyes of the aged Patriarch glisten with joy at their approach; but without giving room for his inquiries, they altogether exclaim, "Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt!"

It is surely no wonder that Jacob's heart fainted, and that he believed them not. What a mass of incredibility is here! "Joseph alive! and did you not bring me his garment stained with blood?" And did I not weep over it and cry, "He is torn, is torn to pieces by a ravenous beast? Joseph the ruler over days according to the vigour of the passion.—Sometimes they cease all at once, and then begin as suddenly, with a greater shrillness and loudness than one could easily imagine.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Nor angry with yourselves.—Hebrew, "Neither let there be anger in your eyes." The Hebrew, Charah properly signifies the heat, or inflammation of the eyes, either from excessive grief or anger. See Exposition of chap. iv. 6. Also Jonah iv. 9.

Ver. 6. Neither earring.—"Earring" is ploughing; from the Anglo-Saxon, Erian.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 7. To preserve you a posterity.—Hebrew, "To put for you a remnant." Our translators give the true sense.

Ver. 8. He hath made me a father unto Pharaoh.—So even in modern times, the Grand Vizier bears that title; and the name of Lala, by which the Sultan generally addresses him, signifies foster-father.—Orient. Lit.

Ver. 10. Land of Goshen.—[Goshen was the most eastern district of Lower and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast:

11 And there will I nourish thee, (for yet there are five years of famine;) lest thou, and thy household, and all that thou hast come to poverty.

12 And behold, your eyes <sup>p</sup> see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is my mouth that speaketh unto you.

13 And ye shall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt, and of all that ye have seen: and ye shall haste, and bring <sup>q</sup> down my father hither.

14 And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck.

15 Moreover, he kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

16 ¶ And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's house, saying, Joseph's brethren are come: and it <sup>r</sup> pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Say unto thy brethren, This do ye; lade your beasts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan;

18 And take your father, and your households, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye shall eat the fat of the land.

19 Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take you wagons out of the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come.

20 Also <sup>s</sup> regard not your stuff; for the good of all the land of Egypt is yours.

21 And the children of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them wagons, according to the commandment of <sup>t</sup> Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way.

22 To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment: but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver, and <sup>u</sup> five changes of raiment.

23 And to his father he sent after this manner; ten <sup>v</sup> asses laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten she-asses laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way.

24 So he sent his brethren away, and they departed: and he said unto them, See that ye fall not out by the way.

25 ¶ And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father, 26 And told him, saying, Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt. And <sup>w</sup> Jacob's heart fainted, for he <sup>x</sup> believed them not.

27 And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them: and when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father <sup>y</sup> revived:

28 And Israel said, It is enough: Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die.

CHAPTER XLVI.

AND Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to <sup>a</sup> Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices unto the <sup>b</sup> God of his father Isaac.

2 And God spake unto <sup>c</sup> Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, <sup>d</sup> Jacob! And he said, Here am I.

3 And he said, I am God, the God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will <sup>e</sup> there make of thee a great nation:

4 I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely bring thee <sup>f</sup> up again: and Joseph shall put his <sup>g</sup> hand upon thine eyes.

5 And Jacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, in the wagons which Pharaoh had <sup>h</sup> sent to carry him.

6 And they took their cattle, and their goods

Egypt! and did you not tell me of his roughness and severity? The dead alive! My gentle Joseph severe and harsh! O, impossible!"

"But here are the wagons; here are the asses laden with provisions, and with all the good things of Egypt; here are the changes of raiment, and the 300 pieces of silver for thy son Benjamin!"

"It is enough," said the good old man; his spirit revived, and he added, "Joseph my son is yet alive: and I will go and see him before I die!"

CHAP. XLVI. Ver. 1—34. Jacob goes down into Egypt.—It is not unnatural, after all, to suppose that Israel had his forebodings and his fears; as an antidote, therefore, the God of his father Isaac appeared to him in a vision of the night, saying, "Fear not to go down into Egypt," &c. The prophecy given to his grandfather, Abraham, might also now probably be presented to his mind; (chap. xv. 13.) "Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them," &c.; and therefore it is here promised, in harmony with the latter part of that prediction, "I will there make of thee a great nation, and I will also surely bring thee up again;" that is, thy posterity—as it was said to Abraham, "afterwards shall they come out with great substance." Rabbi Menachem gives it as a remark of the Hebrew doctors, that "whosoever Israel are in captivity, (or affliction), the presence of God is with them."

When it is added, "He (Joseph) shall lay his hand upon thine eyes," it refers to attending on his last moments, closing his eyes in death, and mourning over him, which we shall find very affectionately fulfilled in the last chapter of this history.

Jacob now cheerfully prosecutes his journey, till he arrives in the land of Goshen, where Joseph meets him, and a scene takes place, that for tenderness and affection has no parallel, except in that between Joseph and his brethren, when he first discovered himself to them. When Jacob first heard that his son Joseph was alive, he said, "It is enough: I will go and see him before I die." He has seen him; and, with Joseph weeping on his neck, he cries, "Now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive." So good old Simeon, with the antitype (Jesus) folded in his arms, exclaims, "Lord, now let thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." (Luke ii. 29, 30.)

On the affecting interview between Jacob and his son Joseph, Bishop Hall has the following excellent observations:—"The height of all earthly contentment appeared in the meeting of these two, whom their mutual loss had more endeared to each other. The intermission of comforts hath this advantage, that it sweetens our delight more in the return than was abated in the forbearance. God doth oftentimes hide away our Joseph for a time, that we may be more joyous and thankful in his recovery. This was the sincerest pleasure that ever Jacob had, which, therefore, God reserved for his old age. And if the meeting of earthly friends be so unspeakably comfortable, how Egypt and the frontier of that country and Arabia, not far from the Arabian gulf, and lying next to Canaan; for Jacob went directly thither when he came into Egypt, from which it was about eighty miles distant, though Hebron was distant from the Egyptian capital about 300 miles. The Septuagint calls it here, "Gesem of Arabia;" which is correct, as the country east of the Nile appears to have been called Arabia, in contradistinction from the western shore, which was referred to Libya.—Bagster.

Ver. 12. It is my mouth that speaketh.—That is, without an interpreter, (which is another man's mouth, Exod. iv. 16.) The Chaldee saith, "In your tongue (Hebrew) I speak with you."—Answorth.

Ver. 16. It pleased Pharaoh.—Hebrew, "It was good in the eyes of Pharaoh." Compare chap. xli. 37.

Ver. 20. Regard not your stuff.—Hebrew, "Let not your eyes spare," or pity your stuff, so as to grieve at leaving it behind. See Ezek. vii. 4, 9.

Ver. 22. To all of them . . . changes of raiment.—"Presenting garments is one of the modes of complimenting persons in the East."—Orient. Lit. It should be seen, from the various instances there cited, that these garments were intended for them to appear at court in, on their return.

Ver. 23. Meat for his father.—[As mason is derived from zoon, to prepare, provide, Dr. A. Clarke thinks it may mean here, prepared meat: some made up dish, delicacies, confections, &c. In Asiatic countries they have several curious methods of preserving flesh by potting, by which it may be kept, for any length of time, sweet and wholesome. Some delicacy, similar to the savoury meat which Isaac loved, may be here intended; sent to Jacob in consideration of his age, and to testify the respect of his son; for of other kinds of meat he could have no need, as he had large flocks and herds, and could kill a lamb, kid, &c. when he pleased.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XLVI. Ver. 4. Put his hand upon thine eyes.—To have a child, or a dear friend, to close our eyes in death, hath been, in all ages and countries, considered as a privilege and a blessing. Among the Jews, Tobias is said to have closed the eyes of his wife's parents.—Tobit xiv. 15. And Maimonides mentions it as a customary rite among the Jews. There are also evidences of it among the Greeks and Romans; according to Homer, Ulysses thus expressed himself on the death of Socus:—

"Ah wretch! no father shall thy corpse compose, Thy dying lips no tender mother close."—Pope.

19 ¶ The sons of Rachel, Jacob's wife; Joseph, and Benjamin.

20 And unto Joseph in the land of Egypt were born <sup>u</sup> Manasseh and Ephraim, which Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah <sup>v</sup> priest of On bare unto him.

happy shall we be in the glorious face of God our heavenly father!—of that of our blessed Redeemer, whom we sold to death by our sins! and who now, after that noble triumph, hath all power given him in heaven and in earth!"

After the above mentioned interview, Joseph returns to prepare for introducing his father and brethren to the king; and he instructs them what to say in answer to any inquiry relative to their occupation, that the king might approve of their settling in the land of Goshen, for he had evidently no wish to make them courtiers, or pensioners on the crown. The reason given for wishing them to settle there was, that "every shepherd was an abomination to the Egyptians." One ground of this has been supposed to be, that prior to this time they had suffered an invasion from a mighty horde of these people, and had been under a dynasty of shepherd-kings, whose memory was execrated among them; but a more obvious one is, that they ate and sacrificed those animals which many of the Egyptians worshipped, but which worship perhaps did not prevail in Goshen.

CHAPTER XLVII.

1 Joseph presented five of his brethren, 7 and his father before Pharaoh: 11 he giveth them habitation and maintenance: 13 he getteth all the Egyptians' money, 16 their cattle, 18 their lands for Pharaoh. 28 Jacob's age.

THEN Joseph came and told <sup>a</sup> Pharaoh, and said, My father and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have, are come out of the land of Canaan; and behold, they are in the <sup>b</sup> land of Goshen.

2 And he took some of his brethren, even five men, <sup>c</sup> and presented them unto Pharaoh.

then: Many conjectures have been exercised as to his choice of the individuals, and it is natural to suppose he selected the most intelligent, and those that were the most able to answer any questions that might be proposed, among whom Judah and Benjamin would certainly be included. It seems, also, from a subsequent expression of Pharaoh, that they were not the most robust and active; for he says, (ver. 6.) "If thou knowest any men of activity among them"—"stout and robust men," says Dr. Clarke—"then make them rulers over my cattle." Their answers agreed with the suggestions of their brother Joseph, and produced, according to his wish, a grant for their settlement in the land of Goshen.

Joseph then introduces his father, Jacob, who gives his blessing to the king, both at his entrance and departure. The first question addressed to an old man naturally respects his years. "How old art thou?" or, as the phrase in the original is, "How many are the days of the years of thy life?" "Jacob, in answer to this simple question," says Fuller, "introduces several important truths, and that without any force or awkwardness. He insinuates to Pharaoh, that he, (Jacob,) and his fathers be-city, after which the land of Goshen was called. The LXX. render it by Heronopolis, "city of Heron;" which by some writers is simply called Heron, and is by the ancient geographers placed in the eastern part of Egypt, not far from the Arabian Gulf.]—Bagster.

Ver. 34. Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians.—Several reasons have been given for this; but the principal seems to have been, that they sacrificed the animals which the Egyptians held sacred. So Tactius complained afterwards of the Jews; "They sacrifice the ram, in order to insult Jupiter Ammon; and the ox, which the Egyptians worship under the name of Apis."—Dr. Clarke. See chap. xlii. 32.

From the fragments of Manetho, preserved in Josephus and Africanus, it appears that Egypt had been invaded by a colony of Nomades, or shepherds descended from Cush. After many wars between them and the Egyptians

3 And Pharaoh said unto his brethren, What <sup>is</sup> your <sup>a</sup> occupation? And they said unto Pharaoh, Thy servants <sup>are</sup> <sup>e</sup> shepherds, both we, and also our fathers.

4 They said moreover unto Pharaoh, For to <sup>f</sup> sojourn in the land are we come: for thy servants have no pasture for their flocks, for the famine <sup>is</sup> sore in the land of Canaan: now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants dwell in the land of Goshen.

5 And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee:

6 The land of Egypt <sup>is</sup> before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell: and if thou knowest <sup>any</sup> men of activity among them, then make them rulers over <sup>e</sup> my cattle.

7 And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and set him before Pharaoh: and Jacob blessed <sup>h</sup> Pharaoh.

8 And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, How <sup>i</sup> old art thou?

9 And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, The days of the years of my pilgrimage <sup>are</sup> a hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and <sup>i</sup> have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage.

10 And Jacob blessed Pharaoh, and went out from before Pharaoh.

fore him, were strangers and pilgrims upon the earth—that their portion was not in this world, but in another—that the life of man, though it extended to a hundred and thirty years, was but as a few days—that those few days were mixed with evil: all which, if the king properly reflected on, it would lead him to set light by the earthly glory with which he was loaded, and to seek a crown which fadeth not away. It is admirable to see how all these sentiments could be suggested in so prudent, so modest, so natural, and so inoffensive a manner."

How far these hints were understood or improved, we cannot say, but they appear to have been taken in good part; and thus much may be said for this Pharaoh, that there is no pagan king mentioned in sacred history, whose character stands so unblemished. It is a great blessing, when those who are not distinguished by extraordinary talents themselves, have yet the good sense to select and employ men so qualified, and to reward them with confidence and honour. Pharaoh's gratitude to Joseph, and courtesy to Jacob, are traits in his character the more to be noticed, as they are seldom to be found in arbitrary princes.

Jacob again blesses Pharaoh and retires. "And Joseph nourished his father and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, according to their families;" or, as the Hebrew is explained in the margin, "according to (the number of) their little ones." And they settled in the land of Goshen, or Rameses.

Ver. 13—31. Joseph's policy, and Jacob's charge.—We are now called to consider Joseph's conduct in a political point of view, as the prime minister of Egypt; and this, in justice to his character, we must recollect, was not a republic, nor a representative government; but an absolute monarchy, with some limitations, which seem to have been chiefly in favour of the clergy. Joseph is charged, however, with too great devotion to his master's interests, and with herein laying the foundation of that miserable and degraded despotism, which we shall have to notice and lament in the following reign. It is true, that the people in their distress surrendered both their property and their privileges; that after having received all their money for corn, he also bought up both their cattle and their lands: but then it should be considered that, by those means, he both saved their lives, and, in the end, improved their property. It has been said, in which some of their principal cities were burned, and great cruelties were committed, they were forced to evacuate the country; but not till they had been in possession of it 900 years.—Bryan's Anal.

CHAP. XLVII. Ver. 6. Any men of activity.—"Stout" or "robust men;" such as were capable of bearing fatigue, and of rendering their authority respectable.—Dr. Clarke.

Rulers over my cattle.—It should seem, notwithstanding the aversion that the Egyptians had to shepherds, they yet kept cattle; partly, perhaps, for sale, and partly for eating privately. So the Gadarenes kept swine. Matt. viii. 30, &c.

Ver. 11. Land of Rameses, as Pharaoh had commanded.—But Pharaoh had commanded (ver. 6) that they should dwell "in the land of Goshen;" Rameses and Goshen, therefore, were the same land.

Ver. 12. According to their families.—Or, "Their little ones." But another marginal note suggests a sense somewhat different; "as a little child is nourished." Ainsworth says the Hebrew will bear this; but the other sense is generally preferred.

11 ¶ And Joseph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land, in the land of Rameses, as <sup>k</sup> Pharaoh had commanded.

12 And Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with <sup>l</sup> bread, according to their families.

13 ¶ And <sup>m</sup> there was no bread in all the land: for the famine <sup>was</sup> very sore, so that the land of Egypt, and all the land of Canaan, fainted by reason of the famine.

14 And Joseph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought: and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

15 And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph, and said, Give us bread: for why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

16 And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail.

17 And they brought their cattle unto Joseph: and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses; and he <sup>n</sup> fed them with bread for all their cattle for that year.

18 When that year was ended, they came unto him the second year, and said unto him, he should have given them corn; but in indiscriminate donations there is always much waste and much abuse. Whether he might not have sold the corn on easier terms, we have now no means of determining; but when he, in the close of the famine, returns them four-fifths of all their property, reserving only one-fifth, in lieu of all taxes, and perhaps personal service, they appear to have been decidedly gainers. For we know that, in arbitrary countries, even now, the king considers himself as having a right, not only to all the property of his subjects, but to their personal service; and even to claim their daughters for his harem at his pleasure: a proof of which we have in the conduct of a preceding Pharaoh, who had taken Sarah into his harem, under the supposition of her being unmarried, and that therefore he had a right to take her. (Gen. xii. 14—20.) But now these claims seem to have been all sunk into one; and for an increase of land-tax from ten to twenty per cent., they appear to have enjoyed an exemption from all other duties: and, at the same time, as a boon, seed is now freely given them to sow all their lands, which was perfectly useless while the dearth continued. In buying up the cattle, it should be considered also, that he not only saved their lives, but preserved them in good condition, being fed from the king's granaries; whereas, had he not bought them, if not quite starved to death, they would probably have been all in the condition of Pharaoh's lean kine. The removal of the people from one end of Egypt to the other, is a measure that at first view seems harsh and arbitrary; but if it were only when the granaries of one city were exhausted, to receive food in others, it was for their own advantage. It appears also to have been only a temporary measure, till their lands should be restored, when they were ordered to cultivate and sow them.

That he did not purchase the land of the priests, seems to have been owing to the moderation and benevolence of the king, who allowed them a gratuitous supply. Whether this were right or wrong, Joseph appears to have had no concern in it; it was the act of the sovereign, and it certainly did not become him to oppose it.

In the close of this chapter, Jacob, apprehending the time at hand for his departure to another and better world, sends for Joseph, and binds him by an oath, (similar to that which Abraham exacted from his steward, chap. xxiv. ver. 2 and 3.) that adopted, both for the preservation of the people, and of the cattle. As the people had not grain for their own sustenance, consequently they could have none for their cattle; hence they were in the most imminent danger of starving; and the people also were in equal danger; as they must have divided a portion of that bought for themselves with the cattle, which, for the sake of tillage, &c. they wished of course to preserve till the seven years' famine should end. The cattle being bought by Joseph, were supported at the royal expense, and very likely returned to the people at the end of the famine; for how else could they cultivate their ground, transport their merchandise, &c. &c. 1 For this part of Joseph's conduct, he certainly deserves high praise, and no censure. — Bagster.

Ver. 17. Feed them.—Margin, "Lead them;" and the Hebrew word means, to tend a flock. Hence the LXX. render it "nourished," and the Vulgate, "sustained." To lead and to feed a flock, is in fact the same thing. See Parkhurst.

Ver. 18. The second year.—Not of the famine, but after they had sold their cattle, &c. and the last year of the famine; for now he gave them seed-corn to sow.—Dr. Clarke.

We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle: there is not ought left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies and our lands:

19 Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: and give us seed, that we may live, and not die, that the land be not desolate.

20 And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

21 And as for the people, he removed them to cities from one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof.

22 Only the land of the priests bought he not; for the priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them; wherefore they sold not their lands.

23 Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

24 And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones.

25 And they said, Thou hast saved our lives: let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

26 And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; except the land of the priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

27 ¶ And Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and grew, and multiplied exceedingly.

28 And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years: so the whole age of Jacob was a hundred forty and seven years.

29 And the time drew nigh that Israel must die: and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me: bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt:

30 But I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place. And he said, I will do as thou hast said.

31 And he said, Swear unto me: and he swore unto him. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 Joseph with his sons visiteth his sick father. 3 Jacob repenteth the promise: 9 he bleseth Ephraim and Manasseh: 21 he propheseth their return to Canaan.

AND it came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, thy father is sick: and he took with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim.

2 ¶ And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.

3 And Jacob said unto Joseph, God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me,

4 And said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession.

5 And now, thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine: as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.

6 And thy issue, which thou begetteth after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance.

7 And as for me, when I came from Padan, Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan, in the way, when yet there was but a little he should carry him down into Canaan to be buried with his father; and then bowing himself, while he sat upon his bed, and at the same time leaning on his staff, silently worshipped that God who had now fulfilled "all the mercy and truth" which he spake unto him.

CHAP. XLVIII. Ver. 1—22. Joseph visits Jacob with his two sons, whom Jacob blesses.—It was during the same illness, if not at the same visit, when Jacob exacted from his son Joseph a promise to bury him in Canaan, that the latter brought his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim, to receive his blessing. Before he gives this, however, Jacob recurs to a circumstance which he always appears to mention with peculiar pleasure; namely, the vision with which he was favoured at Luz, which is Beth-el. (Chap. xxviii. 19. xxxv. 6, &c.) And now he intimates his determination of transferring the birthright, which Reuben had forfeited by his crime, (1 Chron. v. 1.) to Joseph and his sons: "Even as Reuben and Simeon (his two eldest sons) they shall be mine." But before we come to the blessing itself, there is something peculiarly affecting in the retrospective view which Jacob takes of the dealings of Providence with him, and with his fathers: "God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day." It is like a traveller in the wilderness, who having climbed many hills, and forded many rivers, now looks back on his labours and his dangers with gratitude to God, and exclaims with the prophet, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped me." But Israel traces back these blessings to the days of his fathers, Abraham and Isaac; and refers always with perfect satisfaction to the covenant made with them, and ratified repeatedly to himself, through which all his blessings were to flow to his posterity. But he adds, may "the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads!" Yes, Jacob had seen many evils, as he said to Pharaoh, "Few and evil have been the days of thy servant;" but there was an angel that attended him through all his trials—the angel that redeemed him from all evil—the angel of Beth-el, with whom he wrestled and made supplication—the angel of the everlasting covenant; May he "bless the lads!" It is our mercy, as Christians, that this angel, who hath now assumed a nearer relation and a brighter form—as "God manifested in the flesh"—as he hath redeemed our souls by the price of his blood, so is he ever present to rescue us from temporal evils, or else to make them "work together for our good."

And he said, "In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh." This greatly displeased their father Joseph, especially as Jacob crossed his hands, to lay his right upon Ephraim, and his left upon Manasseh, contrary to the position in which they had been placed. Joseph, therefore, informed him that Manasseh was the eldest, supposing he might have mistaken them; but the venerable patriarch replied, "I know it, my son, Ver. 19. Bury us and our land.—It appears from this, that the Egyptians considered themselves hitherto as free, though they now offered to submit to slavery. The following is found among the Gentoo (or Hindoo) laws: "Whoever, having received his victuals from a person during the time of a famine, hath become his slave upon giving to his provider whatever he received from him, and also two head of cattle, may become free from his servitude."—Orient. Cust.

Ver. 21. As for the people, he removed them.—Ainsworth says this was "to change their right, and to translate the property of the land to Pharaoh;" but the Samaritan, LXX., and Vulgate say, "he subjected the people to him [Pharaoh] for servants;" which Dr. Boothroyd thinks preferable, though it is not supported by MSS.

Ver. 22. Priests.—The word sometimes means princes, (as in the margin), but certainly not in this chapter.

Ver. 23. I have bought you.—The accounts which Diodorus Siculus gives, he said to corroborate this statement; but the fact is they prove a great degeneracy; for, according to him, the land was divided into three parts; one belonged to the priests, with which they provided all sacrifices, and manu-ained all the ministers of religion. A second part was the king's, to support his court and his family, and the expenses of war. The remainder of the land belonged to the people, who appear to have been all soldiers, liable, at the king's expense, to serve in all wars. See Orient. Lit.

Ver. 31. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.—It is not very obvious what can be meant by the head of a bed, which consisted only of a mat, or a cushion, (for they had no bedsteads,) but the same word, read without the points, means a staff, which has generally a head. So the LXX. understood it, whom the apostle literally quotes, Heb. xi. 21. "Jacob . . . worshipped (leaning) upon the top of his staff." Ainsworth admits that the LXX. used a copy without points; which, indeed, are comparatively modern. See Ainsworth, Clarke, and Kennicott's Rem.

CHAP. XLVIII. Ver. 2. And Israel strengthened himself, and sat upon his bed.—How should a feeble old man strengthen himself to sit up on his bed so effectually as by the use of a staff. This explains, therefore, the close of the preceding chapter; and we have often seen age and weakness thus supported, better than by down pillows: of which, certainly, Jacob never dreamed way to come unto Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Beth-lehem.

8 And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these?

9 And Joseph said unto his father, They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will bless them.

10 (Now the eyes of Israel were dim for age, so that he could not see:.) And he brought them near unto him; and he kissed them, and embraced them.

11 And Israel said unto Joseph, I had not thought to see thy face: and lo, God hath showed me also thy seed.

12 And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himself with his face to the earth.

13 And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand towards Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him.

14 And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the first-born.

15 ¶ And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, 16 The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac: and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth.

17 And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head.

18 And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father: for this is the first-born; put thy right hand upon his head.

19 And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.

20 And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

21 And Israel said unto Joseph, Behold, I die; but God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers.

22 Moreover I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 Jacob calleth his sons to bless them. 3 Their blessing in particular: 29 he charges them about his burial: 33 he dieth.

AND Jacob called unto his sons, and said Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days.

2 Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken unto Israel your father.

3 ¶ Reuben, thou art my first-born, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power:

4 Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel; because thou wentest up to thy father's bed; then defiledst thou it: he went up to my couch.

5 ¶ Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.

6 O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united: for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall.

7 Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce;

I know it: he shall be great, but his younger brother greater." Fuller here remarks, with his usual point, "God is as immutable as he is sovereign. It does not become us to contend with him; and it is to the honour of Joseph, that as soon as he perceived his father knew what he did, believing him to be directed from above, he acquiesced."

As a sort of appendage to this blessing of Joseph's sons, Israel subjoins, with the greatest calmness, "Behold, I die;" and shall not witness the blessings I am enabled to predict; "but God shall be with you, and bring you again into the land of your fathers. Moreover, I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow." This is supposed to refer to the parcel of land which Jacob bought of Shechem, which the Amorites might have taken possession of, and to recover which Israel was compelled to have recourse to arms. This, however is all conjecture; but events are sometimes alluded to in the Scriptures, as in other histories, that are not expressl recorded and which, therefore, cannot be now distinctly traced. Thus much is certain, that a parcel of ground near Shechem, which Jacob bought of the Hivites, fell to the lot of Joseph, and that there his bones were finally deposited; and this is more distinctly alluded to in the close of the chapter following. See also Josh. xxiv. 32.

CHAP. XLIX. Ver. 1-12. Jacob blesses the tribes of Israel. (See plate of the standards of the twelve tribes, p. 126.)—In this very interesting and important chapter, we behold the venerable patriarch, Israel, at the age of 147 years, raising himself in bed, Ver. 10. His eyes were dim.—Hebrew, "heavy," so "that he could not see clearly," or distinctly. Compare verse 11.

Ver. 12. From between his knees.—That is, Israel's, says Dr. Boothroyd. In verse eighth they were brought near to Israel, who kissed and embraced them, probably between his knees, being unable to support them on them. Joseph, therefore, drew them out to place them before his father as he wished, to receive the patriarchal blessing, the elder toward his right hand. And he bowed himself.—Joseph thus showed, that his external greatness did not render him forgetful of the respect due to his father, or of that veneration to which his age and piety entitled him. The Egyptians, among whom he lived, according to Herodotus, were particularly remarkable for the reverence they paid to old age: "for if a young person meet his senior, he instantly turns aside to make way for him; if an aged person enter an apartment, the youth always rise from their seats;" and Savary observes, that the same reverence is yet paid to old age, on every occasion, in Egypt. Among the ancient Romans, it was considered a crime, worthy of death, not to rise up in the presence of an aged person; and acting a contrary part was deemed an awful mark of the deep degeneracy of the times.—See Juvenal, Sat. 1.—Bagster. The Samaritan and LXX. make the lads bow, not Joseph.

Ver. 16. The angel which redeemed me.—Here is an evident reference to chap. xxxii. 24.—28. Compare Psalm xxiv. 22.—And let them grow into a multitude.—Hebrew, "Increase like fishes," the most prolific of all creatures. See Note on chap. i. 21.

Ver. 21. Behold, I die, but God shall be with you.—So said Joseph, chap. i. 24. Similar said Christ, John xvi. 7.—Edwards.

Ver. 22. One portion.—The Hebrew for "portion," is Shechem, (literally "a shoulder,") which strengthens the allusion above mentioned, but cannot refer to the capture of the place by Jacob's sons, because that was totally disavowed and condemned by him. See chap. xlix. 6, 7.

CHAP. XLIX. Ver. 2. Harken unto Israel.—We have above adverted to picture writing and hieroglyphics. The most remarkable specimens of the former now known are in the exhibition of ancient Mexico, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. They announce to the emperor Montezuma the arrival of the Spaniards in South America. The various rivers they crossed are represented in blue stripes, and the routes of the different armies, by the marks of footsteps, in a manner approaching to hieroglyphics.—The following inscription, from the celebrated Temple of Minerva at Sais, in Egypt, is here given, to illustrate the use of hieroglyphics. An infant, an old man, a hawk, a fish, and a river horse, are drawn to represent the following moral sentences: "All who come into the world, or go out of it, know this, that the gods hate impudence." On hieroglyphics, see the article in Ency. Brit.; Warburton's Divine Legation; Pococke's Travels in Egypt.

Ver. 4. Unstable as water.—Rather, unconfurable; overflowing as a river, or a boiling spring; see Symmachus and the Vulgate. But the allusion may be more probably, to the Nile.—He went up to my couch.—A poetical repetition. The marginal reading, "My couch is gone," seems unintelligible. Dr. Boothroyd reads, "Ascending my couch, then wast thou degraded." Dr. Durell, "Thus by going up thou didst defile my bed." The Great Mogul disinherited his own son for the same crime, and appointed his grandson to succeed him.—Sir T. Roe's Embassy.

Ver. 5. Instruments of cruelty.—Margin, "Their swords were weapons of violence." So are all swords; the word signifies rage, fury, burning in the mind. Pagninus renders it to the sense, arma iniquitatis, weapons of wickedness. Dr. Durell reads, "They have executed their violent stratagems." Boothroyd, "They accomplished their violent schemes." So Samaritan LXX., Onkelos.

Ver. 6. In anger they digged down a wall.—It is very doubtful whether Shechem was a walled town; and the same word (with a slight variation) means a prince; and so Kennicott, Clarke, Boothroyd, and all the modern commentators, understand it; namely, Shechem. A marginal note says, "they houghed oxen;" but this is weakly supported, and unnatural.

Ver. 7. I will divide them.—The Jerusalem Targum adds, and the Jews generally believe, that the Simeonites were afterwards obliged to seek their living as schoolmasters, scattered among the other tribes, like the Levites.

and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will "divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.

8 ¶ Judah, "thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise; thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee.

9 Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion: who shall rouse him up?

10 The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until and, probably supported by his favourite staff, with which he had "passed over Jordan." Animated by the spirit of prophecy, he calls his sons around him, to hear their future destiny. "Gather yourselves together, (said he,) that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last or latter days"—the days of their posterity. The descriptive part of it, it is true, refers to the sons of Jacob, as individuals, and in several instances, severely reproves their follies and their crimes; but the prophetic part refers wholly to their tribes and families—to their settlement in Canaan, and to their subsequent circumstances, till the coming of Messiah; but their character and their fate are chiefly described in hieroglyphic characters.

In order to understand these, it is necessary to premise, that the first method of writing was probably what is called picture-writing, as is shown by the learned Warburton. In the next stage of improvement, natural objects were employed to represent characters and qualities of the human mind. These are called hieroglyphics, or sacred characters, in the use of which the priests of Egypt were particularly famous. The Egyptian hieroglyphics were borrowed from birds, animals, plants, parts of the human body, and a great variety of other objects. Thus, a hawk was the emblem of speed; the lion, of strength and fortitude; the crocodile, of malice; the human eye, of knowledge, &c. The eye, with a sceptre, represented a king, or a deity; for, among the heathen, their kings were generally supposed to be divine. This may serve as a key to the prophetic imagery now before us, and which we must cursorily review.

REUBEN. "Behold a son!" As he was the first-born we might expect to see in him the marks of peculiar excellence and power; but, alas! he lost his birthright by his licentiousness; "Thou shalt not excel, because thou wentest up to thy father's bed." He is, therefore, compared to water, not merely for his instability, but for his unrestrained licentiousness. "Impetuous as a deluge or a cataract," or, as Jacob, being in Egypt, might naturally allude to it, the overflowing of the Nile. The tribe of Reuben never excelled, either in numbers or in fame.

SIMEON and LEVI (united) are brethren, and as they were confederate in crimes, so they are coupled in disgrace. "Their swords are weapons of iniquity," being most unjustly and treacherously employed; for "in their rage they slew a man, (Hamor) and in their self-will they destroyed a prince, (Shechem.) Therefore," says the patriarch, in the language of a prophet, "I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel." Simeon had a very contracted portion, on the outside of Judah's, between the Philistines and Amalekites: and the tribe of Levi (of which were the priests) was scattered through the country.

The name of JUDAH signifies "praise;" and there is nothing said of him but to his advantage. A lion is the established emblem of strength and valour, and Judah is compared to a lion's whelp, or a young lion, for those properties; and to a lioness giving suck, as still more bold and fierce. A lion is said to have been the standard of Judah; and the city of David was called Ariel, "The Lion of God." The military "fame of David" is well known, and "went into all lands; and the Lord brought the fear of him upon all nations." (1 Chron. xiv. 17.) "But a greater than David is here, even the lion of the tribe of Judah." (Rev. v. 5. Isa. ix. 6.)

Of him it is said, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the lawgiver (or rather the judge's staff) from between his feet, until Shiloh come." The obvious meaning is, that the government of the Jews, who, after the captivity, were almost wholly of the tribe of Judah, should not be dissolved until SHILOH should appear. The import of Shiloh has, indeed, been much disputed; but the two following seem the best founded expositions, and may well be united, as they are in the character of our Saviour:—1. The Septuagint version reads, "He whose it is;" that is, the sceptre, by divine right and promise. 2. The

Ver. 8. Thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies.—Compare Psalm xviii. 40. Fulfilled, Judges, chap. 1.

Ver. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp.—A lion, we remark, is the well known hieroglyphic for strength and valour; hence Ali, Mahomet's son-in-law, was named "the Lion of God;" and Richard I., Cœur de Lion, lion-hearted. The writer thinks he perceives here a gradation not noticed by any of the critics. Judah is a lion's whelp, or cub, and as such, has been used to devour in the den the prey provided by the parent lion; now he goes up into the mountain, and preys for himself; he couched as a lion or lioness, to lie in wait—and "who shall rouse him?" It shall be at his peril. This describes the growing strength and importance of the tribe. See Jer. xlix. 19. Nahum ii. 11, 12.

Ver. 10. The sceptre . . . nor a lawgiver.—The first word, Shebet, is doubtless a short staff, and the other, no less clearly, a long one. The former was the staff of the tribe, (1 Sam. x. 19, 20. in the Heb.) and perhaps not very giver, or Prince of Peace: both these characters united in our Messias, soon after whose appearance the Jews were brought completely under foreign power, and Judea made a Roman province; by whose death their whole dispensation was virtually destroyed, and soon after their city also, and their nation dispersed throughout all the world, unto the present day. Thus exactly was the prediction accomplished 1700 years after it was delivered.

The second part of this prophecy is no less beautiful, and was no less remarkably fulfilled. "Binding his foal unto the vine, and his colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes." This verse resembles the prophecy of Zachariah: (ch. ix. 9.) "Behold, thy king cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of a ass." And we may find both fulfilled in the narrative of our Lord riding into Jerusalem. (Matt. xx. Mark xi. and Luke xix. 29.) There, we are told, was an ass and a colt tied in a village, and it is as likely it might be to a vine as any other tree; and upon these he entered in humble triumph into the city, before his passion. The reference to the abundance of wine, seems to require a more metaphorical interpretation, and is very parallel to the opening of the 63d chapter of Isaiah. "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?" &c.

"I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. I have trodden the wine-press alone," &c. All these passages evidently relate to one person—a king "meek, and having salvation" for his people; a conqueror mighty, and taking vengeance on his enemies. Whether this refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, or some subsequent event, it is not here necessary to inquire. (See Rev. xiv. 20. xix. 13.)

The prophecy of Shiloh is thus explained by the Chaldee paraphrast: "He that hath dominion shall not be taken away from Judah, nor a scribe from his children's children, until Messias come, whose the kingdom is, and him shall the people obey." The Jerusalem Targum, the Bereshith Rabba, and David Kimchi, make the like application of this passage to the Messias. "To him shall the gathering of the people be," both Jews and Gentiles. Of the first-fruits there was a considerable gathering in the Apostolic and succeeding ages to the present; and we hope the signs of the times indicate that the general harvest is fast approaching.

Ver. 13—33. Jacob blesses the other tribes, and dies.—OF ZEBULUN, whose name signifies "dwelling," it is merely predicted that he should enjoy a maritime situation, and, accordingly, his borders extended to the Mediterranean westward, and on the east to the sea of Galilee, (Joshua xix. 10—16.) This tribe was, therefore, chiefly employed in fishing and in commerce.

ISSACHAR is represented as a strong ass, couching under two panniers. His lot was in a valley between two hills, and his sons were hardy agriculturists; and when engaged in their national wars, like the war ass of Mesopotamia, they neither fled nor flinched; yet they loved peace, and were content under their troubles, rather than go to war. The name implies "wages," or reward, which seems to have been their leading object. Josh. xix. 17—23.

The tribe of DAN appears to be distinguished by intellect, but not of the most honourable character; the cunning of the serpent, without the innocence of the dove. "Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel;" but by judging here, we are not to understand the grave office of presiding in a court of judicature; but rather that of vindicating the rights of his tribe and nation, and repelling the aggression of their neighbours; this we shall find abundantly exemplified in the history of the Judges; and particularly in the history of Samson, who was of this tribe, and who practised a variety of stratagems to annoy different from what Achilles, the chief of a Greek tribe, bore, or the baton of a modern general. The other word, (Chakak) which, it is now agreed, means also a staff, (for they had no lawgiver after Moses), and probably with an iron point at bottom, to rest between the feet: for it appears, these staves were sometimes used to dig out wells: see Numb. xxi. 18. which might be read, "The princes—the nobles—dugged it out with their legislative staves," or, more properly, the staves of the magistrates, or judges; which might, for aught we know, be both as long and as strong as the staves of our constables. The sceptre and the staff, therefore, here represent the civil and judicial power, and form a parallelism, as usual, in the Hebrew poetry.

The late ingenious Editor of Calmet suggests, that this word may mean a pen; an iron one, most likely, to write in lead, or a chalky rock; Job xix. 23. and therefore represented the teacher, or scribe, as well as king of Israel. —Fragments, Nos. 223, 333, 334. For a full exposition of this important prophecy, see Ep. Newton, Dissert. iv.

the Philistines; and in the conduct of the Danites, as recorded in the 18th chapter of that book.

Here we may well conceive the aged patriarch to make a pause: exhausted with fatigue, and perhaps overwhelmed with the scenes passing before his prophetic eye, he cries, "I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord!" As if he had said, "Behold thy waiting servant; when shall I enter into rest?"

After a short pause, in which he a little recovers his strength, he then proceeds;—"GAD, is a troop; a troop shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last;" that is, he shall suffer in many skirmishes, but finally prove victorious. (See 1 Chron. v. 18.) The original must be confessed to be obscure, nor do the conjectures offered by the learned seem more intelligible.

ASHER, means happy, and happy was his lot, consisting of the most luxuriant corn-fields and pastures; "out of" one were produced the finest of the wheat, and the other nourished the choicest of the flocks, which things, in those days of primitive simplicity, were accounted royal dainties: so Pharaoh's baker prepared "baked meats" for his royal master. (Gen. xl. 17.)

NAPHTALI, means "wrestling" or entwining, as wrestlers do their limbs. (See chap. xxx. 8.) But there is some doubt whether the hieroglyphic be taken from the animal or vegetable world; whether Naphtali be compared to a stag, with beautiful branching antlers, or to a tree with wide spreading branches, (for so the Hebrew term rendered words should certainly be rendered.) Either way, the blessing indicates that his territory should be in an open, champaign, fruitful country, and that his posterity should be numerous. (Josh. xix. 32—39.)

JOSEPH (adding) furnishes another subject on which the patriarch seems to delight to enlarge; and he is compared, not to a bough, but to the branch of a fruitful vine, growing near a spring, and spreading over a wall to a considerable extent. Then he is compared to an archer, shot at by many archers, that is, by his brethren, who made him their butt and aim for several years; but he was strengthened and supported by the God of Jacob.

The blessings pronounced on Joseph's tribe, or rather two tribes, (Ephraim and Manasseh,) are "the blessings of heaven," "rain and dew;"—"of the deep, "springs of water;"—"of the breasts and of the womb, a numerous posterity." The posterity of Joseph, including the two tribes, amounted, at the first census taken, to 72,700 men of war. (Num. i. 33, 35.) To these are added, the blessings of his progenitors to the utmost boundary of the everlasting hills. This is highly poetical, as, indeed, is this whole chapter, and seems an accumulation of blessings; combining every blessing, every privilege, every honour, every enjoyment, to form a crown upon the head of Jacob's favourite and highly favoured son, Joseph.

BENJAMIN is the last, as he was the youngest, on whom a blessing was pronounced; and here also are considerable difficulties. The hieroglyphic is a wolf—a ravening wolf, which, it appears strange, should form the character of Jacob's second darling. Indeed, it seems not to have been the character of Benjamin himself, but certainly too well suits his tribe. (See Judges, chap. xx.) Of him it is said, "In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil." The wolf is a creature remarkably voracious; they sometimes hunt in companies. Buffon says, that a wolf, when he cannot himself secure the spoil, "is content to share it with his associate." They prey only in the night, but if they succeed, will gluttonize till the morning. (Taylor's Expos. Index.) This tribe furnished the first king to Israel, in the person of Saul; and, in the evening of the Jewish dispensation, Mordecai and Esther were of this tribe. These are the twelve tribes of Israel, and thus their father blessed them.

In conclusion, we beg to offer two or three general observations. 1. That the various difficulties of this chapter arise from its high antiquity, its symbolical language, and its poetical forms. 2. That some farther light will be thrown on this portion of sacred writ, when we come to consider the blessings pronounced

The daughters (branches) shoot over the wall.
They sorely afflicted and grieved him;
The chief archers had him in hatred!

But his bow remained in strength, &c.

Such is the beautiful and poetic form of the whole chapter, and we regret we have not room to give it all in the same way. In the Hebrew idiom, every inventor is the father of such invention; (see Notes on Gen. iv. 21, 22.) so here, those supposed to excel in archery, "the chief archers," are in the Hebrew, "lords (or masters) of the bow."

Ver. 24. From thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel.—There is some doubt whether these words are to be referred to the Almighty, or to Joseph: if to the latter, they describe him as the Shepherd of Jacob's family, and the foundation of the nation of Israel, and so an eminent type of Christ. But modern commentators refer them to the Almighty himself, who is the Shepherd and the Rock of Israel. (Psal. lxxx. l. xxxi. 2.) So Dr. Clarke translates the words, "By the hand of the mighty one of Jacob;

By the name of the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel."

Ver. 28. These are the twelve tribes.—The similarity of some of these emblems to the signs of the Zodiac, has been shown by Dr. Clarke; particularly Reuben and Aquarius; Simeon and Levi and the Gemini; Judah and Leo; Asher and Virgo; Dan and Scorpio; Joseph and Sagittarius. Some have hence argued, that the sacred writer borrowed those images from astronomy; but is it not far more likely that astronomers have taken them from hence? Have we any writings of equal antiquity with those of Moses? Have we any Zodiac as ancient as the days of Jacob?

Ver. 15. He became a servant unto tribute.—"They had no great inclination to go to war, and were therefore frequently infested, and subjected by strangers, especially in the time of the judges."—Stackhouse.

Ver. 17. An adder in the path.—Margin, "An arrow-snake." The serpent here referred to is probably the Cerastes, or horned snake; it is small, but fatal in its poison, lies in wait for passengers in the sand, or the ruts of wheels, and bites the heels of horses. The Orientals call it, "the liar in ambush."

Ver. 21. Which giveth goodly words.—agrees neither with the character of a stag, nor of a tree: but branches, which is now admitted to be the proper use of the term, will agree with either. See Parish in Amar. For the father, a tree, (the oak, or rather the terebinth, or turpentine-tree,) we have the authority of the LXX. of Bochart, Houbigant, Durel, Dathe, Michaelis, Gædæ, Clarke, Boothroyd. The Editor of Calmet, however, (in his Natural History,) has laboured, with much ingenuity, to support the former version of a hind; but unluckily the Hebrew is feminine, and the female deer have no horns. Mr. T. notwithstanding, thinks it may include both sexes; but of this he gives no instances. The meaning as to Naphtali, is the same; he inhabited an open champaign country, where the deer roamed at liberty, and the tree spread wide its branches.

Ver. 22. Joseph is a fruitful bough.—Dr. Clarke supposes Jacob to be the vine, Joseph the son, or branch, and his posterity the daughters of that branch, or the smaller branches. Thus he renders it:

"The son of a fruitful (vine) is Joseph;
"The son of a fruitful (vine) by a fountain."

CHAPTER L.

1 The mourning for Jacob: 7 the funeral. 15 Joseph comforteth his brethren, who craved his pardon: 21 he prophesieth of their return: 26 he died.

AND Joseph fell upon his father's face, and wept upon him, and kissed him.

2 And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to <sup>a</sup>embalm his father: and the physicians embalmed Israel.

3 And forty days were fulfilled for him; for so are fulfilled the days of those which are embalmed: and the <sup>b</sup>Egyptians mourned for him <sup>c</sup>threescore and ten days.

4 And when the days of his mourning were past, Joseph spake unto the house of Pharaoh, saying, If now I have found grace in your eyes, speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying,

5 My father made me <sup>d</sup>swear, saying, Lo, I die: in my grave which <sup>e</sup>I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me. Now therefore let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again.

6 And Pharaoh said, Go up, and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear.

7 ¶ And Joseph went up to bury his father: and with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt,

8 And all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house: only their little <sup>f</sup>ones, and their flocks and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen.

9 And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen: and it was a very great company.

10 And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, which <sup>is</sup> beyond Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: and he made a <sup>g</sup>mourning for his father seven days.

by Moses, in the close of his life, which we have purposely avoided anticipating. 3. That the high regard of the ancients to emblems of this kind, may be seen in their application of the like images, astronomically, to the signs of the zodiac, in which they might possibly have some allusion to these prophetic images.

The chapter closes with the death of Jacob; after charging his son not to bury him in Egypt, but in the cave of Machpelah, in Canaan, thereby expressing his faith in the promise of that land to his posterity. At length the good old patriarch "yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his fathers." (See chap. xxv. 8.)

CHAP. L. Ver. 1—26. The funeral of Jacob and death of Joseph.—Jacob was buried with all the honours of an Egyptian prince; being first embalmed, and then carried in solemn funeral procession, attended by Joseph, the governor, with his brethren; Pharaoh's servants, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt, with chariots and horsemen, a very great company. And as the procession was very splendid, so the "lamentation was very sore," inasmuch that the inhabitants named the place where they stopped Abel-Mizraim, "the mourning of the Egyptians," as they naturally supposed the mourners to be, seeing among them Pharaoh's chariots and horsemen, and the elders of Egypt, who were sent, no doubt, out of respect to Joseph.

After the funeral, they all returned to Egypt; and his brethren said among themselves, "Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him." This suspicion, arising from a guilty conscience, had CHAP. L. Ver. 2, 3. And Joseph commanded . . . to embalm his father.—By this it appears that embalming was the office of the physicians, which, in Egypt, were very numerous. The process, according to Herodotus and Diodorus, (Greek historians,) was as follows: "The time of mourning was while the body lay with the embalmers; seventy days. During (the first part of) this time, the body lay in nitre, the use of which was, to dry up all superfluous moisture; and when, in the compass of thirty days, this was reasonably well effected, the remaining forty were employed in anointing it with gums and spices, to preserve it, which was the proper embalming. The former circumstance explains the reason why 'the Egyptians mourned for Israel threescore and ten days;' the latter, the meaning of the 'forty days' that were fulfilled for Israel, being the days of those who were embalmed."—Warburton's Divine Legation.

Ver. 4. Joseph spake unto the house of Pharaoh.—"Joseph could not approach Pharaoh himself, on account of the death of his father."—Boothroyd.

Ver. 5. Which I have digged.—It is probable that Jacob had dug a grave for himself in the vast cave of Machpelah, which he had purchased.—Boothroyd.

Ver. 10. A very great and sore lamentation.—This is exactly the genius of 11 And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This <sup>is</sup> a grievous mourning to the Egyptians; wherefore the name of it was called <sup>h</sup>Abel-Mizraim, which <sup>is</sup> beyond Jordan.

12 And his sons did unto him according as he <sup>i</sup>commanded them:

13 For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham <sup>j</sup>bought with the field for a possession of a burying-place of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre.

14 ¶ And Joseph returned into Egypt, he and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father.

15 ¶ And when Joseph's brethren saw that their <sup>k</sup>father was dead, they said, Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him.

16 And <sup>l</sup>they sent a messenger unto Joseph, saying, Thy father did command before he died, saying, 17 So shall ye say unto Joseph, Forgive, I pray <sup>m</sup>thee now, the trespass of thy brethren, and their sin; for they did unto thee evil: and now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy father. And Joseph wept when they spake unto him.

18 And his brethren also went and fell down before his face: and they said, Behold, we <sup>be</sup>thy servants.

19 And Joseph said unto them, Fear not: for <sup>am</sup>I in the "place of God?"

been probably suggested to Jacob before his death, and he had "commanded them" to express their contrition, and implore forgiveness; not from any suspicion on his part of Joseph's reconciliation, but as a duty which they owed him for his kindness. An assurance of forgiveness should in no case repress our expressions of penitence, or lower our confessions of guilt, but rather the contrary. "The goodness of God" should always "lead us to repentance." (Rom. ii. 4.)

Their fears, and renewed submission, were first expressed by a messenger; and afterwards in a personal visit, in which they all prostrated themselves before their brother Joseph. This of course awakened all his sensibilities, and a thousand painful recollections, which brought tears into his eyes, and he wept with them, and comforted them. Here we ought not to omit observing, that he founded all his consolations on the doctrine of a divine superintending Providence: "Fear not," said he, "for I am (as we should prefer reading it) in the place of God; that is, I am sensible that you are at my mercy; and feel it both my duty and my honour to exercise toward you the divine prerogative of forgiveness. 'As for you, ye thought evil against me, but God meant it for good;' and I can no more remember the evil you did to me, when I contemplate the consequences that have arisen out of it. 'God meant it for good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive. Now, therefore, fear not; I will nourish you and your little ones: and he comforted them, and spake kindly to them:' or, as the Hebrew phrase in the margin is, 'spake to their hearts,' which is God's way of comforting his people. (Isa. xl. 1, 2.) Joseph no doubt kept his promise; and as he lived fifty-four the people of Asia, especially of the women. Their sentiments of joy or grief are properly transports; and their transports are ungoverned, excessive, and outrageous. When any one returns from a long journey, or dies, his family bursts into cries, that may be heard twenty doors off. Especially are those cries long in the case of death, and frightful; for their mourning is right down despair, and "an image of hell." This continues forty days.—Sir J. Chardin.—Harmer. Threshing floor of Atad.—[This place was situated, according to Jerome, between the Jordan and the city of Jericho, two miles from the former, and three from the latter, where Bethgala was afterwards built.—Procopius of Gaza states the same. As the Hebrew word signifies thorns, the place might have been remarkable for their production; but all the versions, except the Arabic, consider it as a proper name. As Moses wrote or revised his history on the east side of Jordan, beyond Jordan, in his five books, means westward of Jordan; but in other parts of Scripture it generally means, eastward.]—Bagster.

21 Now therefore fear ye not: I will nourish you, and your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them.

22 And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his father's house: and Joseph lived a hundred and ten years.

23 And Joseph saw Ephraim's children of the third generation: the children also of Machir, the son of Manasseh, were brought up upon Joseph's knees.

years after this event, during which time they enjoyed his patronage and protection, we shall not wonder to hear that they greatly multiplied. Joseph also seems to have enjoyed much domestic comfort. He "saw Ephraim's children of the third generation: the children also of Machir, the son of Manasseh, were brought up upon Joseph's knees." A fine picture this of the felicity of an old man, surrounded with his children to the third generation! Joseph was, however, not immortal; and the time hastens on when he also must die. He then calls his brethren around him, and says to them, as Jacob had done before:—Behold, "I die! and God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land, unto the land which he swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob." And Joseph took an oath of them that they should carry up his bones out of Egypt, for which purpose he was "embalmed," and put into a coffin, but not buried, that his body might be ready to be carried with them out of Egypt. Thus, says the Apostle to the Hebrews, "By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones." (Heb. xi. 22.)

Ver. 26. He was put in a coffin.—This was an honour appropriated to persons of distinction, coffins being not universally used. According to Mallet, the greater part were only embalmed and swathed, and laid alongside each other, and some buried without embalming. Thevenot says, antique coffins of stone and sycamore wood are still to be seen in Egypt. It is said some were formerly made of pasteboard, formed by folding and gluing cloth to-gether a great number of times; these were curiously plastered and painted with hieroglyphics.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON GENESIS.

We are now arrived at the close of a book, in many respects the most extraordinary in the world. In antiquity, it goes back to the origin of man, and of the globe which he inhabits, while its prophetic annunciations extend to the last days. It contains an inspired record of the creation, and a retrospective view of the transactions of Providence for nearly 2000 years. These views, are infinitely preferable to any of the speculations of gentile philosophers, either of the East or West. Its discoveries lead directly to the Author of our being, the Creator of all things; their theories sink the human mind into the bogs of idolatry, or the gulf of atheism.

We have here the elements of universal history, which furnish evidence of these most important truths: that God "hath made of one blood all the nations that dwell upon the earth;"—that He made man upright, but he hath sought out many (corrupt) inventions;"—that He whom man offended, found out the means of his salvation, and even in his sentence of condemnation mingled the promise of redemption. Here we have an authentic record of that most awful judgment—the universal deluge; also the renewal and re-peopling of the world.

The scene now contracts, from Noah to Shem; from Shem to Abraham; and from Abraham to Israel. The history of the Bible becomes more select; it is the history, not of the world, but of the church; and the affairs of other nations are only adverted to as they become connected with the great design of God in man's salvation. The Book of Genesis closes with the death of Jacob and Joseph. But before the scenes shut up, we have graphic and expanded views of the fate of the twelve tribes of Israel, in the prophetic blessings of their dying father; of which, those relative to Judah are to us far the most interesting, as they point to Him, in whose work all the plans and promises of His covenant centre and are accomplished.

One of the wisest and most learned men of the last century was Sir William Jones, whose researches into Eastern literature were unexampled, and remain unrivalled. This great man, it appears, in the early part of life, was tempted to infidelity; but he esteemed it no small advantage that "his researches had corroborated the multiplied evidences of revelation, by confirming the Mosaic account of the primitive world." As his last hour came on, he retired into an inner apartment alone, and died in the act of prayer. But before his death he left this testimony to the truth and excellency of the Scriptures, particularly of the Old Testament: "I have regularly and attentively read the Holy Scriptures, and am of opinion, this volume, independent of its divine origin, contains more sublimity and beauty, more morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatever language or age they may have been composed." Ld. Teignmouth's Life of Sir W. Jones.

THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED EXODUS.

The name EXODUS is borrowed from the Septuagint, and means departure; because the departure of Israel from Egypt, with its causes and consequences, form the leading subjects of the history. That Moses was the author of it, there can be no reasonable doubt; for it is cited as his by David, Daniel, and other sacred writers; also by Manetho, Tacitus, and other heathen authors. It also discovers an intimate acquaintance with the affairs of Egypt, and the geography of the wilderness. But the time of this Book being composed is not so clear, though it is certain it must have been written after the commencement of the tabernacle worship. It is reasonable to believe, that such a man as Moses, after he was called to sustain a public character, would suffer no important event to pass without a record, though these might not have been immediately formed into a connected history; nor is it of the least importance to ascertain the exact period when this book was written.

The period of history which it occupies is reckoned at one hundred and forty-five years, from the death of Joseph to the consecration of the Tabernacle.

Besides historical facts, this Book contains the institution of the passover—the moral law—the miracle of manna in the wilderness—the gushing rock of Horeb—directions for building the Tabernacle and mercy-seat, and for forming the priestly vestments; most of which circumstances, in their prominent points, had a typical reference to the New Testament dispensation, as is largely shown by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

OF MIRACLES, PARTICULARLY THOSE OF MOSES.

"A Miracle is a sensible suspension or contrivance of, or deviation from, the known laws of nature. By these laws God governs the world. He alone established, and He alone, therefore, can suspend them. Effects, which are produced by the regular operation of these laws, or which are conformable to the established course of events, are said to be natural; and every palpable deviation therefrom, a miracle."

It is commonly objected, that a miracle is beyond our comprehension; and is, therefore, contrary to reason. But many objects, which are continually presented to us, are no less inscrutable than the miracles. Every science we study, presents these: Magnetism, Galvanism, Electricity, &c.; and no question is more so, than the principle of vitality in man; but because we cannot comprehend this, are we to deny that we are living creatures?

Hume, the great opponent of the doctrine of miracles, contends, that they are "contrary to experience." That they are contrary to our experience, is truly to say that we have never witnessed any; and is to reason like the Emperor of China, who denied the existence of ice and snow, because he had never seen them; that is, they were contrary to his experience. But in how small a portion of time and space is our experience circumscribed? Could we roam the age of the Jew of Jerusalem,* it might give some weight to our experience; yet, during the age of miracles, had he lived in the other hemisphere, or even but a few score leagues distant, they might all have happened without his knowledge; that is, without coming within the sphere of his experience.

This objection goes upon the principle, that the experience of every age is uniform, than which nothing can be more absurd or false, while we see every thing around us changing. Climates change. The sea invades the land, in one country; in another, it retires and leaves it dry. How then, shall the experience of one age be the standard of all others.

Besides, have there not been different dispensations, the Patriarchal, the Jewish, and the Christian? And might not that kind of evidence be necessary to introduce the Jewish as Christian dispensations, which is by no means requisite after they have been long established? The Jewish economy was introduced by a host of miracles, and some of them were continued for forty years. After this firmly established, and the early part of the Old Testament written, they were, comparatively, few. Again, at the commencement of the Christian dispensation, the whole world was sunk into idolatry; and the philosophers and literati, if they did not themselves believe the popular superstitions, encouraged the vulgar in the belief. At first, therefore, miracles were equally necessary as in the days of Moses; but when the Scriptures were completed, and widely circulated, they gradually ceased, and are now unnecessary.

But the most important point in this controversy is, to fix certain criteria, or marks, to distinguish between true and false, or pretended miracles: this is most essential, before we can depend on any miracles, as the evidence of a divine mission, which is the end proposed in the case before us—the miracles of Moses. The criteria laid down by the celebrated Leslie, ("Short Method with a Deist.") and generally adopted by Christian advocates, are the following:—1. He contends, every true miracle must be submitted to the outward senses, as seeing, hearing, &c. 2. it must be performed before competent witnesses. 3. The memory of it must be preserved by certain monuments, or authentic records; or perpetuated by a certain institution, which, 4. Must have originated at the time the transaction is reported to have occurred. Now, let us apply these criteria, as a test of the miracles wrought and attested by Moses. 1. They were all submitted to the sight, and several of them, (as the insects, botches, his court, and all his learned men, or magicians. 3. The memory of them is preserved in the national records of the Jews, and some of them in the writings of the Gentiles. 4. The truth of them is farther certified by the Passover, an institution purposely intended to preserve the memorial of one of them, (the death of the first born,) and which may be traced up to the very time. But an argument may be adduced in defence of these miracles, which can hardly apply to any others—they were wrought in competition with, or opposition to, all the wise men, of Egypt, at that time distinguished for wisdom and science above all nations: but this point must be resumed in our Exposition. These remarks are intended only to prepare our readers for the discussion.

CHAPTER I.

The children of Israel after Joseph's death do multiply. 8 They are oppressed by a new king. 22 Pharaoh commandeth the male children to be cast into the river.

NOW these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into <sup>a</sup> Egypt; every man and his household came with Jacob.

2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah,
3 Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin,
4 Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

5 And all the souls that came out of the <sup>b</sup> loins of Jacob were <sup>c</sup> seventy souls; for Joseph was in Egypt already.

6 And Joseph <sup>d</sup> died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.

7 And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased <sup>e</sup> abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 ¶ Now there arose up a new king over Egypt, which <sup>f</sup> knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we:

10 Come on, let us deal <sup>g</sup> wisely with them, lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them taskmasters, to afflict <sup>h</sup> them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure-cities, Pithom, and <sup>i</sup> Raameses.

12 But <sup>j</sup> the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour.

14 And they made their <sup>k</sup> lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in <sup>l</sup> brick, and

15 And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives (of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah;)

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him; but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives <sup>n</sup> feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men-children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men-children alive?

19 And the midwives said unto <sup>o</sup> Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women; for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 Therefore God dealt <sup>p</sup> well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that <sup>q</sup> he made them houses.

22 And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, <sup>r</sup> Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

CHAPTER II.

1 Moses is born, 3 and in an ark cast into the flags: 5 he is found, and brought up by Pharaoh's daughter: 11 he slayeth an Egyptian: 13 he reproveth a Hebrew: 15 he fleeth into Midian.

AND there was a <sup>a</sup> man of the house of Levi, and took to <sup>b</sup> wife a daughter of Levi:

2 And the woman conceived and bare a son: and when she saw him that he was a goodly child, she <sup>b</sup> hid him three months.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—22. Pharaoh persecutes the Israelites.—

A new king arose, that knew not Joseph, and probably a new dynasty, for the Egyptian monarchy at this period is said to have been elective; and historians calculate that seven kings had reigned, and nearly sixty years elapsed, between the death of Joseph and this period; a space of time more than sufficient to obliterate his memory at court. In the mean time, the Israelites rapidly increased, so as to alarm the government, and to induce this jealous monarch to adopt a narrow and barbarous policy for their destruction. First, they were oppressed with hard and incessant labour; then the Hebrew midwives were tampered with, to destroy their male children in the birth; but they feared God, and would not be murderers. The excuse they made to the king was probably founded in fact; and no sooner was the cruel decree known, than the women would doubtless run any risk, or assist each other, rather than sacrifice their offspring. A severer decree, therefore, "charged all his people" to drown the male children in the Nile, which was doubtless executed with sufficient rigour. "The voice of lamentation was heard throughout the land; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted because they were not." Day after day, the sun arose and set in blood. In childbirth, the mother felt the double pangs of nature: she no longer rejoiced when a man-child was born into the world, as the recompense of her pains: she could no longer look forward with a pleasing hope, and say, "This same shall comfort us concerning our work, and the toil of our hands:" the moment the infant beheld the light, the stern decree of the inhuman monarch consigned it to a (watery) grave!" Collyer's Script. Facts.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—25. Moses born, and saved by Pharaoh's daughter.—We have here a very striking instance of the wisdom of Divine Providence, in counteracting the craft and cruelty of man. There seems nothing very remarkable in the means taken to preserve the life of Moses; they were the natural CHAP. I. Ver. 5. Seventy souls.—See Note on Gen. xvi. 26, 27.

Ver. 7. Increased abundantly.—Hebrew, "Increased like fishes, (see Note on Gen. i. 21.) and waxed mighty exceedingly, exceedingly." Aristotle speaks of the Egyptian women as bringing forth two, three, or four children at a birth; and Mallet, who resided sixteen years in Egypt, says, "the females exceed all others in the world for fruitfulness." But the text speaks not of Egyptians, but of Hebrew women, who, on the testimony of their own midwives, had easier and speedier labours, and, by consequence, were more fruitful. See ver. 19.

Ver. 8. A new king.—Probably Rameses Miamun, who commenced a new dynasty, A. M. 2427, and reigned sixty-seven years. [Or his son Amenophis, who succeeded him about this period; and by his not knowing Joseph is meant his not acknowledging his obligation to him.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. To afflict them with their burdens.—Aristotle says, that it is the custom of tyrants to oppress their subjects by daily labour, that they may not have time to plan rebellion. On this principle, Tarquin the Proud employed the Romans in digging the subterranean canals, or drains, in Rome. And R. Knor says, the king of Ceylon employed his people in immense works, to accustom them to servitude, and prevent insurrection.—Orient. Lit. They built them treasure cities, Pithom and Raameses.—Pithom is thought to be Patum, near the Arabian Gulf; and Raameses, for Rameses, for the word in Hebrew is the same. Bochart calls it Pelusium, called in Ezek. xxx. 15. "the strength of Egypt," but the LXX. and the Coptic explain it of On, which is Heliopolis. Both these places are mentioned in Genesis, and it is not necessary to suppose that these were now founded; but rather, that being found convenient situations, the king employed the Israelites in building immense erections, called treasure-cities; but whether they were granaries, or depositories for other riches, does not appear.

Josephus, indeed, (Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 9.) speaks of their being employed upon the pyramids, but unluckily the principal pyramids turn out to be built of stone, and the Israelites worked in brick and mortar. The pyramids of Saccara are, indeed, supposed by Bruce to be of clay; and these probably were the first erected. Josephus adds, that they were employed in canals, fortifications, and other public works. For Pharaoh.—This was the common name of the kings of Egypt, even as Cæsar of the Roman emperors. But every king had also his peculiar name. Bochart says, Pharaoh, in the Egyptian language, meant a crocodile.—Calmet's Dict.

Ver. 14. In mortar and in brick.—First digging the clay, kneading and preparing it; and, secondly, forming them into bricks, drying them in the sun, &c.—Dr. Clarke. The word used for mortar, is generally rendered bitumen, or asphaltus. See Notes on Gen. vi. 14. xi. 3.

Ver. 15. Hebrew midwives.—Two only are named, as probably the principal, and having control over the rest; for certainly two would be very inadequate to such a number of women. It is probable, however, as the Hebrew women were stronger, that the lower classes did not generally employ them, especially after this decree. We may suppose they would rather run any risk than do it.

Ver. 16. See them upon the stools.—[Or rather, "and ye see them by the stone-troughs;" for so ovvayim, from aven, a stone, seems to signify, (compare ch. vii. 19.) in which they washed the new-born infants. See this subject fully illustrated in Fragments to Calmet, Nos. 312, 313.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. They are lively.—Strong, hale, vigorous.—Dr. Clarke. The very circumstance of their being put to hard labour, especially out of doors, tended to make them so. There is therefore no reason to suppose the midwives told a falsehood.

Ver. 21. He made them houses.—That is, built up their families. See exposition of Gen. xvi. 2.

Ver. 22. Every son . . . ye shall cast into the river.—Infanticide (or infant murder) has been practised in many arbitrary countries. Thevenot mentions some extraordinary instances in Persia.—(Fragments to Calmet, No. 312.) It still prevails, both in China and in India, and in the latter, notwithstanding great exertions to put it down. And missionaries to the South Sea Islands found it there very prevalent, and it was only suppressed by the establishment of Christianity. The destruction was, however, generally of daughters, not of sons. See Cormack's Female Infanticide.

CHAP. II. Ver. 2. Bare a son.—This was not her first child, for Aaron, his brother, was three years older. (chap. vii. 7.) and his sister Miriam, who stood by to watch the birth of him, (ver. 4.) must have been still older.—A goodly child.—The Hebrew reads simply, "She saw him, that he was good." The LXX. read asteton, handsome, beautiful; to which St. Stephen adds, toward God; which our translators render, "exceeding fair;" but Dr. Doddridge thinks it might not unfitly be rendered "divinely beautiful." Josephus and Philo speak much of his beauty; and many of the Rabbins say, he had the form of an angel." It also appears by Justin, that the fame of his beauty spread even among the heathen.

3 And when she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of buirushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein: and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 And his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 ¶ And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side: and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go, and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child and nursed it.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son. And she called his name Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

11 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 And when he went out the second day behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said, Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by a well.

16 Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters: and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

17 And the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock.

18 And when they came to Reuel their father, he said, How is it that ye are come so soon to-day?

19 And they said, An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds, and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

20 And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? why is it that ye have left the man? call him, that he may eat bread.

suggestions of a mother's heart; but that the king's daughter should come down to bathe at this time, and be the first to observe and pity the child, whom her father's cruelty had doomed to death, must strike us as a very providential circumstance; as, by that means, the very man who was destined to deliver Israel, was nourished and educated in the king's palace, and obtained that eminence of Egyptian learning, which was highly important in his future office; and which, as the son of Amram, he was not otherwise likely to obtain. The personal beauty also of the child, which attracted the admiration of the Egyptian princess, no less than his forlorn condition excited her pity, must be solely ascribed to Providence; for St. Stephen tells us he was exceeding fair. (Acts vii. 20—22.) Josephus, who corroborates this circumstance, adds an anecdote, which seems worth preserving, though founded only on tradition. The Jewish historian tells us, that the princess having adopted Moses as her heir, as such introduced him to the king her father, who, being charmed with his appearance, placed a diadem on his head, which, in a childish pet, he threw down and trampled on. This led the sacred scribe, who was present, very naturally to predict the ruin of the empire, if he were not destroyed; and from this fate it was with difficulty that he was rescued by the princess. (Josephus, Antiq. book ii. chap. 10.)

Another circumstance occurred, after he had attained maturity, which afresh endangered his life, and obliged him to leave Egypt. Though educated in the palace, "he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;" his heart yearned over the miseries of his brethren; he visited the house of bondage, and "looked upon" their misery. Here he saw an Egyptian, probably a taskmaster, smiting, or scourging, one of his brethren; and conceiving this a proper opportunity to give them an intimation of his design and character, he rescued the sufferer, and slew the oppressor. On the following day he saw strife even among his brethren, and undertook the part of a mediator, but they rejected him. By these actions he expected that "his brethren would have understood how that God, by his hand, would deliver them." (Acts vii. 25.) But slavery is as degrading to the mind as it is painful to the body: for they understood not his design, and rejected his interference.

In consequence of these circumstances becoming known, however, he was obliged to flee to the land of Midian, where an act of gallantry (if we may use a term so much abused) towards the daughters of the priest and prince of Midian (similar to that of Jacob to Rachel, Gen. xxix. 10.) procured him an asylum and employment, which afforded him the opportunity of much study and reflection during the time he there resided—an advantage not always duly appreciated by young persons intended for public life. During this time he married Zipporah, his master's daughter, who appears to have been a Cushite, and had a son by her, called Gershom, "a desolate stranger," as interpreted in the margin.

God, however, had not forgotten Israel. Their cruel oppressor, the king of Egypt, died, and they now sighed by reason of their bondage, and cried to heaven for mercy; the burden of their prayer being, perhaps, not so much for deliverance as for a milder prince, and an easier yoke, neither of which were granted; for the next king, (probably Amenophis, son of Miamun) being educated in the same despotic principles, pursued the same course of tyranny; and having reduced the children of Israel to a state the most abject which can be well conceived, he was determined to keep them in that condition. But "God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant; and God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them; or (as the margin reads) knew them," and owned them.—Yes, though they had rejected the deliverer whom he had sent, and occasioned his banishment to a foreign land, even there he was in a course of preparation to be their deliverer and legislator. The same eye which watched and pitied them in their affliction, guided him to prepare for their deliverance, and the time was now at hand.

Ver. 3. An ark of buirushes.—(Gome, is the papyrus, so famous in all antiquity. It grows on the banks of the Nile, and in marshy grounds; the stalks to the height of six or seven cubits above the water, is triangular, and terminates in a crown of small filaments, resembling hair. This reed was of the greatest use to the Egyptians, the pith serving them for food, and the woody part to build vessels with; which vessels frequently appear on various monuments of Egyptian antiquity. That boats were made of this reed is also attested by Pliny, Theophrastus, Plutarch, Herodotus, and Lucan, who says, the Memphian boat is constructed from the soaking papyrus;" where the other bibula exactly corresponds to the Hebrew gome, which, as a verb, is to soak, drink up.]—Bagster. Bruce says, the Abyssinians employ these boats for the same purpose, to the present day.

Ver. 5. Came down to wash.—The Egyptians, especially females, express their veneration for the Nile by bathing in it when it begins to rise; not naked, but in bathing dresses. Irwin saw a band of damsels go down, with singing and dancing, for that purpose.—Harmer. [As the word herself is not in the original, Dr. A. Clarke is of opinion, that it was for the purpose of washing, not her person, but her clothes, that Pharaoh's daughter came to the river; and that was an employment not beneath even kings' daughters in those primitive times. Homer represents Nausica, daughter of Alcinoüs, king of the Phæacians, in company with her maidens, employed at the sea side in washing her own clothes and those of her five brothers, when they find Ulysses driven ashore, after being shipwrecked. The whole scene is so perfectly like that before us, that they appear to be parallels.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. He slew the Egyptian.—[If the Egyptian killed the Hebrew, Moses only acted agreeably to the divine law (Ge. ix. 6.) in thus slaying the Egyptian, nor did he violate the law of Egypt; for, according to Diodorus Siculus, "he who saw a man killed, or violently assaulted on the highway, and did not endeavour to rescue him, if he could, was punished with death." Moses, therefore, in this transaction, acted as a brave and good man; especially as at this time there was little probability of obtaining justice on an Egyptian murderer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. The priest (or prince) of Midian.—The priest of every district was, no doubt, in general, the most considerable man in it, and therefore esteemed a prince among them. There is no proof that he was an idolater; but if he were, it is clear that he renounced idolatry. See chap. xviii. 10—12.

Ver. 18. Reuel their father.—In Num. x. 29, he is called Raguel, which is only a different pronunciation. In Exod. iii. 1, he is supposed to be called Jethro; in Judges iv. 11, Hobab; and in Judges i. 16, Kenite, or the Kenite. Dr. Clark thinks it most probable that Re-u-el (as he pronounces it) was father to Hobab, who was Jethro; and Moses having now been forty years in Midian it is probable that Reuel was now dead.

21 And Moses was <sup>m</sup> content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moses <sup>n</sup> Zipporah his daughter.

22 And she bare him a son, and he called his name <sup>o</sup> Gershom; for he said, I have been a stranger in a strange land.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, in process of time, that the king of Egypt died: and the children of Israel <sup>p</sup> sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up unto <sup>q</sup> God, by reason of the bondage.

24 And God heard their groaning, and God remembered his <sup>r</sup> covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob.

25 And God looked upon the children of Israel, and <sup>s</sup> God had respect unto them.

CHAPTER III.

1 Moses keepeth Jethro's flock. 2 God appeareth to him in a burning bush: 9 he sendeth him to deliver Israel. 14 The name of God: 15 his message to Israel.

NOW Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the back side of the desert, and came to the mountain of <sup>t</sup> God, even to Horeb.

2 And the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a <sup>u</sup> bush; and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burned.

4 And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and <sup>v</sup> said, Moses, Moses! And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy <sup>w</sup> shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover he said, <sup>x</sup> I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was <sup>y</sup> afraid to look upon God.

7 ¶ And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my <sup>a</sup> people which are in Egypt, and have heard their <sup>b</sup> cry by reason of their taskmasters; for I <sup>c</sup> know their sorrows: 8 And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the <sup>d</sup> Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, unto a good <sup>e</sup> land and a large, unto a <sup>f</sup> land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now, therefore, and I will <sup>g</sup> send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And Moses said unto God, Who am <sup>h</sup> I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

12 And he said, Certainly I will be with <sup>i</sup> thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? What shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, I AM <sup>j</sup> THAT I <sup>k</sup> AM: And he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.

15 And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is my name for ever, and this is my <sup>l</sup> memorial unto all generations.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—22. Moses commissioned to deliver Israel.—It was while Moses was tending his flock that he was favoured with this sacred call. Bishop Hall here remarks, "God never graces the idle with his visions. When he finds us in our callings, we find him in the tokens of his mercy." But what does Moses see? A bush burning, and not consumed! What does he hear? A voice from the middle of the burning bush. Let us, then, turn aside with him. "When I look upon this burning bush with Moses," says the author just quoted, "methinks I can never see a worthier and more lively emblem of the Church, (which is ever) in the furnace, yet wasteth not. Since then, (when Israel was in Egypt) how often hath it been flaming, (yet) never consumed? The same power that enlightens, preserves it; and to none but his enemies, is God a consuming fire." Moses hears a voice ordering him to approach, but not too near. "We come to God when we meditate on the great mysteries of his word; we come too near him when we search into his counsels. The sun and the fire say of themselves, Come not too near: how much more the light, which no man can attain unto?" "Moses hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God." The Lord, however, condescends to talk and reason with him: "Come now, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh." "But who am I, (says Moses,) that I should go to Pharaoh, or deliver Israel?" An humble sense of our own deficiency is the best preparation for usefulness in the work of God. "Certainly I will be with thee," saith the Lord. "But what shall I say to them?" rejoins Moses. If I say, "the God of your fathers hath sent me," alas! they are sunk in ignorance and vice, through the slavery to which they have been reduced: they have forgotten the God of their fathers; and if they ask me what his name is, what shall I say? "Say that I AM, the God JEHOVAH, hath sent thee" unto them. And to Pharaoh, say, "The Lord God of the Hebrews hath met with us: and now let us go (we beseech thee) three days into the wilderness, (as far as mount Horeb,) that we may sacrifice to the Lord our God."

This was to be their first request; and it was to be made, not with the expectation of its being granted, (for God knew the heart of Pharaoh,) but that it might open a way for displaying the divine glory: "and after that," says the Almighty, "he will let you go; and ye shall not go empty."

Here we may remark, that the secret plans of Divine Providence interfere not with his commands. That the Lord foresaw the obduracy of Pharaoh, was no reason that he should forbear his commands. We be to the world, if masters forfeited their words prove. This reading is confirmed by the Samaritan and Coptic.—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Zipporah his daughter.—The Targum calls her his "grand-daughter," for she was the daughter of Jethro. (See last note.) It is certain the Hebrews were not particular in distinguishing the different shades of relationship. "Thus Nebuchadnezzar is termed Belshazzar's father, though Belshazzar was his grandson."—Cruden.

Ver. 22. In a strange land.—[The LXX. in the Complutensian Polyglott, and several MSS., Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and Arabic, add, "And the name of the second he called Eliezer; for the God of my father has been my help, and delivered me from the hand of Pharaoh."—Bagster.

Ver. 23. The king of Egypt died.—That is, Rameses Miamun, who was succeeded by his son Amenophis II.—Dr. Clarke.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. The flock of Jethro, his father-in-law.—The Hebrew choten, here rendered father, Dr. Clarke would render brother-in-law. He remarks, "It seems to be a general term for (any) relative by marriage."—The mountain of God, Horeb.—At other times called Sinai. The mountain had two peaks, the one was called Horeb, the other Sinai; the latter name originated from the bush (Seneh), in which the flame appeared.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 5. Put off thy shoes, or sandals.—This is a very ancient practice in worship; not Moses only, but Pythagoras enjoins it. Among the Greeks, no person was admitted to the temple of Diana, in Crete, with shoes on. All Mahometans, Brahmins, and Parsees, worship barefooted to the present day.

Ver. 6. God of thy father.—(Though the word avicha, "thy father," is here used in the singular, yet St. Stephen, quoting this place, (Acts vii. 32.) uses the plural, "the God of thy fathers;" and that this is the meaning, the following

Ver. 8. A large land.—Canaan was so, compared to Goshen.—Milk and honey.—These were the chief dainties of the ancients, as they are now among the Arabs, particularly the Bedouins, who express the happiness of a rich man by this proverb; "he sleeps with his mouth upon a honey-comb."—Oriental Literature.

Ver. 14. I am that I am.—More literally, "I will be (Eheych) what I will be." Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "I AM because I AM." In every way it implies self-existence and independence; and is equivalent to the name JEHOVAH, which follows in the next verse. Diodorus Siculus says, Moses received his laws from the God JAO, which seems to be from JEV, the tetragrammaton, or name of four letters, which is no other than the Hebrew of Jehovah without points, from whence they derived the name of Jove. See Dr. Clarke. I am, because God is independent, uncreated, immutable, eternal, always, and every where the same, and therefore HE only can be said absolutely to BE.

Ver. 15. My name for ever.—[The name here referred to is that which immediately precedes, YEHOWAH, which we translate LORD, the name by which God had been known from the creation of the world, (Gen. ii. 2.) and by which HE is known to the present day. Even the heathen knew this name of the true God, and from it formed their Jao, Jere, Jove, and Jupiter, i. e. Jovis pater, father Jove. Yehowah, from hawaah, to be, subst. signifies He who is, or SUBSISTS, i. e. eminently and in a manner superior to all other beings; and is essentially the same with eheych, I AM, in the preceding verse.]—Bagster

16 Go, and gather the elders of Israel together, and say unto them, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, I have surely <sup>v</sup> visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt:

17 And I have said, I will <sup>v</sup> bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, unto a land flowing with milk and honey.

18 And they shall hearken to thy voice; and thou shalt come, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt, and ye shall say unto him, The LORD God of the Hebrews hath <sup>v</sup> met with us; and now let us go, we beseech thee, three days' journey into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.

19 ¶ And I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let <sup>v</sup> you go, <sup>v</sup> no, not by a mighty hand.

20 And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my <sup>v</sup> wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and after that <sup>v</sup> he will let you go.

21 And I will give this <sup>v</sup> people favour in the sight of the Egyptians: and it shall come to pass, that, when ye go, ye shall not go empty:

22 But every woman shall <sup>v</sup> borrow of her neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment: and ye shall put them upon your <sup>v</sup> sons, and upon your daughters: and ye shall spoil the <sup>v</sup> Egyptians.

CHAPTER IV.

Moses' rod is turned into a serpent: 6 his hand is leprous. 13 Moses departeth from Pharaoh. 21 God's message to Pharaoh. 27 Aaron is sent to meet Moses. 31 The people believe them.

AND Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

2 And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thy hand? And he said, A rod.

3 And he said, Cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground, and it became a serpent: and Moses fled from before it.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thy hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand:

5 That they may <sup>a</sup> believe that the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 ¶ And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thy hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was <sup>b</sup> leprous as snow.

7 And he said, Put thy hand into thy bosom again. And he put his hand into his bosom again, and plucked it out of his bosom, and behold, it was <sup>c</sup> turned again as his other flesh.

8 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and the water which thou takest out of the <sup>d</sup> river shall become <sup>e</sup> blood upon the dry land.

10 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not <sup>f</sup> eloquent, neither <sup>g</sup> heretofore nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

11 And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's <sup>h</sup> mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

12 Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee <sup>i</sup> what thou shalt say.

13 And he said, O my Lord, send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.

14 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses, and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth <sup>k</sup> thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And thou shalt speak unto him, and put <sup>l</sup> words in his mouth: and I will be with thy right of obedience, whenever servants proved rebellious and perverse. The authority of God is not lost even in hell; nor is the sin of disobedience lessened.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1-31. The objections of Moses silenced.—It seems remarkable that Moses, who, forty years before, had visited his nation, and offered them his services, should now shrink back, when he had the assurance of the Almighty to encourage and support him: but the fact is, we are often most prompt to such services when we are least prepared for them. Experience increases diffidence, and cures presumption. At the same time, it is alike sinful to refuse the duties to which we are called in Providence, as to presume before we are called. Moses, at the former period, had received intimation of the duties to which he should be called, but the time was not yet come. He ran before he was sent, and, therefore, ran in vain. Now he is clearly called to the work, with every promise of support, his courage fails, and he must have miracles to persuade him. First, the wand in his hand is turned into a serpent, and he is ready to flee from the serpent he had thus unwittingly produced. He was, secondly, himself made the subject of a miracle, being afflicted with a momentary leprosy, in which his feelings were appealed to (as his sight in the other) for the genuine nature of the miracle. The first of these miracles was afterwards wrought before Pharaoh, not by Moses, but by Aaron, as we shall presently see; but both were wrought before the children of Israel.

Another excuse is now raised by Moses, that he was "not eloquent;" that is, not fluent, but slow of speech, and of few words. Of the folly of this objection we have abundant evidence in the reply. The Lord is angry, and said, "Who made man's mouth?" Is not he that made it able to furnish it with words? "I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what to say." Nothing, however, can satisfy Moses. He feels the weight of the undertaking as if he were to bear it all alone, and withdraws his shoulder from the burden. The command, however, must be obeyed; but, in condescension to his objections, Aaron, his brother, is coupled with him, as a man that could "speak well;" that is, promptly and fluently: for otherwise, though Moses was slow in speech, he was "mighty in words," as well "as deeds." (Acts vii. 22.) It is no uncommon thing, that those who say the least speak most to the purpose.

Ver. 16. Gather the elders of Israel.—There is no doubt but Joseph established a regular government among them, some trace of which remained among the elders of each tribe and family.

Ver. 19. No, not by a mighty hand.—Margin, "But by a mighty hand." The Hebrew particle ulo, though literally "and, not," means sometimes if not, except, or unless, and is so translated by the Vulgate, LXX., and Coptic.

Ver. 22. Every woman shall borrow.—This last word is a most unhappy translation; and has occasioned infidel writers (as Voltaire, Paine, and others) to say, the Israelites were commanded to borrow, with a view of never paying. The Hebrew word shaal, means simply to ask, or demand, and is here so rendered by the LXX. and Vulgate. The Syriac, Chaldee, Samaritan, Coptic, and Persian, all agree with the Hebrew. So Ainsworth and all the more modern versions. See Josh. xv. 18. Judg. v. 25. It is even applied to the demands of God, Deut. x. 12.—Jewels of silver, &c.—The Hebrew keley is of very general import, and might be rendered (as by Dr. Boothroyd) "articles," i.e. silver vessels, instruments, &c. And that the word rendered spoil, in the close of the verse, implies neither robbery nor injustice, is abundantly evident from its use by Laban's daughters. Gen. xxxi. 16.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 2. And he said, A rod.—The heathen made their wands staves, and sceptres, of the wood of the laurel tree, which they called dirrectories, under a notion of its possessing prophetic powers. "From the story of Moses' rod, the poets invented the fables of the Thyrsus of Bacchus, and the Caduceus of Mercury. Homer represents Mercury as taking his rod to work miracles, precisely in the same way as God commanded Moses to take his." Ver. 10. Not eloquent.—Hebrew, "Not a man of words."—Neither heretofore, nor since.—Heb. "Neither since yesterday, nor the third day."—Slow of speech.—Heb. "Heavy of speech and of tongue." These idioms, which are preserved in the margin, are so beautiful and expressive, that we could wish to have had them in the text. From this excuse of Moses, some commentators have strangely supposed that Moses stammered; and others, that he had lost the use of his mother tongue, the Hebrew language; but neither the text, nor any other circumstance, that we are aware of, suggests either of these ideas. The most that can be inferred is, that he had a thick and indistinct pronunciation. See chap. vi. 12.

Ver. 14. I know that he can speak well.—The Hebrew reads, "In speaking he can speak" (i. e. clearly promptly, fluently).

mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do.

16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him in instead of God.

17 And thou shalt take this in rod in thy hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

18 And Moses went, and returned to o Jethro his father-in-law, and said unto him, Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, Go in peace.

19 And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for all the p men are dead which sought thy life.

20 And Moses took his wife, and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and he returned to the land of Egypt. And Moses took the rod of God in his hand.

21 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those r wonders before Pharaoh which I have put in thy hand: but I will a harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go.

22 And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, Israel is my i son, even my first-born:

23 And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will a slay thy son, even thy first-born.

24 ¶ And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the r LORD met him, and sought to w kill him.

25 Then Zipporah took a s sharp stone, and v cut off the foreskin of her son, and z cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

27 ¶ And the LORD said to Aaron, Go into the wilderness to meet Moses. And he went,

CHAPTER V.

1 Pharaoh chideh Moses and Aaron for their message: 5 he increaseth the Israelites' task: 20 they cry out upon Moses and Aaron: 28 Moses complaineth to God.

AND afterward Moses and Aaron went in and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a a feast unto me in the wilderness.

2 And Pharaoh said, b Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go.

3 And they said, The God of the c Hebrews hath met with us: let us go, we pray thee three days' journey into the desert, and sacrifice unto the LORD our God; lest he fall upon us with d pestilence, or with the sword.

4 And the king of Egypt said unto them, Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their works? get you unto your burdens.

5 ¶ And Pharaoh said, Behold, the people of the land now are many, and ye make them rest from their burdens.

6 And Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying,

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

8 And the tale of the bricks which they did

Moses at length submits, and the more readily, as he is informed "all the men are dead which sought thy life," alluding to the circumstance which occasioned him to flee into the land of Midian. Perhaps the fear of these might, in fact, lie at the bottom of his objections. Now, however, he takes leave of Jethro, meets with Aaron by the way, returns into Egypt with a divine commission, and full directions for his conduct. They now contrive to collect together the elders of Israel; Aaron addresses them, and, contrary to the forebodings of Moses, they "believed, and bowed their heads and worshipped."

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—23. Pharaoh refuses to let Israel go.—It must be recollected, in reading the Old Testament, that many circumstances are omitted through the brevity of the narrative, which would certainly render the history much clearer, and answer many questions now unanswerable. It has, for instance, been asked, If the Israelites were in such hard bondage in Egypt, how is it that Moses and Aaron could gain access to them to deliver their message, and perform the signs (or miracles) which we find they did? And still more incredible may it seem, that Moses and Aaron should gain so easy access to the haughty monarch, and dare to address him in such language. But it is to be recollected, that their God was the God of Providence, whose

"Hand unseen

Doth turn and guide the great machine."

It may be easily conceived, therefore, that circumstances occurred to favour their designs which are not recorded, and which, perhaps, are not conceivable by us. As to Moses, he had been brought up at court; and though probably unknown to the present sovereign, he might be known to some of the at-

Ver. 19. Midian.—[A country in Arabia Petrea, on the eastern coast of the Red sea, not far from Mount Sinai. This place is still called by the Arabs the Land of Midian, or of Jethro. Abulfeida, speaking of the city of Midian, says, "Madyan is a city, in ruins, on the shore of the Red sea, on the opposite side to Tabuc, from which it is distant about six days' journey. At Midian may be seen the famous well at which Moses watered the flocks of Shoaib (Jethro). This city was the capital of the tribe of Midian in the days of the Israelites."—Bagster.

Ver. 21. But I will harden his heart.—Though our object is not polemical, it seems here necessary to remark upon a phrase which we shall often meet with in this history. If the Hebrew verb chazaz the angel would kill, nor at whose feet Zipporah cast herself, (or the foreskin), nor what is the nominative case to "let him go." The Septuagint render it, "And it came to pass in the way, in the inn, (place of unloosing), that the angel of the Lord met him (Moses), and sought to kill him, (Moses probably.) And Zipporah took a stone, and cut off the foreskin of her son, and fell down at his feet, (the angel's,) and said, The blood of my son's circumcision is stopped. And he (the angel, as it is in MS. Oxon. and Compl.) departed from him. (Moses,) because she said, The blood of my son's circumcision is stopped."—Bagster. The words are evidently a parenthesis, and perhaps have been accidentally misplaced. Dr. Boothroyd renders the passage more intelligible by connecting with it ver. 20, (in this order, ver. 20, 24, 25, 26, 21, &c.) as at present there is no antecedent to the pronoun him. The sense then is, "The Lord met with Moses;" and so it is generally understood. But here every word is attended with so much difficulty, that after examining a host of commentators, we must be content to refer to them, particularly to Poole's Synopsis, and to the Assembly's Annotations.

CHAP. V. Ver. 4. Let the people from their works.—[Taphreco, from para, to loose, disengage; and which we render let, from the Anglo-Saxon lettan, to hinder. Ye liberation of bricks, because straw is the binding of the brick. "Let religion alone and mind your work;" "Get you unto your burdens." "Let religion alone and mind your work;" "The language not only of tyranny, but of the basest irreligion."—Bagster.

Ver. 6. The taskmasters of the people and their officers.—The former were Egyptians, and the latter Israelites. (Shoterim, from the Arabic sataru, to overlook, superintend, seems to denote, as muscytar, in Arabic also does, overseers, superintendents.—They may probably have been somewhat like the chiefs of trades, who are found in every city in the East; where "every trade has a head, who is entrusted with authority over them, knows every individual of the body to which he belongs, and is in some measure answerable for them to Government."—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Straw to make brick.—[The straw was mixed with clay in order to make the bricks. This is expressly affirmed by Philo, (vit. Mos.) who was himself a native of Alexandria, in Egypt, who says, describing the oppression of the Israelites, that some were obliged to work in clay, and others to gather straw for the formation of bricks, because straw is the binding of the brick. Philo's account is confirmed by Dr. Shaw, who says, that "some of the Egyptian pyramids are made of brick, the composition whereof is only a mixture of clay, mud, and straw, slightly blended and kneaded together, and afterwards baked in the sun. The straw which keeps the bricks together, and still preserves its original colour, seems to be a proof, that these bricks were never burnt or made in kilns." The same materials are now used for building in Egypt. Boothroyd says, "The houses are for the most part of brick that are only hardened by the heat of the sun, and mixed with straw to make them firm."—Bagster.

make heretofore, ye shall <sup>not</sup> lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle: therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

9 Let there <sup>be</sup> more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein: and let them not regard <sup>as</sup> vain words.

10 And the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spake to the people, saying, Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you straw.

11 Go ye, get you straw where ye can find it; yet not aught of your work shall be diminished.

12 So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble instead of straw.

13 And the taskmasters hastened them, saying, Fulfil your works, <sup>as</sup> your daily tasks, as when there was straw.

14 And the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick, both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?

15 ¶ Then the officers of the children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, Wherefore dealest thou thus with thy servants?

16 There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say to us, Make brick: and behold, thy servants are beaten; but the fault is in thine own people.

17 But he said, Ye are idle, ye are idle: therefore ye say, Let us go and do sacrifice to the LORD.

18 Go therefore now, and work; for there shall no straw be given you, yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.

19 ¶ And the officers of the children of Israel did see that they were in <sup>an</sup> evil case, after it was said, Ye shall not diminish ought from your bricks of your daily task.

20 And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way, as they came forth from Pharaoh.

21 And they said unto them, The LORD look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our <sup>savour</sup> to be <sup>as</sup> abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants, to put a sword in their hand to slay us.

22 ¶ And Moses returned unto the LORD and said, Lord, wherefore hast thou so <sup>an</sup> evil-entreated this people? why is it that thou hast sent me?

23 For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people: <sup>neither</sup> hast thou delivered thy people at all.

CHAPTER VI.

1 God reneweth his promise by his name JEHOVAH. 14 The genealogy of Reuben, 15 of Simeon, 16 of Levi, of whom came Moses and Aaron.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, Now shalt thou see what <sup>as</sup> I will do to Pharaoh: for with a strong <sup>hand</sup> shall he let them go, and with a strong hand shall he drive <sup>them</sup> out of his land.

2 And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the <sup>God</sup> LORD.

3 And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God <sup>the</sup> Almighty, but by my name <sup>JEHOVAH</sup> was I not known to them.

4 And I have also established <sup>as</sup> my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers.

5 And I have also heard the <sup>groaning</sup> of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage: and I have <sup>remembered</sup> my covenant.

6 Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, I am the LORD, and I will bring you <sup>out</sup> from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will <sup>redeem</sup> you with a stretched-out arm, and with great judgments:

7 And I will take you to <sup>me</sup> for a people, and I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

8 And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did <sup>swear</sup> to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it you for a heritage: I am the LORD.

endants, and his former rank and known attainments in learning might facilitate his access to Pharaoh. To him, however, he did obtain access, and boldly delivered his first demand in the name of JEHOVAH, God of Israel, which was, that they might hold a feast in the wilderness of Horeb. This was a solemn claim of the rights of worship and of conscience; and as they had served the king incessantly for forty years in abject bondage, it is but little to ask a few days for the service of their God. But it was to hold a feast; and why not ask leave to hold it in Egypt? The reason is obvious: their feast must be accompanied with sacrifices, and they wished neither to insult or provoke the people, by sacrificing before their eyes the objects which they held in the highest veneration, and, indeed, worshipped. This may afford us a practical lesson, not to insult others in the practice of their religious rites while we perform our own. Moses, however, was not listened to. Pharaoh insolently replied, "Who is JEHOVAH? I know not JEHOVAH, neither will I let Israel go." And as to ye, Moses and Aaron, "Wherefore do ye let (that is, hinder) the people from their work? Get you unto your burdens." And the same day their burdens were increased—they were commanded to "make bricks without straw;" and when they found it impossible to continue their full tale of bricks, as before, while they had to seek for straw, they were beaten by their cruel taskmasters. And when they appealed to the king by respectful petition, they were spurned from his presence without redress. "Ye are idle, ye are idle: and therefore ye say, Let us go and sacrifice to the LORD."

Their case now became more desperate. They met Moses and Aaron, who waited for them as they came from the palace; and now repent they had ever listened to his message, since their situation was become worse than ever. Moses was grieved, and even remonstrated with the Lord. "Wherefore is it that thou hast so evil entreated this people? Why is it that thou hast sent me?" His feelings were, doubtless, shocked by the atheism of Pharaoh; but his heart was filled with anguish, when he saw that the effect of his interference increased the sufferings of his brethren. He now begins to repent that he had undertaken the commission that had been assigned to him, and sinks into despondency under the disappointment.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—30. The Lord renews his promise and the commission of Moses.—It is worthy of remark, that whenever any of the Hebrew patriarchs began to faint, and sink into despondency, the Lord constantly reminded them of his covenant, which was renewed from time to time, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and now to Moses, and generally with some new circumstance to animate their faith. Moses is now sinking in despair, but he is encouraged by these words, "Thou shalt see what I will do to Pharaoh." I will make him know who JEHOVAH is. I will do that to Pharaoh which shall make him not only willing to let Israel go, but he shall "drive them out" himself.

A passage here occurs—"By my name Jehovah was I not known unto them"—that has uncommonly perplexed the commentators, both Jewish and Christian, in all ages, since it is certain that the name JEHOVAH was known to all the patriarchs, and even to Eve herself. (Gen. iv. 1.) Some have, therefore, proposed to read the text interrogatively, "And by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them?" implying that CHAP. VI. Ver. 8. I did swear.—Hebrew, "Lift up my hand." (The ancient mode of appealing to God was by lifting up the right hand, and was considered as a form of swearing. Hence yamin, in Hebrew the right hand, is in Arabic an oath, and as a verb, to take an oath. A similar custom prevailed among the heathens. Ge. xiv. 22. De. xxxii. 40. Eze. xx. 5, 6, 15, 23, 28, 42; xxxvi. 7; xlvii. 14.)—Bagster.

9 And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: but they hearkened not <sup>a</sup> unto Moses, for <sup>a</sup> anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage.

10 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Go in, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

12 And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, the children of Israel <sup>p</sup> have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of <sup>a</sup> uncircumcised lips?

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and gave them a <sup>r</sup> charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

he was so. But there seems no pertinence in this translation, nor any point of argument. The preceding verse, just quoted, will perhaps lead to the true meaning of this passage. If we ask, How does the God of Israel make himself known as JEHOVAH? the Psalmist will inform us, "JEHOVAH is known by the judgment which he executeth." (Ps. ix. 16. cv. 7.) And, therefore, when it is predicted of any person or nation, "They shall know that I am JEHOVAH," this is generally connected with some signal judgment, calculated to display his supremacy above all other gods, and above all competition with them. Thus, in the verse before us, "Ye shall know that I am JEHOVAH, which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians. And the Egyptians shall know that I am JEHOVAH, when I stretch forth my hand upon Egypt." (Chap. vii. 5.) So to Pharaoh, (verse 17.) "Thou shalt know that I am JEHOVAH; behold, I will smite thee," &c. Thus was he that said, "Who is Jehovah, that I should obey him?" made to "know him by the judgment which he executed." And so the prophet Isaiah, referring to a future state of Egypt, (whether now future we need not inquire) saith, "JEHOVAH shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know JEHOVAH in that day; and JEHOVAH shall smite Egypt," &c. This, therefore, is his "great and terrible name," by which God was and would be distinguished among the nations, in a manner in which he never was distinguished till this period: "I am JEHOVAH thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt." (Chap. xx. 2.)

The name JEHOVAH, we have observed, was known from the

1 Moses is encouraged to go to Pharaoh: 7 his age: 8 his rod is turned into a serpent

13 Pharaoh's heart is hardened. 19 The river is turned into blood.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a <sup>a</sup> god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet.

beginning; but those "mighty and terrible acts," which now and from henceforth distinguish him as JEHOVAH, and in consequence of which this became his appropriate and proper name, as distinguishing him from all other gods, were not known to the Hebrew patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They had not seen "his marvellous works in Egypt, nor his wonders in the land of Ham." (Ps. cv. 27.) These were the works by which he made himself known to Pharaoh, and to all future generations, as the God JEHOVAH, who brought up his people from the land of Egypt. To know God by his name JEHOVAH, was to witness a display of his power and his glory, "I am JEHOVAH; that is my name, and my glory will I not give to another." (Isaiah xlii. 8.)

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—25. Moses again applies to Pharaoh; the river turned into blood.—In a former chapter, (ch. iv. 16.) Moses had been appointed as a god to Aaron, and here to Pharaoh; and Aaron (it is now added) shall be thy prophet. The meaning is, the divine will was to be delivered through the medium of Aaron, who was not himself inspired, but appointed merely to deliver the divine messages from the mouth of Moses. God speaks to Moses, Moses to Aaron, and Aaron to Pharaoh. But it is added, (r. 3.) "I will harden Pharaoh's heart;" and this sentiment is many times repeated in the following chapters, and the reason given is always the same—that Pharaoh and the Egyptians "may know that I am JEHOVAH." But how can this expression of hardening the human heart be applied to God? Certainly not, in the sense of infusing any evil principle; for God neither "tempteth" nor inclineth any man to evil.

and Vulgate, who render it, "his paternal cousin;" but this construction was probably put on the original word to save the credit of Moses and Aaron, because the marriage of an aunt is afterwards forbidden, (Lev. xviii. 12, 14.) for the meaning of the word is fixed by another passage, where it is said, "The name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt."—(Num. xvi. 59.) Moses, then, is more important than his commentators.]—Bagster.

Ver. 28. And it came to pass.—Here the chapters should certainly be divided, as Dr. Clarke remarks, and as Dr. Boothroyd has done: these verses being a repetition of ver. 11 and 12, in order to introduce what follows.

stand by the river's brink against he come: and the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thy hand.

16 And thou shalt say unto him, The Lord God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, Let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness: and behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear.

17 Thus saith the Lord, In this thou shalt know that I am the Lord: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in my hand upon the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood.

18 And the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink: and the Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water of the river.

19 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and stretch out thy hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water, that they may become blood: and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.

20 And Moses and Aaron did so, as the Lord commanded; and he lifted up the rod and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned into blood.

21 And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 And the magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; as the Lord had said.

(James i. 13.) How then can the heart be hardened by God? This may be done in two ways.

1. Solomon tells us, "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." (Eccles. viii. 11.) This was the case with Pharaoh; for "when he saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, as the Lord had said." (Chap. viii. 15.) "The goodness of God," in deferring and reversing the judgments denounced against him, instead of softening his heart, and "leading him to repentance," as it ought to have done, hardened it, till it became "fully set," resolved, and determined to do evil. Thus, the same fire which will soften some substances, will harden others.

2. It must be acknowledged, there is another sense in which God is said to harden the hearts of men, who, like Pharaoh, abuse his mercies. Thus it is said of those nations which gave themselves up wholly to idolatry, that "God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts," &c. (Rom. i. 24, &c.) And of those "that receive not the truth, (but reject it,) that God sends them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie." (2 Thess. ii. 11.) That is, men are given up to the natural consequences of their own depravity. (Rom. ix. 2.) Thus, Augustin says, "God does not harden men by infusing malice (or any evil principle) into them; but by not imparting mercy to them." He might have added, that his mercy is never withdrawn, until it has been abused and despised. So it is observed by Scott, (on chap. iv. 21.) "God never communicates hardness, . . . but when provoked by atrocious crimes, he gives a person up to his own heart's lusts; he permits Satan to entice, deceive, and blind him: and he takes off those providential restraints, by which many are kept from wickedness."

Moses and Aaron, however, did as the Lord commanded them; and when introduced to Pharaoh, Aaron cast down his rod, and it became a serpent, as had been foretold. Pharaoh was probably surprised at this, but as he had doubtless seen many surprising things done by his magicians, he called for them, "the wise men and the sorcerers," who did in like manner with (or by) their enchantments. "For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents; but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods—his serpent, their serpents." This is the first sign or miracle that Moses wrought "before Pharaoh and his servants," the design of which seems prophetic of the issue. Moses passed no judgment on the performances of the magicians, but only showed that he acted by a superior power. We shall also pass no judgment, till we see how far the magicians can go with their enchantments; and where they are obliged to say, "This is the finger of God," we shall pause to offer some remarks.

By the second miracle, which was the first of the ten plagues of Egypt, the water of the river, (Nile,) which was remarkable for its sweetness, was turned into blood, so that it was not drinkable, and all the fish therein died. Here also we are told, the magicians "did so with their enchantments;" but what did they? The Nile, &c. had been already changed; and, therefore, if they turned water into blood, it must have been in small quantities, which one would think not difficult, when there was so much at hand. But even this is not said; and the fact as-

Ver. 9. Show a miracle for you.—Or, "Give a sign" or wonder, (so render ver. 3.) to support your pretensions.

Ver. 10. It became a serpent.—It is remarkable, that when at Horeb, Moses threw down his rod, it became a nachim, the usual term for a serpent: but when Aaron threw down his rod, it became a tannin; a dragon, or large serpent. Is this to be accounted for on the supposition that Aaron's rod was larger than that of Moses? The Editor of Calmet understands the latter of a water-serpent, or rather, "a lengthened fresh-water reptile;" the former suited to an inland situation, the latter to the banks of a river.

Ver. 11. And Pharaoh called the wise men.—"Wise men" chaminim, men of learning. "Sorcerers," ashaphim, diviners, men who find out secrets of men's lost goods, &c. "Magicians," charetemey, astrologers, and decipherers of hieroglyphics and mystical writings. "They did in like manner by their enchantments," lahatim, flame and smoke, used under pretence of invoking demons, and at the same time well calculated to aid deception. St. Paul has preserved the names of two of these magicians, (probably their leaders,) viz. "Jannes and Jambres," who withstood Moses.—2 Tim. iii. 8.

Ver. 13. He hardened Pharaoh's heart.—Rather, "Pharaoh's heart was hardened," as in ver. 22, the Hebrew is the same in both places. See Presid. Edwards' Notes on the Bible, vol. ix. new edition.

Ver. 14. Pharaoh's heart is hardened.—A different word is here used, caded, meaning heavy, stupid, insensible.

Ver. 15. Lo, he goeth out unto the water.—That is, to bathe, and probably make religious ablutions.

Ver. 18. Shall loathe to drink.—"The water of Egypt," says the Abbe Mascricr, "is so delicious, that one would not wish the heat to be less, or to be delivered from the sensation of thirst. The Turks find it so exquisite, that they excite themselves to drink of it by eating salt." "A person," adds Harmer, "who never before heard of the deliciousness of the Nile water, and of the large quantities which on that account are drunk of it, will, I am sure, find an energy in those words of Moses to Pharaoh,—The Egyptians shall loathe to drink of the water of the river, which he never did before."—Bagster.

Turned into blood.—It is certain this expression is sometimes used figuratively, for a change in appearance only, as in Joel ii. 31. "The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood," where certainly no transformation is intended. It has therefore been supposed, that the change was only in colour. It also has been asserted by many credible travellers, as Mau-drell, Pococke, and Mallet, that the waters of the Nile, at their height, have often a red appearance, (from a sediment of red earth,) and a purgative quality. But, in answer, it may be remarked, 1. This was before the harvest, (chap. ix. 31.) three or four months before the usual time for the rising of the Nile. 2. That though the water at these seasons becomes purgative and unpleasant, we hear nothing of its killing the fishes, and causing the river to stink.

23 And Pharaoh turned and went into his house, neither did he set his heart to this also.

24 And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river.

25 And seven days were fulfilled after that the Lord had smitten the river.

CHAPTER VIII.

Frogs are sent. 16 The dust is turned into lice. 20 The swarms of flies. 25 Pharaoh inclineth to let the people go, 32 but yet is hardened.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 And if thou refuse to let them go, behold, I will smite all thy borders with frogs:

3 And the river shall bring forth frogs abundantly, which shall go up and come into thy house, and into thy bed-chamber, and upon thy bed, and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thine ovens, and into thy kneading troughs:

4 And the frogs shall come up both on thee, and upon thy people, and upon all thy servants.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch forth thy hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt.

6 And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.

7 And the magicians did so with their en-chantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 ¶ Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Entreat the LORD that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people: and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, Glory over me: when shall I entreat for thee and for thy servants, and for thy people, to destroy the frogs from thee, and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only?

10 And he said, To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word; that thou mayest know that there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

12 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses cried unto the LORD, because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses: and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps: and the land stank.

15 But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

appears to be, that they only repeated the preliminary ceremonies; (as afterwards, in the miracle of the lice;) and Pharaoh, whether from disgust or carelessness, "turned" upon his heel, and went to his own house, without waiting to see the issue. We shall, therefore, only observe here, that Pharaoh might read his sin in his punishment. He had stained the Nile with the blood of the Hebrew infants, and now one that had escaped his cruel vigilance, is the instrument of turning all the stream to blood. "Thou art righteous, O Lord! Thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy!" (Rev. xvi. 6.)

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—32. The plagues of frogs, and lice, and flies.—The plague of frogs is both threatened and inflicted; and though beforehand it might be despised, yet in the infliction it proved a very serious plague indeed, inasmuch that Pharaoh now sends for Moses and Aaron, and entreats their removal. It does not appear that in this case the magicians were called in before Pharaoh; but thinking they should be expected to do something, instead of banishing these noisy and noisome animals, they contrived to bring up more! "Miserable comforters are ye, and physicians of no value." (Job xvi. 2. xiii. 4.)

At the prayer of Moses the frogs now die, and the Egyptians were employed in gathering them into heaps, where they putrefied and stank. But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto Moses and Aaron, "as the Lord had said." Another and more grievous judgment therefore follows, namely, lice, or other vermin; but whether with or without wings, is not certain. They were creatures that fixed themselves upon the skin of both men and cattle, and occasioned extreme and perpetual torment. The magicians again tried their skill, but it was now in vain; and they were obliged to give up the contest, and confess "the finger of God"—probably meaning, though not daring to say, the God of Israel—"in it;" still, however, such was the stupid obstinacy and stubbornness of Pharaoh's heart, that he would not submit. Another plague therefore quickly follows, which, whether it consisted of a particular species of flies, as some think, or a swarm of various kinds, appears to have more affected the king than any of the preceding; particularly as they swarmed in the palace, and annoyed his own servants. Pharaoh now therefore professes himself willing to come to terms.

8. Moses could never expect to alarm Pharaoh by predicting a natural and common phenomenon, which was always expected with great anxiety instead of dread.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 2. Frogs.—Tzephardeim, is evidently the same with the Arabic, zafda, Chaldaic, ordeanaya, and Syriac, ordeat, all of which denote frogs, as almost all interpreters, both ancient and modern, agree to render it; probably so called, as Bochart conceives, from tzifa, a bank, and rada, mud, because of delighting in muddy and marshy places. From this circumstance the frog has many of its epithets in the Batrachomyomachia of Homer. — Bagster. Ver. 3. Into thine ovens.—Not when heated, to be sure, but when not in use. Some of the ovens of the ancients were pots of earth or stone, inserted in holes of the earth.—Dr. Clarke.—And kneading troughs.—Margin. "Troughs of dough." The Greek expounds it, "lumps of dough;" which the word seems properly to mean in chap. xii. 34.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 6. Frogs came up.—Whether the frog among the Egyptians was an object of reverence or abhorrence is uncertain. It might have been both at the same time as many objects are known to have been among particular nations;

He first proposes that the Israelites should keep their festival in the land of Egypt; but Moses rejects this offer. "It is not meet: if we sacrifice the abomination (that is, the idols) of the Egyptians before their eyes, will they not stone us?" The next proposal is, that they shall go into the wilderness, "but not very far away." He consents, at last, to give them a few days holiday, so that he can have hopes of their returning; but there was no sincerity in Pharaoh, except in his obstinacy; for no sooner are the flies removed, than Pharaoh hardened his heart this time also, and would not let Israel go.

But here, as above promised, we must offer a few brief remarks on this extraordinary contest between the magicians and Moses; between Pharaoh and Jehovah.

1. Moses and Aaron, though characters well known, both to the court of Pharaoh and to his magicians, were utterly unsupported by the former, and closely watched by the latter: they had therefore no opportunities of deception, as their opponents had: for.

2. What the magicians did was by enchantments; which, as the original implies, were accompanied with fire and smoke, and no doubt attended with ceremonies and incantations, which, if of no farther use, were certainly adapted to promote deception, as is well known to be the case among persons professing such arts.

3. It may be asked, What did the magicians do? They changed their rods (or wands) into serpents, (or water monsters,) like that of Aaron. But how did they accomplish this? Doubtless as other magicians do, by substituting one for the other; which could not be difficult, while the spectators were blinded by the smoke of their enchantments. Here, however, by their dragons being devoured by that of Aaron, the superior authority under which he acted was demonstrated. Again, if they turned water into blood, it must have been upon a small scale, and, as above observed, this is very doubtful. In the next instance, indeed, they brought up some frogs, which might be done without enchantment, when the land was filled with them.

4. It has been generally supposed, that these magicians had dealings with evil spirits, and were assisted by them; but of this we have as yet no proof. We have seen them hitherto do nothing for proof of which see the very learned Jacob Bryant, on the Plagues of Egypt. In some ancient writers we have examples of a similar plague. The Abderites, according to Orosius, and the inhabitants of Pæonia and Dardania, according to Athenæus, were obliged to abandon their country, on account of the vast number of frogs by which their land was infested. See Bochart. — Bagster.

Ver. 9. Glory over me.—Le Clerc and Houbigant, by changing one letter only of the original, (P for B,) read, "Declare unto me," as they suppose was read by the LXX. and Vulgate, who translate it, "Appoint unto me a time," &c. which is followed by Boothroyd and others; but Geddes objects that it is not supported by MSS. Might not this be a Hebrew phrase equal to "Command me;" i. e. fix your own time? Similar is the reading in our margin; "Have this honour over me: against when shall I entreat?" &c. "And he said, Against to-morrow."

Ver. 15. When he saw that there was respite.—Hebrew, "a breathing;" Greek, "a refreshing."—He hardened his heart.—Margin. "Made his heart heavy;" i. e. stupid, insensible. See chap. vii. 14. Note.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became <sup>m</sup>lice in man and in beast: all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could <sup>n</sup>not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast.

19 Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This <sup>i</sup>s the <sup>o</sup>finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

20 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; (lo, he cometh forth to the water;) and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me:

21 Else, if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send <sup>p</sup>swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will <sup>s</sup>ever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth.

23 And I will put a <sup>r</sup>division between my people and thy people: <sup>t</sup>o-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the LORD did so: and there came a grievous swarm of flies into the house of Pha-

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and entreated the LORD:

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained not one.

32 And Pharaoh <sup>z</sup> hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The murrain of beasts. 8 The plague of boils and blains. 13 The message about the hail. 22 The plague of hail. 27 Pharaoh saith to Moses, 35 but yet is hardened.

THEN the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh, and tell him, Thus saith half so wonderful as the tricks of Indian, or even English, jugglers of the present day.

5. When they came to the miracle of the lice, (or perhaps gnats,) again "the magicians did so with their enchantments." But what did they do? They made a vapouring with their incantations, but could produce nothing. They even confessed to Pharaoh himself, that they were nonplussed, and could do no more. This, said they, "is the finger of God;" implying, that hitherto they had trusted to the principles of their art, in the vain hope of rivalling Moses; but now they give up all opposition, and Pharaoh applies to them no more. Still, however, his heart was hardened, and he hearkened no more to them than to Moses and Aaron.—He would not believe.

6. What rendered these miracles more impressive to the Egyptians was, that most of them were wrought on creatures idolized by the Egyptians, as the learned Bryant has particularly remarked. The Nile was a sacred river, like the Ganges, and revered by the Egyptians, as is the latter by the Hindus. Frogs were sacred animals, as were indeed cattle. They worshipped fire and water, darkness and the sun, and indeed almost every object visible around them. Thus they worshipped the creatures instead of the Creator.

7. The plagues inflicted, for the most part, were of creatures apparently insignificant, as crawling or flying insects: not crocodiles, nor river-horses, nor any of the larger monsters of the land or water; and this might be designed to show, that God can make the smallest of his creatures equally terrible as the larger, when armed with his commission. It should be remarked also, that of the ten plagues inflicted, two only appear to have been fatal to the lives of men and cattle; namely, the seventh, (thunder and hail,) and the last, the slaying of the firstborn. The object of the Almighty was, not to destroy the Egyptians, but to display his glory. In this we may also observe an instance of righteous retribution. Pharaoh had plagued the Israelites in a variety of ways, by increasing their burdens, and the severity of their slavery; so the Lord plagued the Egyptians by a variety of judgments, till the wailing in Egypt over their firstborn, was equal to what had been in the land of Goshen: "Rachel weeping for her children." (See chap. i.)

8. Lastly, the striking distinction between the Egyptians in and about the metropolis, (Memphis,) who seem to have been the chief sufferers by these awful judgments, and the Israelites in the land of Goshen, is particularly remarked in several instances, and perhaps extended through the whole. They had no swarms of flies, no murrain, no tempest, no darkness, &c. "I will sever (separate) in that day the land of Goshen: I will put a division between my people and thy people; to the end thou mayest know that I am JEHOVAH." (Ver. 22, 23.) This exemption of Israel from the plagues is, in the original, called "a redemption." Yes; God's people are his redeemed ones, and they are redeemed from all evil. "The Angel which redeemed me from all evil (said the patriarch Israel) bless the lads!" (Gen. xlviii. 16.)

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—35. The plagues of murrain, boils, and tempest.—We have now done with the magicians, and have only to attend to Moses, and to the terrible judgments inflicted

Ver. 16, 17. Lice.—Hebrew, kinnim. [Is rendered by the LXX. and by the Vulgate, gnats; and Harmer supposes he has found out the true meaning in the word tarrentes, a species of worm. Bochart, however, seems to have proved that lice, and not gnats, are meant; because, 1. they sprang from the dust, and not from the waters; 2. they were on both man and beast, which cannot be said of gnats; 3. their name is derived from keph, to make firm, fix, establish, which cannot agree with gnats, flies, &c. which are ever changing the place, and almost constantly on the wing; 4. the term kinnah, is used by the Talmudists to express the louse. If this animal be intended, it must have been a very dreadful and afflicting plague to the Egyptians, and especially to the priests, who were obliged to shave the hair off every part of their bodies, and to wear a single linen tunic, to prevent vermin harbouring about them. See Herodotus and Bryant.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21, 22, 24. Swarms of flies.—The word flies being supplied.—The Hebrew, ar, (or) areb, means, 1. A mixture, and is so translated, chap. xii. 38. It may therefore mean a swarm of noisome insects, (not beasts, as in the margin, which is founded on a Rabbinical fiction).—Dr. Clarke; also Charles Taylor, who suggests that these insects might have been bred in the heaps of putrid frogs. Ver. 14. 2. The ravens, from its dark colour, as the word often means. So Julius Bate, Crit. Heb. 3. The black beetle, which is at first white, but in short time turns black, like the evening, from which it receives its name. So Dr. Geddes. Dr. Boothroyd explains it (on the authority of Forskal) of the viatica Egyptica, which are found at Alexandria. 4. The LXX. render it, ku- nomia, the dog-fly; which seems to be the same as our gad-fly (or gad-fly, as Skinner explains it, because it goads the cattle almost to madness.) Bruce, who found this fly in Abyssinia, (called by the Arabs zim), describes it as a most formidable creature, (bigger than a bee,) which drives not only cattle, but even camels into the desert, whither it does not follow them. 5. Bochart (who particularly studied the natural history of the Bible) inclines either to the dog-fly, or the alchurkous of the Arabs, a small but very destructive insect. The first sense, as the most comprehensive, seems also the most probable.

Ver. 22. I will sever in that day.—Ainsworth renders it, "I will marvelously sever;" the Vulgate to the same effect; and the LXX. "I will render illustrious the land of Goshen." See ch. x. 23.

Ver. 24. The land was corrupted.—Margin, "destroyed," by reason of the swarm of flies. (How incredible a plague of flies can prove, is evident from the fact, that whole districts have been laid waste by them. Such was the fate of Myrns in Ionia, and of Alarnæ.—The inhabitants were forced to quit these cities, not being able to stand against the flies and gnats with which they were pestered. Trajan was obliged to raise the siege of a city in Arabia, before which he had sat down, being driven away by the swarms of these insects. Hence different people had deities whose office it was to defend them against flies. Among these may be reckoned Baalzebub, the fly-god of Ekron; Heracles, the expeller of flies; and hence Jupiter had titles, because he was supposed to expel flies, and especially clear his temples of these insects. See Bryant.)—Bagster.

the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

2 For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still,

3 Behold, the hand of the LORD is upon thy cattle which is in the field, upon the horses, upon the asses, upon the camels, upon the oxen, and upon the sheep: there shall be a very grievous murrain.

4 And the LORD shall sever between the cattle of Israel, and the cattle of Egypt: and there shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel.

5 And the LORD appointed a set time, saying, To-morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the land.

6 And the LORD did that thing on the morrow, and all the cattle of Egypt died: but of the cattle of the children of Israel died not one.

7 And Pharaoh sent, and behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and unto Aaron, Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh.

9 And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a b boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt.

10 And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh; and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven: and it became a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast.

11 And the magicians could not c stand before Moses, because of the boil: for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he d hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had e spoken unto Moses.

13 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up on the Egyptians. The next plague is called a murrain, which is a pestilence among cattle, (and, indeed, the same word is rendered pestilence, chap. v. 3.) This is said to be "very grievous," inasmuch that we are told, "all the cattle of Egypt died." Here is a clear instance, that the term ALL must be sometimes taken in a sense very limited; for immediately after we read, that not only men, but also the beasts, (no doubt including cattle,) were visited with boils; in the following verses we read that many were killed with hail; and in the last plague, all the first-born of cattle, as well as man, were slain; and yet, after all, when the Israelites passed the Red Sea, Pharaoh pursued them with "all his horses, and his chariots, and his horsemen." (Chap. xiv. 23.) The word all, therefore, must be here and elsewhere used in the sense of many, as is customary in all languages. The visitation was, however, very severe, and very general, as we have sometimes seen the disease among horned cattle in Europe; and probably much more fatal. Among the children of Israel, however, not one died, as Pharaoh found, when his curiosity led him to inquire.

The next plague was introduced in a peculiar manner. Instead of Aaron stretching forth his rod, Moses is commanded to go to the furnace—that fiery furnace, which was the type and image of their bondage (Deut. iv. 20).—and taking a handful of the hot ashes, to sprinkle them toward heaven; and as they fall in dust, lo! "boils and blains" (or blisters) break out upon man and beast throughout the land; and it is particularly stated, CHAP. IX. Ver. 3. Grievous murrain.—[We may observe a particular scope and meaning in this calamity, if we consider it in regard to the Egyptians, which would not have existed in respect to any other people.—They held in idolatrous reverence almost every animal, but some they held in particular veneration; as the ox, cow, and ram. Among these Apis and Minus are well known: the former being a sacred bull worshipped at Memphis, as the latter was at Heliopolis. A cow or heifer had the like honours at Momemphis; and the same practice seems to have been adopted in most of the Egyptian nomes. By the infliction of this judgment, the Egyptian deities sank before the God of the Hebrews. See Bryant.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Ashes.—"Hot embers," says Bishop Loxth, in which fire may yet be excited by blowing.—Lectures.—"A boil breaking forth with blains."—It is, in Deut. xxviii. 27, emphatically called the ulcer of Egypt; and is now generally supposed to be that species of leprosy called elephantiasis.—Dr. Boothroyd.

early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

14 For I will at this time send r all my plagues upon thy heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people; that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and s thy people with pestilence; and thou shalt be cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed for h this cause have I r raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet exaltest thou i thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, k to-morrow about this time I will cause it to r rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come m down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that feared the n word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses:

21 And he that c regarded p not the word of the LORD left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thy hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt, upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven, and the LORD sent thunder and a hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground: and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was that the boil was so sore upon the magicians, that they could not stand before Moses. Bryant says, here is an allusion to human sacrifices, that used to be offered on certain occasions on this furnace, the victims of which, he thinks, were taken from the Israelites. "At the close of the sacrifice, the priests gathered together the ashes of these victims, and scattered them upwards in the air, with the view, probably, that where any atom of this dust was carried, a blessing might be entailed. The like was, therefore, done by Moses, though with a different intention, and to a more certain effect." Egypt abounded with physicians, and that for every distemper separately: many of whom were probably enrolled among the magicians, who had now to try their skill upon themselves. They also worshipped many gods who presided over the medical art, and especially Esculapius, its supposed founder.

The seventh plague was a most tremendous tempest of rain and hail, thunder and lightning, to which the Egyptians are very rarely subject: the sun, with them, was seldom obscured, even by a passing cloud, and was, therefore, a favourite object of their idolatry. The hail is said to have been "very grievous," such as that there had never been the like in that country; and was not only destructive to the produce of the earth, but capable of destroying both man and beast. Surely "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!" (Heb. x. 31.)

But let us listen to the effects of these judgments. There were some, it seems, even of the servants of Pharaoh, who for the Hebrew is in the past tense, and might be thus translated: "For now I had stretched out my hand, and had smitten thee and thy people with the pestilence, and thou hadst been cut off from the earth: but in very deed, for this cause have I raised thee up, [or made thee to stand (Marg.) as a monument,] for to show in thee my power; and that my name might be declared through all the earth.—See Ainsworth.

Ver. 18. Very grievous hail.—[This must have been a circumstance of all others the most incredible to an Egyptian: for in Egypt there fell no rain, the want of which was supplied by dews, and the overflowing of the Nile. The Egyptians must, therefore, have perceived themselves particularly aimed at in these fearful events, especially as they were very superstitious. There seems likewise a propriety in their being punished by fire and water, as they were guilty of the grossest idolatry towards these elements. Scarcely any thing could have distressed the Egyptians more than the destruction of the flax, as the whole nation wore linen garments. The ruin of their barley was equally fatal, both to their trade, and to their private advantage. See Bryant.]—Bagster.

none like it in all the land of Egypt since it became a nation.

25 And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast; and the hail smote every herb of the field and brake every tree of the field.

26 Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

27 ¶ And Pharaoh sent and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, I have sinned this time: the Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

28 Entreat the Lord (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer.

29 And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will spread abroad my hands unto the Lord; and the thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know how that the earth is the Lord's.

30 But as for thee and thy servants, I know that ye will not yet fear the Lord God.

31 And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was boiled.

32 But the wheat and the rye were not smitten: for they were not grown up.

Pharaoh, and spread abroad his hands unto the Lord: and the thunders and hail ceased, and the rain was not poured upon the earth.

34 And when Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunders were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants.

35 And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Israel go; as the Lord had spoken by Moses.

CHAPTER X.

1 God threateth to send locusts. 7 Pharaoh inclineth to let the Israelites go. 12 The plague of the locusts: 21 the plague of darkness. 24 Pharaoh saith again unto Moses, 27 but yet is hardened.

AND the Lord said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh: for I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants; that I might shew these my signs before him:

2 And that thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son, and of thy son's son, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my signs which I have done among them; that ye may know how that I am the Lord.

3 And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of the Hebrews, How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? Let my people go, that they may serve me.

4 Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast:

feared the word of the Lord, and "made their servants and cattle flee into their houses; but he that regarded not the word of the Lord, left his servants and cattle in the field" to perish.

But what said Pharaoh? When visited by the former plagues, Pharaoh was willing to negotiate with Moses, and professed his readiness to let the people go upon certain conditions; but no sooner were those plagues removed, than he returns to his former obstinacy; for the Lord now hardened Pharaoh's heart. "The Lord (says Scott) had twice declared that he would harden the heart of Pharaoh; (chap. iv. 21; vii. 3.) but this is the first time in which it is expressly said, that 'the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart'; though the expression is several times repeated. Hence we may infer, that as God had before permitted a variety of events, which had a tendency to confirm Pharaoh's obduracy, so now, in punishment of his presumptuous rebellion, he totally gave him up to his own lusts, and to the power of Satan." (See Scott's Notes on ch. vii.) According to Bp. Patrick, "The sentence of destruction was (now) irreversibly denounced against him; and God resolved so to dispose things, that he . . . should run headlong to his ruin." Hitherto he had been the subject of divine forbearance, but respites and remissions of punishment having only hardened him, he is now "set up as a monument" of vengeance and of justice. (See note on verse 15.) For man's obduracy exempts him neither from obligations to obedience, or to punishment. The next plague, however, was so terrible, that Pharaoh puts on the semblance of penitence, and uses the language of contrition. "I have sinned this time (also): the Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked." From the weight of several of these judgments, it is likely Pharaoh had personally suffered little; but the thunder had now rolled over his palace, the hail had rattled on his domes, and the fire of heaven had played in awful vividness before his eyes, and he is alarmed in earnest. "Now," says he, "I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer." Yet the tempest no sooner ceased, than "Pharaoh sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants."

CHAP. X. Ver. 1-29. The plagues of locusts and of darkness.—Nothing seems more extraordinary in this narrative, than to hear that, time after time, Moses is sent to Pharaoh with the same message, urging and entreating their deliverance, when the launching of a single thunderbolt would at once have laid the royal rebel in the dust, and have delivered Israel: but, as in a multitude of instances, sinners are spared to be the monuments of special mercy; so in others are they raised up as the monuments of God's righteous vengeance. (Rom. ix. 22.) Lot's wife was a pillar of salt, to warn professors against apos-tacy: Pharaoh is (as it were) a pillar of adamant, to teach future ages that no sinner can "harden himself against God and prosper." (Job ix. 4.) "Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?" (1 Cor. x. 22.) "Wo unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth." (Isa. xlv. 9.)

Pharaoh, however, still "striveth with his Maker." From his language in the preceding chapter, we might have been led to hope his heart was softened:—"Entreat the Lord for me, that there be no more mighty thunderings;" but no sooner do the thunders cease to roll, than Pharaoh's obduracy returns. It is remarkable, that the greatest tyrants, and the greatest infidels, have trembled at a thunder-storm. Nero and Voltaire are well known instances in point.

Moses is now sent to announce the plague of locusts; but while he is delivering his message, the monarch shows such signs of inattention or disgust, that the prophet turns round upon his heel, (as the monarch had done before from the magicians, ch. vii. 22.) and leaves him.

But the servants of Pharaoh, at least some of them, seem to be differently impressed. With no more regard to the God of Israel than Pharaoh, they are alarmed, and seem ready to mutiny. They knew that all the judgments which Moses had hitherto denounced had really happened, and they trembled at the thought of locusts, as leading to a famine. "How long shall this man (Moses) be a snare to us? . . . Knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?"

The king is startled at this, and sending for Moses and Aaron to return back, offers fresh terms. "Go and serve JEHOVAH your God; but who (as the margin renders it, Who and who) shall go?" Moses replies, "We must all go, and hold a feast unto JEHOVAH." Upon this, Pharaoh assumes a threatening attitude, and forbids them on their peril. The men he agrees to let go; but insists upon retaining the women and children, and all their property, as a pledge for their return: "If ye go, look to it; for evil is before you."

But there is no trifling with the Lord. Moses, at his command, stretches forth his rod, and behold, the east wind brings up an army of locusts, great and terrible, such as never had been seen before; so numerous, that the air is darkened by their flight; so destructive, that "they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left." Now Pharaoh again calls for Moses and Aaron in haste, and confesses that he had sinned, and begs Moses again to pray for him. Alas! how many are there who implore the prayers of others, who never pray for themselves? There is as little

Ver. 29. I will stretch forth my hands.—Namely, in prayer, of which this was a usual attitude, 2 Chron. vi. 13. Ps. cxlii. 6. Ezra ix. 5. Job xi. 13. Ver. 31. The flax and the barley were smitten.—"In Egypt, they did not sow (as we do) wheat and rye in autumn, and barley and flax in spring, but both in autumn; so that barley and flax would be forwarder than wheat or rye, which is otherwise with us. Their barley must be almost ripe, for this was about the beginning of Abib, in which month (the passover) barley is ripe in those countries." Dr. Wall's Crit. N.—The flax was boiled.—That is, in pod.

CHAP. X. Ver. 4. Locusts.—[The word arbeh, Locust, is derived from raphah, To multiply, be numerous, &c. because they are more prolific than any other animal, and because of the immense swarms of them by which different countries, especially the East, are infested. The locust, in entomology, belongs to a genus of insects known among naturalists by the name of Grylli; which includes three species, crickets, grasshoppers, and locusts. The common great brown locust is about three inches in length; has two antennae about an inch long, and two pair of wings. The head and horns are brown; the mouth and inside of the larger legs bluish; the upper side of the body and upper wings brown, the former spotted with black, and the latter with dusky spots. The back is defended by a shield of a greenish hue; the under wings are of a light brown, tinged with green, and nearly transparent. It has a large open mouth; in the two jaws of which it has four teeth, which traverse each other like scissors, being calculated, from their mechanism, to gripe or cut. The general form and appearance of the insect is that of the grasshopper, so well known in this country.]—Bagster. Thevenot says, they come in vast clouds, which extend from fifteen to eighteen miles in length, and from nine to twelve in breadth, so as to obscure the brightest day. This is confirmed by other travellers.—Orient. Ed. See Joel ii. 20

5 And they shall cover the <sup>1</sup> face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and they shall eat the <sup>2</sup> residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field:

6 And they shall fill thy <sup>3</sup> houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, How long shall this man be <sup>4</sup> a snare unto us? Let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: Knowest thou not yet that Egypt is destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: but <sup>5</sup> who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, We will go with our young and with our old, with our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go: for we must hold a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: look to it; for evil is before you.

11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD; for that ye did desire. And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch <sup>6</sup> out thy hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night: and when it was morning, the <sup>7</sup> east wind brought the locusts.

14 And the <sup>8</sup> locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; before them there were no such <sup>9</sup> locusts as they, neither after them shall be such.

15 For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left:

1 God's message to the Israelites to borrow jewels of their neighbours. 4 Moses threateneth Pharaoh with the death of their first-born.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, sincerity, however, in Pharaoh now as before; for no sooner had a west wind driven the locusts back into the Red Sea, than we are again told, "he would not let the children of Israel go." Without any warning, therefore, the whole land is involved in "three days' thick darkness—darkness that might be felt;" except only the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel had "light in all their dwellings;" but the Egyptians sat in darkness, and were afraid to move. Once more, therefore, Pharaoh submits, and calls for Moses, and consents that the Israelites shall go, with their wives and children, but not their cattle. Moses, on the contrary, enlarges in his demands, as no doubt instructed: not only must they "not leave a hoof behind," but Pharaoh, as the penalty of his repeated prevarications, must now give them sacrifices and burnt-offerings to offer to JEHOVAH. Pharaoh becomes enraged, and, instead of desiring Moses to intercede for him, forbids him to see his face again; to which the latter replies, "Thou hast spoken well, I will see thy face again no more."

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—10. God's message to the Israelites.—It had been foretold to them, "Ye shall not go out empty." (Gen. xv. 14.) Preparatory, therefore, to the last plague, which was to procure their deliverance, they are directed to ask (not borrow, see chap. iii. 22.) of the Egyptians, jewels and such other articles, as they might be disposed to give. We have already seen that they were much alarmed, and anxious for their departure, and would themselves be gladly rid of them on any terms. Besides this, the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians; so that, partly from pity, on account of their ill-treatment, and partly from fear of offending the God of Israel, they acted very liberally towards them. Moses, also, though threatened by Pharaoh, was "very great in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people."

Ver. 5. The face of the earth.—The Hebrew reads, "The eye of the earth." The Chaldee explains this of the sun, which is often called by our poets the eye of heaven, and may be here called the eye of the earth, as essential to our seeing material objects. A cloud of locusts, as just mentioned, shades the sun like a dark cloud.

Ver. 6. Shall fill thy houses.—Dr. Sharo, speaking of the locusts, says, "they entered into our houses, and bed-chambers, like so many thieves."

Ver. 13. East wind.—[These fearful insects are described by both ancient and modern writers as being brought by one wind, and carried off by another, in such clouds, as to darken the sun; covering the earth, wherever they alight, many leagues round, and six or eight inches in depth; and devouring every thing with such rapidity, that fire itself eats not so fast; and winter instantly succeeds to the bright scenes of spring. The Egyptians had gods in whom they trusted to deliver them from these terrible invaders; but by this judgment they were taught, that it was impossible to stand before Moses, the servant of Jehovah. See Bryant.]—Bagster

Ver. 19. A strong west wind.—In the Hebrew it is "A strong sea-wind," i. e. from the Mediterranean Sea, which was N. W. of Egypt. The fact is, a S. E. wind, from the Red Sea, blew them hither, and a N. W. drove them back again.

Ver. 21. Darkness which may be felt.—Margin, "That one may feel darkness." (As the Egyptians not only worshipped the light and sun, but also paid the same veneration to night and darkness, nothing could be more apposite than this punishment of palpable and coercive darkness, such as their luminary Osiris could not dispel. See Bryant.)—Bagster. Taylor (the late editor of Calmet) understands this of a remarkably dense fog, such as we have in London, and which has been sometimes so thick, that it has been said proverbially, "it may be cut with a knife." This would appear to the Egyptians as miraculous as any of the former visitations. Three days, among the Hebrews, often means one whole day, with some part of the preceding and following; as in the cases of Jonah in the whale's belly, and our Lord in the tomb; and possibly it may be so used here.

and upon Egypt; afterwards he will let you go hence; when he shall let you go, he shall surely thrust you out<sup>a</sup> hence altogether.

2 Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold.

3 And the Lord gave the people<sup>b</sup> favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man Moses was very<sup>c</sup> great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 And Moses said, Thus saith the Lord, About<sup>d</sup> midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt:

5 And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall<sup>e</sup> die, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill; and all the first-born of beasts.

6 And there shall be a great<sup>f</sup> cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more.

7 But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his<sup>g</sup> tongue, against man or beast: that ye may know how that the Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

8 And all these thy<sup>h</sup> servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the<sup>i</sup> people that follow thee; and after that I will go out. And he went out from Pharaoh in<sup>j</sup> a great anger.

CHAPTER XII.

3 The passover is instituted. 29 The first-born are slain. 31 The Israelites are driven out of the land.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying,

2 This<sup>a</sup> month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

3 ¶ Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a<sup>b</sup> lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for a house:

4 And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls: every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb shall be without<sup>c</sup> blemish, a<sup>d</sup> male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats:

6 And ye shall keep it up until the<sup>e</sup> fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall<sup>f</sup> kill it in the<sup>g</sup> evening.

7 And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side-posts and on the upper door-posts of the houses, wherein they shall eat it.

8 And they shall eat the flesh in that night,

"And Moses said,"—but to whom the text does not say. In the close of the preceding chapter, Moses and Pharaoh had parted for ever: this message, therefore, must probably have been sent in to Pharaoh by some of his servants, while Moses waited at the door, from which he "came out in great anger," no attention being paid to his message from Jehovah. But as a reason for this, it is added, "The Lord [had] said unto Moses, Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt."

When it is threatened "all the first-born shall die," we are not, perhaps, to confine it to the literal sense exactly; but where there were not children, to include the next of kin, or heir. Thus the author of the Book of Wisdom explains it—(chap. xviii. 11, 12). "In one moment the noblest offspring of them was destroyed." So that it was literally true, as we are told, (chap. x. 10). "There was not a house where there was not one dead." In reference to this it had been said, "there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt." For this the Egyptians were remarkable. All the relations, of both sexes, when a death occurred, quitted the house and ran wild about the streets, the women with their hair loose and their bosoms bare, beating themselves, shrieking and howling as they passed along. It is easy, therefore, to conceive, that great and terrible indeed must have been the confusion, when "Pharaoh and all his servants, and all the Egyptians, rose up in the night," to wail and to lament. But from both the mortality and the lamentation were the children of Israel exempted; inasmuch that not even a dog moved his tongue, either to bark or to howl, among them.

But here again we may remark a just retribution upon Pharaoh, with even a balance of mercy in his favour. The Lord

CHAP. XI. Ver. 3. Egyptians, &c.—[The Samaritan Text has here an important addition: "So that they shall give them what they ask. Ver. 4. For about midnight I will go forth into the midst of the land of Egypt. 5. And every first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sitteth upon his throne unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is behind the mill; and even unto the first-born of every beast. 6. And there shall be a great cry through all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more. 7. But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or even against beast, that thou mayest know that Jehovah doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel. 8. And thou also shalt be greatly honoured in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people. 9. Then Moses said unto Pharaoh, Thus saith Jehovah, Israel is my son, my first-born; and I said unto thee, Let my son go that he may serve me. 10. But thou hast refused to let him go; behold, Jehovah slayeth thy son, thy first-born.—See Kennicott's Remarks.]—Baggerster.

Ver. 5. The maid-servant that is behind the mill.—In many parts of the East they still grind their corn with a kind of portable mill, like the querns formerly used in England, and still in some parts of Scotland. They were always worked by female slaves, and sometimes placed in their lap. When the mill was large, or the labour heavy, then two women were employed; hence the expression of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 40.

Ver. 7. Not a dog shall move his tongue.—[Though so many thousand people would be on their march, with their wives, children, numerous herds of cattle, &c. yet this should produce so little alarm, that even the dogs should not had smitten the first-born of Egypt, one in every house; but Pharaoh had decreed the death of all the male children; of one half the rising population. But fourscore years back, and Rachel was heard "weeping for her children," on the banks of the Nile, "and would not be comforted," now JEHOVAH hath arisen to plead her cause; Egypt weeps, and there is none to comfort her!

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—28. The passover instituted.—It is generally believed that from the creation to this time the year had begun at the autumnal equinox; but now a new year is instituted, generally known as the Ecclesiastical year, because by it the feasts and fasts of the Jews were regulated, and from this was a new era formed. This year began about the vernal equinox, the month Abib (or Nisan) commencing in the middle of our March. (See Introduction.) The new era was the Exodus, or departure from Egypt, and the festival by which it was to be annually commemorated was the passover; the particulars of which are so clearly and minutely detailed, as to require little or no explanation. But it may be asked, What is meant by executing judgment "against all the gods of Egypt?" This was done, in the first place, when the river which the Egyptians idolized was turned into blood; and when the creatures which they held sacred (as frogs, &c.) were made the instruments of their punishment; and more fully, when the first-born of all their cattle were destroyed; for it is certain that they worshipped cattle, particularly the goat, the ram, and the ox, Apis. Because, however, the term Elohim is sometimes used for kings, judges, or magistrates, our translators have placed the word "princes" in the margin; and some commentators understand it as a judgment upon the higher classes, who were equally sharers in the common calamity bark at them, which it would be natural to expect. It seems to be a proverbial expression, intimating, that the Israelites should not only be free from this death, but that they should depart without any kind of molestation.]—Baggerster.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 3. On the tenth day.—That is, four days before the lamb was to be eaten, that they might properly examine it, and not have to seek it when they should be called to sacrifice it. This, however, was not thought necessary after the first observance, the day before being considered as the preparation of the Passover. (Matt. xxvii. 62.)—A lamb, "or kid,"—[The word seh, means the young of both sheep and goats, and may be indifferently rendered either lamb or kid. It is evident from ver. 5, that the Hebrews might take either; but they generally preferred a lamb, from being of a more gentle nature.—Lamb for a house.—The Israelites were divided into twelve tribes, these tribes into families, the families into houses, and the houses into particular persons.]—Baggerster.

Ver. 6. In the evening.—Hebrew, "Between the two evenings;" that is, in the afternoon, before sunset.—Ainsworth.—[The Jews divided the day into morning and evening: till the sun passed the meridian, all was morning or forenoon; after that all was evening or afternoon. Their first evening began just after twelve o'clock, and continued till sunset; their second evening, or twilight,—between twelve o'clock, therefore, and the termination of twilight, the passover was to be offered.]—Baggerster.

Ver. 8. Unleavened bread (or rather cakes) was made without yeast, or any other kind of leaven.—Bitter herbs.—The Jews reckon cichory, wild lettuce, horehound, &c.—Ainsworth roast with fire, and <sup>h</sup> unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it.

9 Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

10 And ye shall let nothing of <sup>i</sup> it remain until the morning: and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.

11 ¶ And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand: and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the LORD's passover.

12 For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast: and against all the <sup>j</sup> gods of <sup>k</sup> Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD.

13 And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to <sup>l</sup> destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a <sup>m</sup> feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

15 Seven <sup>n</sup> days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh <sup>o</sup> day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

16 And in the first day there shall be a <sup>p</sup> holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you: no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every <sup>q</sup> man must eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance for ever.

19 Seven days shall there be no <sup>l</sup> leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land.

20 Ye shall eat nothing leavened: in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 ¶ Then Moses called for all the elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out, and take you a <sup>l</sup> lamb, according to your families, and kill the <sup>l</sup> passover.

22 And ye shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and <sup>l</sup> strike the lintel and the two side-posts with the blood that is in the basin: and none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning.

26 And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, <sup>l</sup> What mean ye by this service?

27 That ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the LORD's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people bowed the head and <sup>l</sup> worshipped.

28 And the children of Israel went away, and did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

with the lower. Some of the Rabbins add, that at this time all their idolatrous images were cast down and broken by an earthquake; but for this they give no authority.

But let us turn our attention to the Christian passover; as St. Paul saith, "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Cor. v. 7.) Let us compare the Jewish and the Christian sacrifice. 1. This passover marked a new era among the Jews, and they continued to reckon by it (according to Dr. Clarke) till the building of the Temple: but the incarnation of Christ marked the Christian era, which continues to the present day, and will, doubtless, to the world's end, the years of which are marked as the years of our redemption. 2. The sacrifice was a lamb; evidently pointing to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (John i. 29.) 3. The lamb was to be roasted whole, as it is said verse 46, "A bone of it shall not be broken;" which words are applied by the Evangelist to the body of our Lord. (John xix. 36.) And Justin Martyr makes the form in which the animal was suspended, figurative of the death of crucifixion. 4. It was to be thoroughly roasted, as typical of the extreme sufferings of the Lamb of God, under a sense of the divine wrath due to sin and sinners, when he prayed, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me;" and again, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. xxvi. 39.; xxvii. 46.) 5. The application of the blood of the sacrifice, by sprinkling it on the lintels of the door-posts, clearly points to the application of "the blood of sprinkling" to the hearts and consciences of believers. (Heb. xii. 24.; 1 Pet. i. 2.) 6. The paschal lamb was to be eaten. "To eat the flesh and drink the blood" of the Son of God, is to receive his truth and believe on him. (John vi. 53.)

Ver. 9. Eat not of it raw.—"The raw, whereof the law warneth us, is flesh roasted a little, but not fit for man to eat."—Maimonides. But it is said the Egyptians ate raw flesh in honour of Osiris; and we know that the Ethiopians eat it to the present day.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 10. Let nothing remain till the morning.—That is, as some think, lest it should putrify, which meat will soon do in hot countries. But there seems another reason: they were about to flee from Egypt, and were not to leave the holy sacrifice to be profaned by idolaters.

Ver. 11. With your loins girded.—This order was peculiar to the first celebration, on account of their leaving Egypt immediately after; as were some other circumstances.

7. It was to be eaten with "bitter herbs," signifying repentance and contrition. And with unleavened bread; and all leaven was to be banished from their houses: in like manner are Christ's disciples cautioned against the leaven of malice, and of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. (1 Cor. v. 8.; Luke xii. 1.) 8. It was to be eaten in the dress and attitude of travellers; so are we, as the Hebrews of old, to confess ourselves "pilgrims and strangers on the earth," seeking for another and "a better country." (Ephes. vi. 14.; Heb. xi. 14—16.; 1 Pet. ii. 11.) And as they fled from Egypt to the land of Canaan, so are we to "flee for refuge to the hope set before us in the Gospel." (Heb. vi. 18.) 9. It was to be eaten in their houses, that is, privately, and among themselves; no Egyptian, nor any un-circumcised person, was to partake with them; and thus is Christ our passover spiritually eaten by those only who belong to his family. "For what communion hath light with darkness? or what concord hath Christ with Belial?" (2 Cor. vi. 15.) Lastly, it is remarkable that Christ was sacrificed for us on the very same day; for after he had eaten the passover on the Thursday night, (as we reckon it) on the following morning, which the Hebrews reckoned as the same day, he gave "himself for us an offering and a sacrifice of sweet smelling savour."—(Ephes. v. 2.)

Thus it was, "through faith" in the appointed means of salvation, that Moses and the Israelites "kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them." (Heb. xi. 28.)

"Jesus, our Passover, was slain,
And has at once procured
Freedom from Satan's heavy chain
And God's avenging sword."

Ver. 22. Hyssop.—[The word aiwon, which has been variously rendered, most probably denotes Hyssop; whence are derived the Chaldee aiwon, Syriac, zupha, Arabic, zupha, Ethiopic, azah, and hushopa, Greek, ussopos, Latin, hyssopus, German usop, and our hyssop, a name retained, with little variation, in all the western languages. It is a plant of the gymnospermia (naked seeded) order, belonging to the diadymnia class. It has bushy stalks, growing a foot and a half high; small spear shaped, close-sitting and opposite leaves, with several smaller ones rising from the same joint; and all the stalks and branches terminated by erect whorled spikes of flowers, of different colours in the varieties of the plant. The leaves have an aromatic smell, and a warm pungent taste; and are particularly recommended in humoral asthmas, and 29 ¶ And it came to pass, that at midnight the LORD smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the <sup>a</sup> dungeon; and all the first-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great <sup>b</sup> cry in Egypt: for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

31 ¶ And he <sup>c</sup> called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel: and go, serve the LORD, as ye have said.

32 Also take your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone: and <sup>d</sup> bless me also.

33 And the Egyptians were <sup>e</sup> urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, We be all dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their <sup>f</sup> kneading troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders.

35 And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses: and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment.

36 And the LORD <sup>g</sup> gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required: and they spoiled the Egyptians.

37 ¶ And the children of Israel journeyed from <sup>h</sup> Rameses to Succoth, about <sup>i</sup> six hundred thousand on foot that were men, besides children.

38 And a <sup>j</sup> mixed <sup>k</sup> multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened: because they were 40 ¶ Now the sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt, was <sup>i</sup> four hundred and thirty years.

41 And it came to pass, at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is <sup>m</sup> a night to be <sup>n</sup> much observed unto the LORD, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.

43 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the <sup>o</sup> ordinance of the passover: there shall no stranger eat thereof:

44 But every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast <sup>p</sup> circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 A <sup>q</sup> foreigner, and a hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house: neither shall ye break a <sup>r</sup> bone thereof.

47 All the congregation of Israel shall keep <sup>s</sup> it.

48 And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 One <sup>t</sup> law shall be to him that is home-born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 And it came to <sup>u</sup> pass the self-same day, that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of <sup>v</sup> Egypt by their armies.

Ver. 29—51. The firstborn in Egypt slain, and the Israelites delivered.—"When the admonitions of conscience are invariably resisted, (says Robinson of Leicester,) and the judgments of God despised, there is little hope. The heart becomes more and more insensible to good, and is more readily carried away by every vile affection: and hence those who have been once awakened, and return to folly, are generally the most desperate of offenders. Very awful calamities had been inflicted upon Pharaoh, and others were denounced; but still he maintained his opposition, in defiance of all that God could do against him. According to the intimation, then, which had been given, after three preceding days of total darkness, the angel of the Lord went forth at midnight, and destroyed the first-born of every Egyptian family. The consternation produced by the tremendous visitation throughout the land, was beyond all description. Cries of distress were heard in every house; and the king himself was filled with horror and amazement. Then he appeared, indeed, to yield the conquest, and to comply with the terms proposed. He called for Moses and Aaron, whom he had a little before threatened with death, and even requested them, with all the congregation of Israel, immediately to quit the country; (without imposing upon them one limitation or restraint;) and, through an impression of terror, entreated them to bless him before their departure. Nay, to hasten their flight, both he and his subjects were urgent upon the people, and loaded them with the riches of the kingdom." (Script. Char.)

The children of Israel, as might have been expected, wanted no entreaty to go; only, after so many years of servitude, they were not willing to go altogether without some reward; and the Lord gave them so great favour with the Egyptians, that they freely gave them whatever they required.

The children of Israel being thus liberated, set out from Rameses, perhaps the capital of Goshen, to Succoth, a city of tents; and both these, probably, the treasure cities built by the children of Israel, (as mentioned chap. i. 11.) and between these it should seem they collected the prodigious number of persons here mentioned and implied. On which Hall here remarks—"Old Jacob's seventy souls, which he brought down into Egypt, in spite of their bondage and bloodshed, go forth six hundred thousand men, besides children. The world is well mended with Israel, since he went with his staff and his other disorders of the breast and lungs, and greatly promote expectation. Its detensive, cleansing, and medicinal qualities were probably the reason why it was so particularly recommended in Scripture. —BAGSTER.

Ver. 29. Midnight.—[The infliction of this judgment on the Egyptians was most equitable: because after their nation had been preserved by one of the Israelish family, they had, contrary to all right, and in defiance of original stipulation, enslaved the people, to whom they had been so much indebted, had murdered their offspring, and made their bondage intolerable. See Bryant.] —BAGSTER. —In the dungeon.—The Hebrew reads, as in the margin, "house of the pit," such were the dungeons of former times.

Ver. 34. Their kneading (or dough) troughs bound up, &c.—The vessels which the Arabs use for kneading their unleavened cakes, are only small wooden bowls, in which they afterwards serve up their provisions.—Orient. Cust. The Arabs have also leathern utensils, in which they carry their provisions, and which they spread for a table cloth.—Harmer's Obs.

Ver. 35, 36. They (the children of Israel) borrowed.—They (the Egyptians) lent.—"Since the translation of the Bible into the English tongue is so excellent a performance in itself, and so necessary a service to the Church, (says Watts,) I feel a sensible regret, whenever there is occasion to complain of it, to correct it. With exactly the same sentiments and feelings, we must repeat the remark made in a preceding chapter. (Note, ch. iii. 22.) that this is a most unhappy translation;" but our venerable translators were by no means aware of the handle which would be made of it. The fact is, the Israelites asked and the Egyptians gave, and gave freely, to be rid of them. In addition to the authorities already cited, we now add those of Dr. John Taylor's Heb. Concordance, Parkhurst's Heb. Lex., and Leigh's Crit. Sac.

Ver. 37. Rameses (or Raames) to Succoth.—Perhaps these were the treasure cities (in Heb. Mitschenath) referred to chap. i. 11.—Calmeth's Dict.

Ver. 40. The sojourning of Israel 430 years.—Gen. xv. 13. the time is stated at only 400 years; but the texts are thus reconciled. It was 400 years from Ishmael's mocking Isaac, the beginning of their affliction; but from Abraham's entering Canaan, the commencement of their sojourning, was 430 years.—Comp. on Gen. xv. 30. In the text of Genesis, the Samaritan copy, after the words children of Israel, adds, "they and their fathers, in the land of Canaan, and in the land of Egypt;" which makes it more explicit. [The Samaritan Pentateuch, in all its manuscripts and printed copies, reads: "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel, and of their fathers in the land of Canaan and in the land of Egypt was 430 years." The Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint has the same reading; and the same statement is made by the Apostle Paul, in Gal. iii. 17. who reckons from the promise made to Abraham to the giving of the law. That these three witnesses have the truth, the chronology itself proves; for it is evident that the descendants of Israel did not dwell 400 years in Egypt; while it is equally evident that the period from Abraham's entry into Canaan to the Exodus, is exactly that number. Thus, from Abraham's entrance into the promised land to the birth of Isaac was 25 years; Isaac was 60 at the birth of Jacob; Jacob was 130 at his going into Egypt; where he and his children continued 215 years more; making in the whole 480 years. See Kennicott's Dissertation on the Hebrew Text.]—BAGSTER.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The first-born are sanctified to God. 3 The memorial of the passover is commanded. 17 The Israelites go out of Egypt. 21 God guideth them by a pillar of a cloud, and a pillar of fire.

AND THE LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Sanctify unto me all the <sup>a</sup> first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, Remember this <sup>b</sup> day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of <sup>c</sup> bondage; for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this <sup>d</sup> place: there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 This day came ye out, <sup>d</sup> in the month Abib.

5 And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he <sup>e</sup> sware unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey; that thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 Seven <sup>f</sup> days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days: and there shall <sup>g</sup> no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 And thou shalt show thy <sup>h</sup> son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the LORD did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for <sup>i</sup> a sign unto thee upon thy hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes; that the LORD's law may be in thy mouth; for with a strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt therefore keep this <sup>j</sup> ordinance in his season from year to year.

11 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee.

12 That thou shalt <sup>k</sup> set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the matrix; and every firstling that cometh of a beast which thou hast, the males shall be the LORD's.

13 And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a <sup>l</sup> lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the first-born of man among thy children shalt thou redeem.

14 ¶ And it shall be when thy <sup>m</sup> son asketh <sup>n</sup> thee in time to come, saying, What is this? that thou shalt say unto him, By strength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the house of bondage:

15 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, that the LORD slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man, and the first-born of beast: therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the first-born of my children I redeem.

16 And it shall be for a token upon thy hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes; for by strength of <sup>o</sup> hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that <sup>p</sup> was near: for God said, Lest peradventure the <sup>q</sup> people repent when they see war, and they <sup>r</sup> return to Egypt:

18 But God <sup>s</sup> led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red sea: and the children of Israel went up <sup>t</sup> harnessed out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him: for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel, saying, <sup>u</sup> God will surely visit you; and scrip over Jordan. Tyranny is too weak, where God bids, Increase and multiply. God's people had stayed like slaves; they go away like conquerors, with the spoil of those that hate them; armed for security, and wealthy for maintenance."

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—22. Israel travels from Succoth to Elam.

—Two important particulars here call for our observation. 1. The devotion of the first-born to God, both of man and beast, but in the case only that the first-born prove a male; and this law may be considered in two points of view: first, as a memorial of the last plague inflicted on the Egyptians, and of the high hand with which the Israelites were delivered from the hand of Pharaoh; and secondly, as a memento of their obligations to the Lord for their own preservation, not one of their children being slain. And both these lessons are no less important to us than to them. We have seen the judgments of the Lord around us, one falling on our right hand, and another on our left; yet we are left the monuments of distinguishing mercy. And as the preservation of Israel was a call upon them to devote their first-born to God, so no less imperatively are we called upon to devote both ourselves and all we have to his service; particularly should we so devote our children, and bring them up under a due sense of their obligations to divine mercy: "And thou shalt show thy son in that day, saying, This is done, because of that which the Lord did unto me in the day that I came forth out of Egypt." So the Rabbins say, "Whatever happened to the fathers, is a sign unto the children."

2. We have the journeying of the children of Israel to the edge of the wilderness, and the borders of the Red Sea. It was not the nearest way, because that lay through the country of the Philistines; "for the Lord said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and return to Egypt." But could not the same God who delivered them from Pharaoh, deliver them from the Philistines? Most undoubtedly; but this was not his plan. Because the Lord was with his people, they were not, therefore, to tempt dangers; the Lord proportions the trials of his people to their strength; and as their bodies had been enervated, and their spirits broken with long and severe slavery, they were now ill prepared to engage in war. "The Lord worketh wonders," and had done so in Egypt; but he always chooses his own time and way; and it was proved in the issue, that the way the people were led, though not a near way, was "a right way to their city of habitation." Nor would, in fact, any victory that might have been miraculously given them, have equally displayed the glory of God as the cloud and the pillar which now attended them, and the passage of the Red sea which now lay before them.

As to the pillar of the cloud, it appears calculated for two CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. Sanctify, &c.—(The word kadosh, is to consecrate, separate, and set apart a person or thing from all common or secular purposes to some religious use; and exactly answers to the Greek agiasmo, because every thing offered or consecrated to God was separated from all earthly uses. Thus the persons and animals sanctified to God were employed in the service of the tabernacle and temple; and the animals, such as were proper, were offered in sacrifice.)—Bagster.

Ver. 9. 16. It shall be for a sign (or token) upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes.—The heathen of almost all countries mark their flesh with the names of their idols, or else wear ornaments connected with superstitious mottoes, or astrological characters, which they use as charms, &c. The Israelites were to be distinguished, not by such superstitious practices, but by a rigid adherence to the divine institutions of Moses.—Orient. Lit. Nos. 179, 180. From this text, however, originated the phylacteries worn by the Jews in after times, as we shall have farther occasion to observe.

Ver. 12. The males shall be the Lord's.—As this was in memorial of the death of the first-born in Egypt, does it not imply that that judgment affected the males only? and does not this circumstance mark it as a retribution for Pharaoh's destruction of the male children.—Exod. i. 16, 22.

Ver. 18. The Red sea.—Hebrew, Yam suph, the weedy sea; so called, probably from a weed, called in the Ethiopic sufo, from which the natives extract a red colour, used for dying, whence this was called by the LXX. "the Red sea." This weed Brace declares to be coral, with which this sea abounds.

This sea (called also the Arabian Gulf) is computed to be 350 leagues in length, and about 40 in breadth. Others think it received its name from Edom, which signifies red, as bordering on its territory.—The children of Israel went up harnessed or armed, is, "armed," or in military array: here the margin reads, "by five in a rank." [A great variety of meanings have been attributed to the word chamushim, which is here rendered five in a rank, and which is also the rendering of Theodotian and Montanus. But had this been the case, and supposing only one yard for each rank to move in, it would have required not less than 68 miles for only the 600,000 effective men to have proceeded in the circumstances of the history do not admit. The textual reading of harnessed or armed, is supported by Symmachus, Anania, Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and LXX. in Jos. iv. 12; but it is very improbable that Pharaoh would have permitted the use of arms to 600,000 men, of military age, and cruelly oppressed. The Targum renders it girded, which is also the version of the LXX. in Jos. i. 14; and is followed by Aben Ezra, and approved of by Bp. Patrick; but this is not less objectionable than the preceding; the word being applied in Jud. vii. 11. to men who were certainly neither armed nor girded, as they were lying asleep. Equally inadmissible is the sense attributed to it by Harmer; who thinks they, with their cattle, were in strings or companies of five each. The interpretation of the Editor of Calmel seems to be nearer the truth—embodied under five, i. e. the officers established by the ordinary laws and usages of encampments, military service, and caravans.]—Bagster.

20 ¶ And they took their <sup>a</sup> journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness.

21 And the LORD went before <sup>v</sup> them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light: to go by day and night.

22 He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that they turn and encamp before <sup>a</sup> Pi-hahiroth, between <sup>b</sup> Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon: before it shall ye encamp by the sea.

3 For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, <sup>c</sup> They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And I will harden <sup>d</sup> Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them: and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; that the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

5 ¶ And it was told the king of Egypt that the people fled: and the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was <sup>e</sup> turned against the people, and they said, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him:

7 And he took six hundred chosen <sup>f</sup> chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

children of Israel: and the children of Israel went out with a <sup>a</sup> high hand.

9 But the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon.

10 ¶ And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were <sup>b</sup> sore afraid: and the children of Israel cried out unto the LORD.

11 And they said unto Moses, Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? Wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 Is not this the word that we did tell thee in <sup>c</sup> Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians than that we should die in the wilderness.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, <sup>d</sup> stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD, which he will show to you to-day: <sup>e</sup> for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 The LORD shall <sup>f</sup> fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace.

15 And the LORD said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward:

16 But lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thy hand over the sea, and divide it: and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

17 And I, behold, I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: and I will get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians shall know that I am

God:—their direction and protection; the former by passing usually before them, and directing them in their way; and the latter by removing occasionally behind them, and protecting them from their enemies, as we shall see in the next chapter. The cloud, however, protected them in another way; for it shaded them from the scorching sun, and occasionally afforded them refreshing dews. "Fear not, O Israel; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil." (Ps. cxxi. 6, 7.)

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—18. The Egyptians pursue Israel, who become alarmed and murmur.—The children of Israel are commanded to encamp before Pi-hahiroth, (the mouth or bay of Hiroth,) for the express purpose of displaying the divine glory in their passage through the Red sea; for here they are between two Egyptian forts or fastnesses, with the sea before them, and Pharaoh and his hosts behind. The haughty monarch no sooner hears of their departure, than, as if forgetting everything he had suffered, he prepares to follow them with all his forces. And here we have another instance, how the Lord may harden the heart without communicating any evil propensity, merely by placing a man in circumstances which may excite his evil passions, as the sun innocently draws forth an evil odour from the dung-heap. The same circumstances operate in another way upon the Israelites, by tempting them to murmur and rebellion: and here it may be necessary to remark, that, as St. Paul says, they were "not all Israel that were of Israel." (Rom. ix. 6.) In the first place, there was a mixed multitude ("a great mixture," as the margin expresses it) which went up with them; some, perhaps, attracted by personal attachment, or connexions by marriage (for even Moses married an Egyptian;) others, probably, by great expectations; hearing they were going to inhabit "a land flowing with milk and honey," and wishing to share it with them, without any calculation of difficulties or disasters. Besides all these, even among the children of Abraham, there were many who were such only "according to the flesh," and not partakers of Abraham's faith. We need not wonder, therefore, to hear of murmurings and mutinies. And if we know ourselves, we shall be willing to admit, that even the best of them, who were "Israelites indeed," would be too prone to join with those who rebelled against God and against Moses. We need not wonder, therefore, that when difficulties arose on account of the way, or oppositions from their enemies, that we hear of repinings, and even insurrections.

The first instance of this occurs in the very outset of their journey, and this very instance shows the variety of character already mentioned. No sooner are the Egyptians seen behind them, than "the children of Israel cried unto the Lord; and they," that is, some among them, (but not those, we may conclude, who cried unto the Lord,) murmured against Moses and against God, and repented leaving Egypt. It appears, also, by their own confession, that these were the same people who had before murmured and repined. "Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians?" There are certainly persons so debased in spirit, and degraded in principle, as to love their chains, and to despise all the blessings of civil and religious liberty. Such will prefer a "grave in Egypt," to all the blessings of "the land of promise," when there are obstacles in the way. And is it not so to the present day? Are there not many who prefer to sit down and perish in their sins, rather than to arise and fight the battles of the Lord?

Moses, however, and God by him, accommodates his mes-

Ver. 21. By night in a pillar of fire.—Xenophon, describes the march of certain Spartans, who carried upon a pole the sacred fire from their altars—partly, perhaps, from superstition, and partly to give them light—a custom probably borrowed from this miraculous pillar.—See Orient. Cust. No. 677. CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. Pi-hahiroth.—Pi-hahiroth, "the mouth of Chiroth," as it is rendered by the LXX. Dr. Shaw is of opinion that Chiroth denotes the valley which extends from the wilderness of Etham to the Red sea. "This valley," he observes, "ends at the sea in a small bay made by the eastern extremities of the mountains (of Gewoubee and Attackah, between which the valley lies) which I have been describing, and is called Tiah-beni-Israel, i. e. the road of the Israelites, by a tradition that is still kept up by the Arabs, of their having passed through it; so it is also called Baideah, from the neiv and unheard of miracle that was wrought near it, by dividing the Red sea, and destroying therein Pharaoh, his chariots, and his horsemen.—Between Migdol and the sea.—Migdol, signifies a tower, and hence some have supposed that it was a fortress which served to defend the bay. But the LXX. renders it Megadala, which is mentioned by Herodotus, Hecataeus, and others, and is expressly said by Stephanus to be a "city of Egypt." This Bochart conjectures to have been the same as Migdol.—Bagster.—Baal-zephon might serve the double purpose of a watch-tower and a temple of Baal.—[This was probably the name of a town or city, as Ezekiel the Tragedian expressly calls it, in which Baal was worshipped; and probably called zephon, from being situated on the north point of the Red sea, near the present Suez.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Over the sea.—[Red sea.—The upper part is divided into two gulfs the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 ¶ And the <sup>m</sup> angel of God which went before the camp of Israel, removed, and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them:

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea <sup>a</sup> dry land, and the waters were divided.

22 And the children of Israel went into the <sup>a</sup> midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left.

23 ¶ And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 And it came to pass, that in the morning-watch the LORD looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, sage to their weakness. The Lord had foreseen that they had no courage for fighting, and they are not called to it: they are only commanded to "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." The rod of Moses is lifted up—the same rod that, by a divine commission, turned the river into blood, shall now divide the sea; and they are commanded to "go forward." It is to be remarked, that the command to march is given before the sea divides; and so it is with us. We are to "go forward" in the path of duty, though often we may see no practicable way; in short, though there be a sea before us, and difficulties on every side.

Ver. 19–31. Israel passes through the Red sea, and the Egyptians are drowned.—"The word which commands the progress (says Dr. Hunter) also prepares the way. The powerful rod is once more stretched out. The east wind blows. The sea retires, and a safe and easy passage is opened for Israel through the channel of the deep." The waters were divided, and they went through on dry land. But we must not ascribe this miracle to Moses, or to his rod, as though he had wrought it by his own power. There was another agent. "The angel of God" and of the covenant, "who had gone before Israel in the pillar of the cloud;" but who now stopped behind, while they went forward: and while this pillar was a cloud of light to direct Israel in their passage, which was by night, it was a cloud of impenetrable darkness to the Egyptians, so that they could not proceed till Israel had arrived safe on the other side the channel. "And it came to pass, that in the morning watch (that is, at dawn of day) Jehovah (the divine angel, or agent, just mentioned) looked through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the Egyptians," while they were essaying to follow Israel through the deep. He loosened their chariot wheels, and "made them to go heavily;" and at the same time he frowned upon them in an angry tempest. So the Psalmist tells us, "The clouds poured out water, and the skies sent out a sound: thine arrows also went abroad. The voice of thy thunder was in the heavens; the lightnings lightened the world; the earth trembled and shook. Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known." (Ps. lxxvii. 17–19.)

In terror and alarm, they confess that "JEHOVAH fighteth for that to the East called the Elanitic, from the city Elana at the northern extremity, and that to the west, the Heroopolitic, from the city of Heroopolis. The former is called by the Arabians, Bahr el Akaba, the sea of Akaba; and the latter Bahr el Koisum, the sea of destruction, or Clysma; which was that which the Israelites passed. —Bagster.

Ver. 21. The waters were divided.—Great pains have been taken, by Deistical writers, to represent this passage as accidental, rather than miraculous. But Niebuhr, the celebrated traveller, in his "Description of Arabia," says, "People are very much deceived, if they imagine that the passage of so great a caravan could have taken place by natural means. No caravan from Cairo to Mount Sinai takes this road, though they would gain a great deal if they could do so. But some thousand years ago it was still less possible, naturally speaking, for the children of Israel to pass. The water at that time was probably much broader, extending farther to the north, and much deeper."

Ver. 22. Waters were a wall.—[This verse demonstrates, that this event was 26 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thy hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared: and the Egyptians fled against it; and the LORD <sup>a</sup> overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And the waters returned, and <sup>r</sup> covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them: there remained not so much as one of them.

29 But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus the LORD saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore.

31 And Israel saw that <sup>a</sup> great work which the LORD did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the LORD, and <sup>i</sup> believed the LORD, and his servant Moses.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Moses' song. 22 The people want water. 23 The waters at Marah are bitter. 26 A tree sweeteneth them.

THEN <sup>a</sup> sang Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the LORD, and spake, saying, I will sing unto the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

2 The LORD is my strength and <sup>b</sup> song, and he is become my salvation: he is my God,

Israel" against themselves; and their only hope of escape is now in flight; but, alas! "The hope of the wicked is like the giving up of the ghost." (Job xi. 20.) For another command is given forth from him whom "the winds and the seas obey;" and the sea, which had stood as a wall on either hand while Israel passed over, now "returned to its strength," and the impetuous roaring waves overwhelmed Pharaoh and all his hosts. Thus, as Moses had said on the preceding day, "the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever"—except, indeed, "dead upon the sea shore."

"When Egypt's king, God's chosen tribes pursued, In crystal walls the admiring waters stood. When through the desert, wild, they took their way, The rocks relented and poured forth a sea: What limits can Almighty goodness know, When seas can harden, and when rocks can flow?"

Thus ended this memorable contest between JEHOVAH and the Egyptians, as, indeed, all contests between God and man must sooner or later end, in the triumph of the former and destruction of the latter; for "who can harden himself against him and prosper?" On the other hand, as it respects the children of Israel, those who cried for deliverance, are now preparing a song of praise, which we shall read in the next chapter; and those who feared and murmured have buried both their fears and murmurings in the same watery grave with Pharaoh and his armies.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1–21. Moses' song of victory.—This is the first song of victory we have recorded in the Scriptures. It is highly poetic and devotional. It celebrates Jehovah as "a mighty warrior," who had triumphed gloriously in the defeat of Pharaoh and his host; and, at the same time, as the refuge and salvation of his people. "Jehovah is my strength and my song, and he is become my salvation: He is my God, and I will prepare him a habitation;" or rather "make him my habitation," my dwelling-place, my home! (Ps. xc. 1; xci. 1.) This song was evidently led off by Moses and Aaron, and repeated in chorus, verse by verse, by the body of the people. Then Miriam, the sister of Aaron, who had, doubtless, a transcript of it, led off the same song with the women; accompanied in the manner of the ancients, with timbrels and with dances; for nothing is more certain than that dancing accompanied the sa-wholly miraculous; and cannot be ascribed, as some have supposed, to an extraordinary ebb, which happened just then to be produced by a strong east wind; for this would not have caused the waters, contrary to every law of fluids, to stand as a wall on the right hand and the left. —Bagster.

Ver. 24. The Lord looked.—"That is," says Stackhouse, "when he turned the bright side of the cloud upon them, to let them see the danger they were in." This, however, is not all. The Psalmist informs us, that this was attended with earthquake and a tempest, as above quoted.

Ver. 27. Overthrew the Egyptians.—Hebrew. "Shook off" the Egyptians. The Lord shook off his enemies into the sea, as Paul shook off the viper into the fire. Acts xxviii. 5.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 2. The Lord is my strength.—The Hebrew word here rendered Lord, though in capitals, is not JEHOVAH, but Jah, generally considered as an abbreviation of the former.—I will prepare a habitation.—Rather, "Make him my habitation," as above. See Parkhurst's Heb. Lex.

and I will prepare him a habitation; my father's God, and I will exalt him.

3 The LORD is a man of war: the LORD is his name.

4 Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea: his chosen captains also are drowned in the Red sea.

5 The depths have covered them: they sank into the bottom as a stone.

6 Thy right hand, O LORD, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O LORD, hath dashed in pieces the enemy.

7 And in the greatness of thine excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which consumed them as stubble.

8 And with the blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered together, the floods stood upright as a heap, and the depths were congealed in the heart of the sea.

9 The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil: my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them.

10 Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them: they sank as lead in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like unto thee, O LORD, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?

12 Thou stretchedst out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them.

13 Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people, which thou hast redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation.

14 The people shall hear, and be afraid: sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestine.

15 Then the dukes of Edom shall be amazed; the mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold upon them; all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away.

16 Fear and dread shall fall upon them; by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still as a stone; till thy people pass over, O

LORD, till the people pass over, which thou hast purchased.

17 Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O LORD, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O LORD, which thy hands have established.

18 The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.

19 For the horse of Pharaoh went in with his chariots and with his horsemen into the sea, and the LORD brought again the waters of the sea upon them: but the children of Israel went on dry land in the midst of the sea.

20 ¶ And Miriam the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her, with timbrels, and with dances.

21 And Miriam answered them, Sing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

22 So Moses brought Israel from the Red sea, and they went out into the wilderness of Shur; and they went three days in the wilderness, and found no water.

23 ¶ And when they came to Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah; for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called Marah.

24 And the people murmured against Moses, saying, What shall we drink?

25 And he cried unto the LORD; and the LORD showed him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: there he made for them a statute and an ordinance, and there he proved them,

26 And said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians; for I am the LORD that healeth thee.

27 ¶ And they came to Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees: and they encamped there by the waters.

red music of the Hebrews, as well as of the Greeks and other nations.

The following verses, though anonymous, and in some respects too free for a translation, are so beautifully poetic, that we cannot forbear inserting them, as very superior to most versions of Scripture in English metre.

Our slavery is finished, our labour is done;
Our tasks are relinquished, our march is begun:
The arm of the Lord has divided the sea,
JEHOVAH has conquered, and Israel is free.

“Why stay ye the fast-going chariots? and why
Is the far-floating banner uplifted on high?
Quick, quick! let the corslet your bosoms embrace;
And harness the coursers, and hasten the chase!”

Thus Pharaoh has spoke in the storm of his pride,
And roll’d on our footsteps his numberless tide;
The falchions are bright in the hands of the foe,
Their quivers are rattling, and bent is each bow.

As the clouds of the tempest, which gloomily frown,
That wide spreading band in the evening comes down;
As the thundercloud bursts at the sun’s piercing ray,
That band on the morrow shall vanish away.

Proud boaster of Egypt! be silent and mourn;
Weep, daughter of Memphis, thy banner is torn
In the temple of Isis be wailing and woe,
For the mighty are fallen, and princes laid low.

Their chieftains are fall’n, tho’ their bows were still bent;
Their legions are sunk, tho’ their shafts were unspent;
The horse and his rider are whelmed in the sea;
JEHOVAH has conquered, and Israel is free!

Ver. 3. A man of war.—This, though literal, is liable to be misunderstood, since we usually appropriate the term to a large ship of war.

Ver. 9. I will destroy.—Margin, “repossess.” There is no doubt but Pharaoh’s object was to bring them back to slavery.

Ver. 11. Among the gods.—This was a triumph, no less over the gods of Egypt than their king. The margin, however, as the term is sometimes applied to mortals in power and dignity, the margin says, “or princes” and it is probable that his princes, as well as captains, shared the fate of their unhappy master.

Ver. 20. Timbrel.—(Toph, in Arabic called duff or diff, and in Spanish buffa, is the tympanum or tabret used in the East to the present day; being a thin broad wooden hoop with parchment extended over one end of it, to

Ver. 22—27. The bitter waters of Marah sweetened.—This song, however, triumphant and joyous as it was, was soon turned into mourning; for they had now to march three days without water, except what little they might carry with them; and when they came to it, behold it was bitter, and they could not drink it, and therefore was the name of the place called Marah, that is, bitterness. We must here remark, that our triumphs in the present world are short, and our happiest moments soon embittered:—that we have need to live in a state of continual dependance, both on the providence and grace of God, from whom we want continual supplies, as well as support. There is no ground, however, for repining. There is a tree of life at hand, whose “leaves are for the healing of the nations,” and which can sweeten every bitter draught of life. The Hebrew Doctors say, “It is the manner of the blessed God, to make that which is bitter sweet, by that which is bitter,” and it is assuredly by the bitterness of our Redeemer’s sufferings that all our bitter things are sweetened. Our crosses are all sweetened by the cross of Christ.

We may remark here, also, the difference between the trials of God’s people, and his judgments upon the wicked. Pharaoh and his people are followed with judgment upon judgment, to their destruction; Israel, with trial upon trial, to “work out their salvation.” Of these we shall find many and repeated instances as we follow Israel through the wilderness, for “there he proved them,” both with judgments and with mercies.

which small pieces of brass, tin, &c. are attached, which make a jingling noise; it is held in the air with one hand and beat upon with the other; and appears to be precisely the same with the tambourine.—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Shur.—(This lay on the eastern shore of the Heropotitic gulf of the Red sea, and is still called the desert of Saur, according to Dr. Shaw.)—Bagster.

Ver. 27. They come to Elim.—“Elim lies at the northern end of the desert of Sin, two leagues from Tor, and nearly thirty from Corondel. I saw no more than nine of the twelve wells mentioned by Moses; the other three being filled up by sand. Yet this loss is simply made up by the great increase of palm-trees, the 70 having propagated themselves into more than 2000.”—Shaw’s Travels.

CHAPTER XVI.

<sup>a</sup> The Israelites come to Sin: 2 they murmur for want of bread. 11 Quails are sent, 14 and manna.

AND they took their journey from <sup>a</sup> Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of <sup>b</sup> Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel <sup>c</sup> murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness:

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, <sup>d</sup> when we sat by the flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full: for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD unto Moses, Behold, I will <sup>e</sup> rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and <sup>f</sup> gather a certain rate every day, that I may <sup>g</sup> prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare <sup>h</sup> that which they bring in; and it shall be <sup>i</sup> twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even, then ye shall know that the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt:

7 And in the morning, then ye shall see the <sup>j</sup> glory of the LORD; for that he heareth your murmurings against the LORD: And what <sup>k</sup> are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be when the LORD shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: And what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but against the LORD.

9 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, Come <sup>k</sup> near before the LORD: for he hath heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, that they looked toward the wilderness, and behold, the glory of the LORD <sup>l</sup> appeared in the cloud.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 12 I have heard the <sup>m</sup> murmurings of the children of Israel; speak unto them, saying, At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 And it came to pass, that at even the <sup>n</sup> quails came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning the dew lay round about the host.

14 And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoarfrost on the ground:

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, <sup>o</sup> It is p manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

It is said, also, "There he made for them a statute and an ordinance," and what was it? That if they hearkened to the voice of God, to obey him, they should experience none of the diseases brought upon the Egyptians; "for I am the Lord that healeth thee." Ah! the bitterness of these waters might have been fatal to the Egyptians, and filled them with diseases; but to the Israelites they were only temporary trials; the good Physician having given them a medicinal virtue by the tree cast therein.

We close this chapter by remarking the liberal manner in which God bestows his blessings. Not only are the waters of Marah sweetened, but at Elim, their next station, are twelve wells, or springs of water, to slake their thirst; and three-score and ten palm trees, to afford them shade. And this place was long after famous for its springs of water; and its palm trees in the course of time became a forest, as we learn from the celebrated pagan geographer, Strabo.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—15. The Israelites murmur for want of food, and are fed with manna, and with quails.—In the last chapter we find the children of Israel murmuring for want of water; now it is for want of bread, and anon for want of meat: so discontented is human nature. The former mutiny, it is thought, was of a few only, perhaps the mixed multitude which came up from Egypt; this is of the whole congregation. All cry out for bread, and for meat. "Would to God (say they) we had died by the hand of the Lord in Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full!" Yet then their lives were "made bitter with servitude;" then "the iron entered into their soul;" but present troubles are always the heaviest to a discontented mind.

It is true Moses and Aaron are the persons against whom their murmurings are directed, in the first instance. But who are Moses and Aaron? Are they not "the servants of the most high God?" And is not the disrespect shown to them, an insult to Him that sent them? "Against thine image, in the saint, O Lord." So saith Moses, He heareth "your murmurings against him;"—against him who had so lately delivered them from the land of Egypt:—who had given them a passage through the Red sea:—who had sweetened the waters of Marah, and led them to the wells of Elim. Here Henry well remarks, "Experiences of God's mercies greatly aggravate our distrusts and murmurings." If the breath that is spent in murmuring were spent in prayer, it would surely turn to far better interest.

But notwithstanding this, God supplies their hunger no less bountifully than their thirst. He gives them bread from heaven; he rains it around their camp; and so new and unexpected is the blessing, that they ask, with surprise, "What is it?" From which phrase, probably, it received its name.

Let us endeavour to answer this question. It is described here as "a small round thing, as small as the hoarfrost;" and in Numbers xi. 7. it is added, "the manna was as coriander seed, (in form), and the colour thereof as bdellium;" that is, a kind of pearl, or gum, nearly white, and transparent. It was preceded, or accompanied, by a copious dew, and when that went off, the manna became visible, and was gathered in great quantities, an omer for each person, (which is a Hebrew measure of nearly three quarts of our measure;) and double the quantity on the day before the sabbath. An immense quantity, therefore, must have fallen, to feed more than a million of people.

It is added, "At even ye shall eat flesh." So it "came to pass, that at even the quails came up, and covered the camp;" that is, they lighted upon the tents, and round about, within three feet from the earth, (see Numb. xi. 31.) so that even the children might gather them. Many have supposed that these were locusts, (which are certainly eaten by the Arabs,) but the CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Wilderness of Sin.—[This desert is described by Dr. Shaw, (as in the text,) as lying between Elim and Sinai: he traversed it in nine hours, being all the day diverted by varieties of lizards and vipers, which abound there.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Behold the glory, &c.—It should be remarked, that the Shekinah appeared as a cloud all day, and was only luminous by night, except on peculiar occasions, as here, to show that the Almighty was displeased. It was in the form of fire and light, that the Shekinah stood before Moses and the people, upon the rock at Horeb.

Ver. 13. Quails.—[Selaz, in Chaldee, selaz, in Syriac and Arabic, seloa, is without doubt the quail: so the LXX. render it, a large kind of quail. Ethiopic, ferferat, and Vulgate, coturnices, quails, with which agree Philo and the Rabbins.—The quail is a bird of the gallinaceous kind, somewhat less than a pigeon, but larger than a sparrow. Hasselquist describes the quail of the larger kind as very much resembling the red partridge, but not larger than the turtle dove; found in Judea as well as in the deserts of Arabia Petrea, and Egypt: and affording a most agreeable and delicate dish. But Ludolf endeavours to prove that a species of locusts is intended; and Scheuchzer and Bp. Patrick, from the difficulties which seem to encumber the text, follow his opinion. The opinion of Ludolf, however, is ably confuted by Paxton. (Illustrations of Scripture,) and the objections of Bp. Patrick fairly and fully met by Harmer. 1.—Bagster. This supply of quails appears to have been very partial, and perhaps for one evening only; afterwards they lived on them for a month together. Numb. xi. 20.—Calmet's Dict.

Ver. 15. It is manna.—Our margin gives two versions of this expression; What is it? for they wist not what it was;" or, 2. "It is a portion; for." Either way, Moses answers, "This is the bread," &c. [What the substance called Manna was, is utterly unknown; but from the circumstances in the text, it is evident, that it was not a natural production, but was miraculously sent by JEHOVAH. These the learned Abarbanel, a most judicious Jewish interpreter, has thus enumerated: The natural manna was never found in the desert where this fell:—where the common manna does fall, it is only in the spring time, in March and April, whereas this fell throughout all the months in the year.—The ordinary manna does not melt in the sun, as this did, (v. 2.)—it does not stink and breed worms, as this did, when kept till the morning, (ver. 20.)—it cannot be ground or beaten in a mortar, so as to make cakes, as this was:—the common manna is medicinal and purgative, and cannot be used for food and nutriment, as this was;—this fell in a double proportion on the sixth day, and not on the sabbath, as it certainly would have done had it fallen naturally;—it followed them in all their journeys, wherever they pitched their tents;—and it ceased at the very time of the year when the other falls, namely, in March, when the Israelites were come to Gilgal. Whatever this substance was, it does not appear to have been common to the wilderness. Frut. De. viii. 8, 16. it is evident that the Israelites never saw it before; and from a

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, and some less.

18 And when they did mete it with an <sup>a</sup>omer, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack: they gathered every man according to his eating.

19 And Moses said, Let no man leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding, they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms, and stank: and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot, it melted.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD hath said, To-morrow is the <sup>a</sup>rest of the holy sabbath unto the LORD: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not <sup>r</sup>stink, neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a sabbath unto the LORD; to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 Six <sup>r</sup>days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none.

28 And the LORD said unto Moses, How long <sup>x</sup> refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the LORD hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

30 So the people rested on the seventh day.

31 And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like <sup>r</sup>coriander-seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 ¶ And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commandeth, Fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said unto Aaron, <sup>a</sup>Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations.

34 As the LORD commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it <sup>a</sup>up before the Testimony, to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel did eat manna <sup>b</sup>forty years, until they came to a land inhabited: they did eat manna, until they came unto the <sup>c</sup>borders of the land of Canaan.

36 Now an <sup>d</sup>omer is the tenth part of an ephah.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The people murmur for water at Rephidim. 5 God sendeth them to the rock in Horeb. 8 Amalek is overcome by the holding up of Moses' hand.

AND all the congregation of the children of Israel journeyed from the wilderness of Psalmist calls them "feathered fowls;" (Psalm lxxviii. 27.) probably small birds like pigeons, but fat and tender: so that Israel had bread from heaven, and flesh fit for the table of a prince.

But whence, it may be said, was the necessity of this? Their bread might, indeed, be exhausted, as they neither could produce nor procure corn in the wilderness; but what had become of their numerous flocks and herds? By all the circumstances, it is probable that these murmurers were "more afraid than hurt;" their wants were more in anticipation than in fact; and, like covetous persons, who are always dreading penury, their murmuring arose more from disposition than distress, and was therefore so much the more criminal. Indeed it is difficult to conceive of a more unthankful and unworthy race than this generation of Israelites, generally speaking, were; and they are therefore selected as an example, to show that the Lord hath "mercy on whom he will have mercy;" as were the Egyptians, on the contrary, to prove, that "whom he will he hardeneth." (Rom. ix. 15-18.)

Ver. 16-36. Directions respecting the manna.—Every circumstance of the history confirms what we have remarked of the character of this people, and gives a reason for many precepts enjoined on them, particularly as to industry and cleanliness. Those who have been used to work under the lash of the whip, will scarcely work without it: hence the work of one free labourer is reckoned equal to that of several slaves. It was partly from this indolent disposition that they wished themselves back into Egypt; for though they were compelled to labour, and laboured hard, they had no care to provide their food; they had only to sit and feed beside the flesh pots; for it appears the Egyptians had too much policy to starve their slaves. To counteract their indolence and improvidence, whatever God sent them required labour to prepare it. The manna, in particular, was to be gathered all round the camp, and that early in the morning, for when the sun arose it melted. No more was to be gathered than was likely to be eaten: it was not to be hoarded. This some found to their cost; for when they gathered a surplus, probably to save gathering the next day, it putrified; and yet this was not the case on the sabbath, because none fell on that day, that they should not have an excuse for its profanation. Probably the manna was dressed like rice, ground or whole, baked or boiled; (ver. 23.) which furnished them still farther employment. And if it was of similar quality to that useful grain, that will account for its subsisting (in a great measure) the whole nation for full forty years; for on this a great part of the world live, even in the present day.

The last verses of this chapter, it has been said, could not have been written by Moses, because he speaks of the children of Israel eating manna "forty years." That the five last verses were not written at this time is evident, not only from this circumstance, but the laying up the golden pot of manna in the Ark of "the Testimony" could not be done till the ark was made. We therefore consider them as notes, subjoined by Moses forty years afterwards, and just before his death; but it may be the book was not compiled till that period.

It is, however, highly important to inquire into the moral and spiritual meaning of this miraculous food. We have reason to believe, that the true seed of Abraham considered many of these circumstances as figurative of "good things to come." (Heb. x. 1.) And our Lord has given us such a key to this type, that we cannot be mistaken in the application of it to himself. The first object of the miracle was to teach them to live upon Providence; but not without the use of means. "Give us this day, our daily bread." The second, and more sublime design, to suggest that God had provided some better things for their descendants in futurity. So the ancient Rabbins, according to Ainsworth, admitted it to be a figure of "the food of just men in the world to come;" that is, in the age of the Messiah. It was in consistency, therefore, with these ideas, that our Lord applied the manna to himself. When the Jews spake of eating manna in the wilderness, (John vi. 32-34.) our Lord replied, "Moses gave you not that bread from heaven, but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven: for the bread of God is he that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." Well may we reply with these Jews,—and may it be with a better understanding of his words,—"Lord, ever give us this bread!"

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1-7. The people murmur for want of pot of it being preserved, it is probable that nothing of the kind ever appeared again.—Bagster.

Ver. 31. Manna.—(Manna is the common name for the thick, clammy, and sweet juice, which in southern countries oozes from certain trees and shrubs, partly by the rays of the sun, partly by the punctures of some kinds of insects, and partly by artificial means. The manna common in our druggists' shops comes from Calabria and Sicily, where it oozes out of a kind of ash tree, from the end of June to the end of July. But the European manna is not so good as the Oriental, which is gathered, particularly in Syria, Arabia, and Persia, partly from the Oriental oak and partly from a shrub which is called in Persia Teranjabin. Rauwolf and Gmelin say that the manna is as white as snow, and consists of grains like coriander seed as above described. But though this manna very much resembles that described by Moses, in its form, appearance, &c. yet we find a peculiar circumstance by which it is distinguished from the common. It is expressly said (ver. 14.) that the manna lay round the camp like hoar frost, which does not agree with the manna which exudes from trees * Sin, after their journeys, according to the commandment of the LORD, and pitched in Rephidim: and there was no water for the people to drink.

2 Wherefore the people did <sup>b</sup> chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? wherefore do ye <sup>c</sup> tempt the LORD?

3 And the people thirsted there for water; and the people murmured against Moses, and said, Wherefore is this that thou hast brought us up out of Egypt to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?

4 And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to <sup>d</sup> stone me.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel: and thy rod, wherewith thou <sup>e</sup> smotest he river, take in thy hand, and go.

6 Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall <sup>f</sup> come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place <sup>g</sup> Massah, and <sup>h</sup> Meribah, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD, saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?

water.—“At the head of the myriads of Israel, Moses is now pursuing his march from Egypt to Canaan, following a guide who would not mislead them; protected by a power which bid defiance to every foe; and from day to day supplied by a bounty incapable of being exhausted. All these present and singular advantages, had the sweetness of hope mingled with them. They had just escaped from the most humiliating and oppressive of all servitude, and they were hastening to the inheritance of their fathers; yet we find them a people as peevish, irritable, and difficult to please, as if they had never known adversity; as if they had just issued from the lap of ease and indulgence. One day, the bread is dry and stale; the next, the water is bitter; the third, there is a scarcity of it. The water is sweetened; manna descends; quails fall around their camp; but there is still “a cruel something unpossessed;” all that went before is forgotten; all that is in possession becomes insipid.

“Where does this censure fall? On that moody, murmuring race, the Jews only? Alas, it overwhelms ourselves; it bears hard, not upon individuals here and there, but upon mankind! We expect more from the world than it possibly can bestow; and when we discover its insufficiency, we charge God foolishly; and because we have not every thing we wish, we are satisfied with nothing. Solacing ourselves, like Jonah, under the shadow of a gourd, we fancy it is a perennial shelter. We see not the worm which is gnawing its root; and when it is smitten down and withers, we are ready to say, with the sullen, testy prophet, (Jonah,) we do well to be angry.”—(Hunter's Lect.)

The murmuring adverted to in this chapter, was at Rephidim, a short distance from Horeb; for Moses is ordered to take with him the elders of Israel to that mountain: and, “Behold, (says the Lord,) I will stand before thee there upon the rock;” encircled, no doubt, in the cloud of the Shekinah; “and thou shalt smite the rock,” that is, with the rod which he was commanded to take with him; “and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink.” This stream doubtless followed them to Rephidim, and perhaps much farther, and supplied them for a considerable time; hence it was said, figuratively, that the rock followed them. And as it was customary, in those early times, to record events by giving names, this place, Rephidim, was called Massah, “temptation,” because here they tempted God; and Meribah, “chiding,” or strife, because here they chided Moses. This rock, which by being wounded produced a copious stream of water, is also represented, by St. Paul, as typical of Christ. “They drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them” in a stream of living water, and that water—“that Rock was Christ.” (1 Cor. x. 4.)

On this circumstance Ainsworth piously remarks, that “Christ (the spiritual Rock) being smitten by the rod of Moses, and bearing the curse of the law for our sins, from him floweth that spiritual drink wherewith all believers are refreshed.” (See John xix. 34. 1 John v. 8.) So some of the Rabbins say, “the turning of the rock into water, signified the turning of judgment into mercy.”

Ver. 8—16. The first battle with Amalek.—Soon after this event, Israel is, for the first time, engaged in war, and Amalek is his adversary. As one of the dukes of Edom, the grandson of Esau bore this name, he is generally supposed to be the enemy here named, though Scott thinks this very doubtful. The attack was, however, unprovoked and cowardly, as he “smote the hindmost of the people, even all that were feeble behind;” including, no doubt, the women and children, as well as those that “were faint and weary” with their journey. The Amalekites were no doubt marauders, like the wandering Arabs, and their object was the baggage.

By order of Moses, the command of the Israelites devolved on Joshua, (or Oshea,) the son of Nun, a young man here first noticed, but who afterwards became captain-general of the army, and succeeded Moses in the government. He “discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword;” but the cause of victory must be traced to another source. Moses ascended a hill, probably a part of Horeb, which commanded a view of the battle, and took up the rod of God with him; and while he held up his hands, Israel prevailed; but when he could hold them no longer, Amalek. Aaron and Hur therefore supported him till the sun set, and victory was decided. The Jerusalem Targum well explains this: “When Moses held up his hands in prayer, the house of Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hands from prayer, the house of Amalek prevailed.” An example this, to show that “the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.” (James v. 16.) And which beautifully illustrates the exhortation to the prophet to “strengthen the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees.” (Isa. xxxv. 3.) It may also remind us of ONE who is “sat down at the right hand of God, and ever liveth to make intercession for us,” (Heb. i. 3. vii. 25.) and for all who trust their cause in his hands.

“Kind Intercessor, there he sits,
And loves, and pleads, and prays.”

We must return, however, to the history. Moses is commanded to record this memorable transaction, first in a book, and to rehearse it in the ears of Joshua, with this awful decree against Amalek, who, though not one of the devoted nations, had been guilty of this cruel and unprovoked attack: “I will utterly blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven.” 2. He is to build an altar, to be called JEHOVAH-NISSI, “the Lord is my banner;” a memento to them, that to fight and plants. Hence Oedman supposes that it falls with the dew; being formed in the air from the quantity of sweet juices expelled from different kinds of shrubs, &c. by the great heats of Arabia.]—BAGSTER. (See previous Note on ver. 15.)

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. After their journeys.—There were other intermediate stations, between their first encampment in the wilderness and Rephidim, which are here passed over. See Numb. xxxiii. 12, 14.

Ver. 6. The rock in Horeb.—The rock is shown to this day. It is of red granite, from twelve to fifteen feet square, with several holes and channels, which appear to have been formed by the bursting and running of water. See Norden, Shaw, and Pococke, as quoted in Dr. Clarke. This rock is said, figuratively, to have followed the Israelites; meaning, that the water which flowed from it did so. “He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.” Psalm lxxviii. 16; cv. 51.

Ver. 14. In a book.—This is the first mention of writing “in a book,” and gives Moses the honour of being the first inspired writer. It is not certain, however, that this was written immediately; nor whether it was to be written in hieroglyphics or alphabetical characters. Many are of opinion, that the ten commandments (chap. xx.) are the first example of the latter method.

Ver. 16. The Lord hath sworn, &c. The Hebrew is evidently elliptical, and is literally, as in the margin of our Bibles, “Because of the hand upon the throne of JAH, therefore,” &c. as above explained.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Jethro bringeth to Moses his wife and two sons: 7 Moses entertaineth him: 13 Jethro's counsel is accepted. 27 Jethro departeth.

WHEN <sup>a</sup> Jethro the priest of Midian, Moses' father-in-law, heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for Israel his people, and that the Lord had brought Israel out of Egypt:

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took Zipporah, Moses' wife, after he had sent her back,

3 And her two sons; of which the name of the one was <sup>b</sup> Gershom; (for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land:)

4 And the name of the other was <sup>c</sup> Eliezer; (for the God of my father, said he, was my help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:)

7 ¶ And Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, and did <sup>e</sup> obeisance, and kissed him: and they asked each other of their <sup>f</sup> welfare: and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses told his father-in-law all that the Lord had done unto Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had <sup>g</sup> come upon them by the way, and how the <sup>h</sup> Lord delivered them.

9 And Jethro <sup>i</sup> rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, <sup>j</sup> Blessed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now I know that the Lord <sup>k</sup> is greater than all <sup>l</sup> gods: for in the thing wherein they dealt <sup>m</sup> proudly, he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took a burnt-offering and sacrifices for God: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law <sup>m</sup> before God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

14 And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? Why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moses said unto his father-in-law, Because the people come unto <sup>n</sup> me to inquire of God:

16 When they have a matter, they come unto me, and I judge <sup>o</sup> between one and another, and I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.

17 And Moses' father-in-law said unto him, The thing that thou doest is not good.

18 Thou <sup>p</sup> wilt surely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too <sup>q</sup> heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

19 Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee: Be thou for the <sup>r</sup> people to God-ward, that thou mayest bring the causes unto God:

20 And thou shalt teach them <sup>s</sup> ordinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk, and the work that they must do.

21 Moreover, thou shalt provide out of all the people, able men, such as <sup>t</sup> fear God, men of truth, hating <sup>u</sup> covetousness; and place such over them to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens:

22 And let them judge the people at all seasons: and it shall be, that every great matter they shall bring unto thee, but every small matter they shall judge: so shall it be easier for thyself, and they shall bear the burden <sup>v</sup> with thee.

23 If thou shalt do this thing, and God <sup>w</sup> command thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, under this banner, was to insure their victory. "For (or and) he said," according to the reading of the margin, (which we here prefer, as far the most perspicuous as well as literal,) "Because the hand (of Amalek) is upon (or against) the throne of JAH, therefore hath JEHOVAH sworn that he will have war with Amalek from generation to generation." This text is certainly attended with some difficulty; but by the throne of God, may not the cloud of glory, in which he resided, be intended? And was it not to attack his throne, when Israel was attacked beneath the shadow of that cloud? "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye." (Zech. ii. 8.)

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—27. Jethro brings back the wife of Moses, and is cordially received.—It appears that Zipporah, for some reason not clearly expressed, but probably from a dispute about the rite of circumcision, left Moses on his entering into Egypt; but here returning with Jethro, and with both her children, is cordially received. Before he arrives, however, he "said unto Moses," doubtless by the hand of a messenger, "I am come unto thee: and Moses went out to meet him." Jethro, both by this and by his subsequent conduct, appears to have CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. Jethro, Moses's father-in-law.—It may be seen, by turning to our notes on chap. ii. 18, 21. and iii. 1. that the Hebrew word rendered "father-in-law" by our translators, is very indefinite. Jerome translates it consanguineus, kinsman; which is, perhaps, the best rendering, as Calmet says it is impossible to fix the relationship here intended. He brings Moses, however, his wife Zipporah, and her two children. The precise cause of their former separation we pretend not to ascertain; but it seems probable that she had entertained prejudices against the rite of circumcision, which occasioned the too long neglect of it; and when at length she performed it herself upon one of her children, she did it in a spirit which showed her dislike, and her ignorance of the true character of the God of Israel. See note on ch. iv. 24—26.

Ver. 5. Unto Moses, &c.—[There are several reasons to induce us to believe, that this event did not take place till the second year of the Exodus. The two following are the most conclusive: 1. From this verse it appears that Jethro came to Moses while he was encamped at the mount of God: but they did not arrive at Horeb till the third month of the Exodus, (ch. xix. 1, 2.) 2. Moses (in Deut. i. 6, 9, 10, 12, 15.) relates, that when they were about to depart from been a wise and prudent man, and a worshipper of Jehovah; for he "rejoiced in all the goodness which JEHOVAH had done to Israel," and acknowledged him to be, if not the only, yet the supreme God; for he said, "Now I know that JEHOVAH is greater than all gods." Jethro appears to have been a priest of the patriarchal order, and therefore united with Moses and Aaron, and the elders of Israel, in a sacrificial feast. But his wisdom particularly appears in the advice which he subsequently gave to Moses, to appoint certain elders of the people to assist him in determining all petty controversies, which, among so discontented a people, were doubtless very numerous, and would soon wear out the strength of a younger man than Moses. "There may be over-doing (says Henry) in well-doing; and therefore our zeal must always be governed by discretion, that our good may not be evil spoken of. Wisdom is profitable to direct, that we may neither content ourselves with less than our duty, nor overtask ourselves with that which is beyond our strength."

Moses, however, following his advice, established an excellent system of graduated magistracy, by means of elders chosen from the people, with an appeal to himself in the last resort, Horeb, on the 20th day of the second month of the second year, he complained that he was not able to bear the burden of the government alone; and that he then appointed judges over thousands, hundreds, &c. the very transaction here recorded. —Baxter.

Ver. 19. Be thou for the people to God-ward.—That is, in all matters that require an appeal to God, do thou thyself act, to present the cause before him. Among the Arabians, the usual form of legal citation is, "Thou art invited to the tribunal of God."—Orient. Lit. No. 190. Even in our own country, every criminal pleads to be "tried by God," as well as his country.

Ver. 21. Rulers of thousands.—[Whatever matter the decarch, or ruler of ten, could not decide, went to the pentecontarch, or ruler of fifty, and thence by degrees to the hecatontarch, or ruler over a hundred, to the chiliarch, or ruler over a thousand, to Moses, and at length to God himself. Each magistrate had the care or inspection of only ten men: the decarch superintended ten private characters; the hecatontarch ten decarchs; and the chiliarch ten hecatontarchs. An exactly similar system obtained in the kingdom of Peru. See Hertot's Canada.—Baxter.

and all this people shall also go to <sup>w</sup> their place in peace.

24 So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said.

25 And Moses chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

26 And they judged the people at all seasons: the hard causes they brought unto Moses, but every small matter they judged themselves.

27 And Moses let his father-in-law depart: and <sup>x</sup> he went his way into his own land.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 The people come to Sinai. 3 God's message by Moses unto the people out of the mount. 16 The fearful presence of God upon the mount.

IN the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they into the <sup>a</sup> wilderness of Sinai.

2 For they were departed from <sup>b</sup> Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness; and there Israel encamped before the mount.

3 ¶ And Moses went up unto God, and the Lord called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel;

4 Ye have seen what I <sup>c</sup> did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' <sup>d</sup> wings, and brought you unto myself.

5 Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a <sup>e</sup> peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine:

6 And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of <sup>f</sup> priests, and a holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

7 ¶ And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him.

8 And all the people answered together, and said, <sup>g</sup> All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the Lord.

9 And the Lord said unto Moses, Lo, I come and in all cases of peculiar difficulty. In nothing, however, is the wisdom of Jethro more apparent, than in the characters he advises Moses to select; "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness;" and they were to "judge the people at all seasons;" thus securing all the important objects of a good government, a wise and impartial judgment, promptly administered; for nothing tends more to the increase of crime, than the delay and uncertainty of justice. It is "because sentence is not executed speedily, that the hearts of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil." Eccles. viii. 11.

Jethro also shows his independence of mind, and the disinterestedness of his conduct, in that, after giving his advice, he immediately returns to his own country, without stopping to fill any one of those high departments, to which his talents and character would certainly have entitled him. Of Zipporah we hear little more; it is possible she might not long survive; if she did, her attention was wisely and prudently confined to her family and domestic concerns; and, perhaps, as she was a foreigner, with little intercourse with the children of Israel; for it seems she was viewed with a very jealous eye by Aaron and his sister. (See Numb. xii. 1.)

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. In the third month, . . . the same day.—This is differently explained, but the most usual interpretation is, on the first day of the third month, or the forty-sixth day after leaving Egypt. Next day, probably, Moses ascended the mount, and three days after the law was delivered, being the fiftieth day, which was the feast of Pentecost.—Scott and Dr. Clarke.—Wilderness of Sinai.—Dr. Shaw describes the desert (or wilderness) of Sinai as a large plain, more than a league in breadth, and nearly three in length, lying open to the N. E. but closed on the south by mount Sinai; (called by the Arabs Jebel Mousa, the mountain of Moses, and sometimes by way of eminence, El Tor, the Mount), is a range of mountains in the Peninsula formed by the gulfs of the Red sea. It consists of several peaks, the principal of which are Horeb and Sinai; the former, still called Oreb, being on the west, and the latter, called Tur Sina, on the east, at the foot of which is the convent of St.

unto <sup>h</sup> thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the Lord.

10 ¶ And the Lord said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and <sup>i</sup> sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes, 11 And be ready against the third day: for the third day the Lord will come <sup>j</sup> down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai.

12 ¶ And thou shalt set bounds unto the people round about, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: whosoever <sup>k</sup> toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death:

13 There shall not a hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned or shot through: whether it be beast or man, it shall not live: when the <sup>l</sup> trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.

14 And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, and sanctified the people, and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, Be ready against the third day: come <sup>m</sup> not at your wives.

16 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the <sup>n</sup> camp trembled.

17 And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it <sup>o</sup> in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice.

20 And the Lord came <sup>p</sup> down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount: and Moses went up.

21 And the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, <sup>q</sup> charge the people, lest they break through unto him out of the mountain," namely, from the sacred cloud which now rested on the top of it. But St. Stephen (Acts vii. 38.) says, it was the Angel that spake with Moses in the mount. "We find here, (says Dr. Hunter,) as in many other places of the Old Testament, the same person who is styled, in the course of the narration, the 'Angel of the Lord,' styling himself JEHOVAH, and God; exercising divine prerogatives, manifesting divine perfections, and claiming the homage which is due to Deity alone. The person, therefore, thus described, can be none other than the uncreated 'Angel of the Covenant,' who 'at sundry times, and in divers manners,' in maturing the work of redemption, assumed a sensible appearance; and, at length, in the fulness of time, united his divine nature to ours, and dwelt among men; and made them 'to behold his glory, as the glory of the only begotten son of the Father, full of grace and truth.'"

This divine person spake to Moses, saying, "Tell the children of Jacob, Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings;" that is, he carried them above all opposition: so it is repeatedly said, they came out "with a high hand;"—with a display of almighty power. "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me, a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." St. Peter, who evidently refers to this passage, addressing the converted Jews, and the Christian Catherine. (See Niebuhr, Travels.) Dr. Shaw conceives that the wilderness of Sinai, properly so called, is that part which is to the eastward of this mount; so that the removal of the Israelites from Rephidim, which was on the west, to the desert of Sinai, was only removing from one part of the mountain to another.]—Bogster.

Ver. 9. Thick cloud.—[From the real manifestations of JEHOVAH in a cloud, the heathen ascribed similar appearances to their false gods. Thus in Homer, Jupiter is described on mount Gargarus, 'veiled in a fragrant cloud.' Minerva enters the Grecian army, 'clad in a purple cloud;' when Apollo attended Hector, 'a veil of clouds involved his radiant head.']—Bogster.

Ver. 15. Come not at your wives.—But the word your is supplied, and Ainsworth reads, more literally, "Come not to a wife;" a prohibition given on some other serious occasions. (1 Sam. xxi. 4: 1 Cor. vii. 5.)

unto the LORD to <sup>a</sup> gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let the priests also, which come near to the LORD, sanctify themselves, lest the LORD break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai : for thou chargedst us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the LORD said unto him, Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee : but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, lest he break forth upon them.

25 So Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them.

church in general, tells them, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people : that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." Those who obey, and "keep his covenant," that is, apply to him as their covenant God in Christ, as they are eminently happy, so are they highly honoured. Not only is God their portion, but he is pleased to esteem them his "peculiar treasure."

This people, though of late so rebellious, and, alas! prone continually to rebel, now promise very fair, and say, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do ;" but it had been far better if, knowing their own weakness, they had prayed for strength to enable them to do it.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever." Here the Jewish commentators remark, that their fathers did not believe in Moses so much for the miracles which he wrought, because there might be, in their incredulous minds, a latent suspicion of sorcery, or enchantment ; but, say they, "Wherefore believed we in him? For that, standing at mount Sinai, which our own eyes did see, and not a stranger; and our own ears did hear, and not another; the fire, and the thunders, and the lightnings; and he went near unto the thick darkness, and a voice spake unto him, and we heard it: 'Moses, Moses, go say unto them,' thus said thus . . . This standing at mount Sinai, itself alone was an evident confirmation of his prophecy, that it was truth, and without any suspicion in it: as it is written, 'Lo, I come unto thee in the thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and may believe thee for ever.'"—(Maimonides, as quoted by Ainsworth.)

Various cautions were now given;—bounds were placed, that no person should touch the mountain under the penalty of death; that they were to wash themselves, and abstain from all carnal enjoyments, however lawful at other times, that their minds might be prepared, with the utmost seriousness, to listen to the voice of God.

"And it came to pass on the third day, in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet, exceeding loud; so that all the people that were in the camp trembled." And again we read, "And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly. And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice." Much of this description leads us to unite the ideas of a storm, a volcano, and an earthquake; but no idea can be formed of this trumpet (as distinct from thunder) but in reference to the last judgment, when "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead be raised." (1 Cor. xv. 52.)

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—6. The ten commandments: the first and second particularly.—These are commonly considered merely as a statement of the moral law, which, though true, is not exact. The whole of the moral law is completely comprehended in two commandments, the love of God, and of our neighbour, which are thus stated by our infallible Teacher; "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind: and thy neighbour as thyself." Matt. xxii. 37—39.

The ten commandments, however, are not entirely moral; they comprehend at least one positive institution, and that, in one point peculiar to the Mosaic dispensation, namely, the observance of the seventh day sabbath; for though the devotion of a part of our time to the public worship of God be a precept strictly moral, the proportion of that time, and particularly the appointment of the seventh day for that purpose, is a positive institution, as old, indeed, as the creation, but here solemnly ratified and confirmed. So the second commandment, though strictly moral, so far as it forbids idolatry, yet as respects the prohibition of graven images, has a particular reference to the circumstances of the Jews. This distinction between moral precepts and positive institutions, will be found of particular use and importance when we come to consider the change of the Jewish for the Christian dispensation; for precepts strictly and purely moral, being a transcript of the moral perfections of the Deity, can neither be altered nor repealed.

A still more important circumstance respecting these precepts is, that they reach to the secret thoughts and intents of the heart. This our Lord himself expressly teaches, as we shall have occasion presently to remark, in respect to several of them. The preface to these commands grounds their duty, not on the moral fitness of things, of which the people were little capable of judging; nor on the character of God as their Creator, in which all mankind were equally interested; but on their peculiar obligations to JEHOVAH, who had so recently delivered them from Egypt, with the most sensible display of his almighty power. And though we, as Christians, have no immediate concern with this deliverance; yet there is a redemption of vastly more importance, and enjoining the highest possible obligation, in which every nation on the earth is interested. And though it may be difficult to conceive any obligation superior to what is due from the creature to the Creator, yet certainly that of a sinner to his Redeemer is infinite; it also seems more tender, and no less binding:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, and all."

The first command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," not only forbids a preference of idols, but the admission of any competition or comparison; it means, thou shalt admit no idol into my presence; or, as the next commandment explains and amplifies it, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing," &c. Here seems a particular allusion to the objects of Egyptian idolatry, the sun "in heaven," the ox "on earth," and the crocodile "in the waters under the earth;" beside idols in the human form. We must not, however, understand this as an absolute prohibition, either of statuary, or the other imitative arts, which were all employed, by divine appointment, in the decorations of the tabernacle and temple, particularly carving, gilding, and needlework, in which the Hebrews seem to have excelled. But the spirit of the law was, to prohibit religious images; images in places of worship, either designed or liable to be applied to purposes of idolatry. "Thou shalt not bow down to them, nor serve them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God;" that is, jealous of idolatry in all its forms; and "visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." Now all idolaters are considered as haters of God, upon the same principle as a woman would be considered as hating her husband, who admits a rival in her affections. And the principle of visiting the iniquity of fathers upon their children, however it may be objected to, is certainly one on which the Governor of the world acts, in all the dispensations of his providence, not only as respects the concerns of nations, but of families. How often do the vices of one man entail disease on several successive generations? How often do children lose their patrimony, and languish in poverty, from the extravagance and folly of a parent? And in political crimes, especially, is not the blood of nobility tainted by the rebellion of an ancestor, which can only be restored by an act of royal favour?

As it respects a future state, however, children only suffer for the sins of their parents when they adopt them; and we have good reason to believe, that the sin of our first parent, in whatever sense it may be imputed to his posterity, will not be visited with final condemnation on any who have not made it their own by actual offences; much less on those who repent, and believe in the Lord Jesus. On this passage Scott remarks, "It is evident, that children in general are sufferers by the crimes of their parents; but Israel was under a peculiar covenant, which idolatry violated in its primary condition. If, then, the parents forfeited the covenant blessings, their posterity must suffer the effects of the forfeiture. As this was intended to restrain them from sin by means of natural affection, the third

CHAP. XX. Ver. 5. Will visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children.—This doth not contradict that of Ezek. xviii. 17. "The son shall not atone for the iniquity of his father;" the meaning of which is, that one man shall not be condemned for the sin of another, unless by commission, approbation, or some other way, he make it his own. But it is otherwise with temporal punishments, 2 Sam. xxiv. 15, 17; 1 Kings xiv. 12, 13.—Assembly's Annotations.

6 And showing <sup>1</sup>mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

7 Thou shalt not take the <sup>1</sup>name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him <sup>1</sup>guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 Remember the sabbath-day to keep it holy.

9 Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work:

10 But the <sup>1</sup>seventh day is the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do <sup>1</sup>any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

11 For in six <sup>1</sup>days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the <sup>1</sup>sabbath-day, and hallowed it.

12 Honour <sup>1</sup>thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

13 Thou shalt not <sup>1</sup>kill.

14 Thou shalt not commit <sup>1</sup>adultery.

17 Thou shalt not covet thy <sup>1</sup>neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.

18 ¶ And all the people saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off.

19 And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die.

20 And Moses said unto the people, Fear not: for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces, that ye sin not.

21 And the people stood afar off, and Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was.

22 And the LORD said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel; Ye have seen that I have talked with you from heaven.

23 Ye shall not make with me gods of silver, neither shall ye make unto you gods of gold.

24 ¶ An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen: in all places where I record my <sup>1</sup>name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee.

25 And if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not <sup>1</sup>build it of hewn stone; for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it.

26 Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Laws for servants: 12 for manslaughter: 16 for stealers of men: 17 for owners of parents.

NOW these are the judgments which thou shalt <sup>1</sup>set before them.

2 If thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years <sup>1</sup>he shall serve: and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

3 If he came in <sup>1</sup>by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.

4 If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters, the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 ¶ And if the <sup>1</sup>servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto the judges: he shall also bring him to the door, or and fourth generation only are mentioned; for they could not expect to see more of their descendants, and would be less concerned about their remote posterity; or it may imply, that the Lord being ready to forgive, the effects would cease after that period, unless the children persisted in the sins of their parents. In every age, whatever brings any family into the visible church, and under the means of grace, is a benefit to that family, and often to its remote posterity; even "to thousands" of generations; that is, (says the writer just quoted,) "to successive generations, to the end of time." See exposition of Deut. ch. v.

Ver. 7—26. The remainder of the commandments.—The third, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," has a twofold reference; first, to perjury, which is, indeed, the most gross and awful profanation of God's sacred name, as it calls upon him to witness falsehood and deception; and secondly, it forbids the trifling and unnecessary use of oaths, or other profanations of God's sacred name. The only justifiable use of an "oath is for confirmation," and to "put an end to all strife;" oaths should, therefore, be used with all reverence, and on occasions only of importance. The wanton use of God's sacred name, therefore, in light and vain conversation, is not only criminal, but is a folly allied to madness—it is trifling with that God, who is to his enemies "a consuming fire."

The fourth commandment enjoins the observation of the holy sabbath, in which we may regard, 1. The duty of remembering it. There are circumstances in which Christians have been placed, wherein it has been difficult to remember it: such was the case of the Israelites in Egypt, where it is not likely they were allowed to keep it. 2. We "must keep it holy:" not only abstracted from worldly business, but devoted to sacred purposes: and the master of the family is not only to observe the precept himself, but to enjoin it on his servants, and to give the privilege of it, so far as regards rest, even to his labouring cattle. The observation of the sabbath is, however, no less a privilege than it is a duty; as it affords (or ought to afford) opportunity to servants and others to enjoy the privileges of public and social worship, who would otherwise have no opportunity to attend it; and suggests an admonition to those who, amidst the bustle of life, would be very liable to forget it.

The remaining precepts regard the second table, our duty to our neighbour; on which we need only to remark, that they all extend to the inmost thoughts of the heart, as already mentioned: thus, to honour parents, implies filial affection, and embraces all the duties of subordination; for the parent was originally master and magistrate, priest and king, in his own family; and all ranks of governors only exercise their authority with propriety when they render it parental. The negative precepts, "Thou shalt not kill—commit adultery—steal—bear false witness," &c. forbid causeless and immoderate anger, lascivious thoughts, fraudulent designs, perjury, calumny, and every species of deception. The tenth commandment is made special and particular, as if from foresight, that covetousness was to be the besetting sin of the children of Israel.

The remainder of this chapter seems to require little remark from us. It shows the awful impression that the revelation from Sinai had made upon the people of Israel; and, when taken in connexion with their subsequent history, affords us a useful lesson on the insufficiency of any outward circumstances duly to impress the heart, without the aid of divine grace.

The three last verses regard the erection of an altar, previous to the establishment of the tabernacle and temple; and show that the primitive forms of worship were very plain and simple, and that the first altars were either mounds of earth, or masses of the rock. This simplicity, however, was far from impeding the divine blessing. He whose throne is in the heavens, and the earth his footstool, has said, without any regard to the pomp of earthly temples, "In all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee and bless thee."

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—36. Laws respecting slavery, manslaughter, and misdemeanors.—Our Lord, speaking of divorces plains this of a Canaanitish woman, who, with her children, might be bought and sold.

Ver. 6. Shall bring him to the judges.—Heb. the Elohim, "the gods," by whom some understand the magistrates, but others, the divine presence; that is, before the Shekinah, or the most holy place.—The boring of the ear of a slave.—This significant ceremony was intended as a mark of permanent servitude, and was calculated to impress the servant with the duty of hearing all his master's orders, and obeying them punctually. We learn from Juvenal, and Petronius, that this ancient custom also prevailed in Syria and Arabia.—Bagster. Cicero rallies a Libyan, who pretended he could not hear him, by saying, "It is not because your ears are not sufficiently bored;" alluding to his having been a slave.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt not take, &c.—In an oracle of the Pythoness, mentioned by Herodotus, it is said, that Perjury had had a nameless son, who, though he had neither hands nor feet, speedily overtook the criminal, and destroyed his whole race.—Orient. Lit. No. 196.

Ver. 24. An altar of earth.—Bp. Patrick quotes from Tertullian's Apology, a remark that, as the ancient Romans, in the time of Numa, had neither sumptuous temples nor images, so they had only altars of turf, formed hastily, and without art.

Ver. 25. Not build it of hewn stone.—That there may be no idolatrous images, or magical figures, carved upon it, as was common among the heathens, particularly the Egyptians.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 4. If his master had given him a wife.—Dr. Clarke, ex-unto the door-post: and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever.

7 ¶ And if a man <sup>a</sup> sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out as <sup>r</sup> the men-servants do.

8 If she <sup>s</sup> please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell <sup>b</sup> her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt <sup>i</sup> deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

10 If he take him another wife; her food, her raiment, and her <sup>i</sup> duty of marriage shall he not diminish.

11 And if he do not these three unto her, then shall she go out free without money.

12 ¶ He that <sup>k</sup> smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

13 And <sup>i</sup> if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place <sup>m</sup> whither he shall flee.

14 But if a man come <sup>a</sup> presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine <sup>a</sup> altar, that he may die.

15 And he that smiteth his <sup>p</sup> father, or his mother, shall be surely put to death.

16 ¶ And he that <sup>a</sup> stealeth a man, and <sup>r</sup> selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

17 ¶ And he that <sup>a</sup> curseth his <sup>r</sup> father or his mother, shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed:

19 If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: <sup>r</sup> only he shall pay for <sup>r</sup> the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

20 And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be <sup>w</sup> surely punished.

21 Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money.

22 ¶ If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and

23 And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life,

24 Eye <sup>r</sup> for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

26 And if a man <sup>r</sup> smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go <sup>a</sup> free for his eye's sake.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

30 If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the <sup>r</sup> ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a man-servant or maid-servant; he shall give unto their master thirty <sup>d</sup> shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

33 ¶ And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The owner of the pit shall make it <sup>a</sup> good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 And if one man's ox hurt another's that he die, then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it, and the dead ox also they shall divide.

36 Or if it be known that the ox hath used to <sup>r</sup> push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox, and the dead shall be his own.

says, Moses suffered them to the Israelites "because of the hardness of their hearts:" (Matt. xix. 8.) and the same remark will apply to slavery, retaliation, and various other evils which were unavoidable, in the rude state of society among them, when they came out of Egypt; these things may exist under the Christian economy, but are inconsistent with it. While, however, these evils were tolerated for a time, they were restrained and moderated by certain regulations in this and the following chapters, which are full of moral justice, and legislative wisdom. We shall not attempt to examine these judicial laws minutely and distinctly; but we may offer a few remarks on the different classes of them.

1. On slavery. "The Israelites (says Scott) sometimes sold themselves or their children through poverty; magistrates sold some persons for their crimes; and creditors were, in certain cases, allowed to sell their insolvent debtors. In these ways slavery had been, or would soon be, introduced among the Israelites, even that of their brethren, as well as strangers; and God did not see good, in the judicial law, totally to prohibit this, and several other things which are not agreeable to the perfect demands of the moral law." Various laws, however, were made to regulate an evil which, from its universal prevalence, could not be immediately suppressed. The term of slavery was not for life, but restrained to six years; and then the slave shall have the right to go out free, and if married at the commencement of his servitude, to take his wife with him. But if his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him children, he has the option to remain with them "for ever;" that is, till the year of the jubilee, when all slavery must terminate. Wise laws also are imposed to restrain the cruelty or licentiousness of masters; and men-stealers are in all cases to be punished with death.

2. The rest of the chapter is taken up with providing against accidents between man and man, or from cattle; and inflicting punishments for various misdemeanors. The spirit of these laws is, to cherish the utmost tenderness for human life, and to

Ver. 10. Her food, &c.—[Sheathrah, "her flesh;" he shall not only afford her a sufficient quantity of food, as before, but of the same quality. She is not to be fed, like a common slave, with a sufficiency of bread, vegetables, milk, &c., but with her customary supply of flesh, and other agreeable articles of food. See Harmer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Stealeth a man.—[Among the Romans also in later times, the penalty of death was to be inflicted for this crime by the Fabian Law.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Pay the loss.—[This was a wise and excellent institution. The same provision is made in the civil law; and most courts of justice still regulate their decisions in such cases by this Mosaic precept. According to the laws of Plato, he that wounded another in his anger, if the wound was curable, was to pay double the damage sustained by the wounded man. If it was incurable, or left a remarkable scar, he was to pay fourfold.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. An eye for an eye.—[This is the earliest account we have of the Lex Talionis, law of like for like, which afterwards prevailed among the Greeks and Romans. One of the Diogenes Laertius, had ordained among the Athenians. Some of the most enlightened nations of antiquity, that whosoever knocked out the eye of a person who had but one, should lose both his. According to the most ancient Roman laws, the Twelve Tables, the person that broke the limb of another must lose the same limb, unless the injured person would consent to accept a pecuniary compensation, to be levied at the discretion of the praetor. It prevails more or less in most civilized countries; and is fully acted upon in the Canon law, with respect to calumniators: "If the calumniator fail in the proof of his accusation, let him receive the same punishment which he wished to have inflicted on the accused." Nothing, however, of this kind was left to private revenge; but the magistrate awarded the punishment when the fact was proved.]—Bagster.

Ver. 28. Ox gore, &c.—[Mischief of this kind was provided against by most nations: it appears that the Romans twisted hay about the horns of dangerous cattle, that people might observe and avoid them. Hence that saying of Horace: "He has hay on his horns, fly for life!" The laws of the Twelve Tables ordered that the owner should pay for what damages he committed, or deliver him to the person injured.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Thirty shekels.—[About $20.00.] the price of a slave. See Zech. x. 12, 13; Matt. xxvi. 15.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Of theft; 5 of damage; 7 of trespasses; 14 of borrowing; 16 of fornication; 18 of witchcraft; 19 of bestiality; 20 of idolatry; 21 of strangers, widows, and fatherless; 25 of usury; 26 of pledges; 28 of reverence to magistrates; 29 of the first-fruits.

IF a man shall steal an ox, or a <sup>a</sup> sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and <sup>b</sup> four sheep for a sheep.

2 If a thief be <sup>c</sup> found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall <sup>d</sup> no blood be shed for him.

3 If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him: for he should make full restitution; if he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft.

4 If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall <sup>e</sup> restore double.

5 ¶ If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field: of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard shall he <sup>f</sup> make restitution.

6 If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

7 ¶ If a man shall deliver unto his neighbour money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; if the thief be found, let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing which another challengeth to be his, the cause of both parties shall <sup>g</sup> come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

11 Then shall an <sup>h</sup> oath of the LORD be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods; and the guard against wanton cruelty or neglect; to prevent, as much as possible, litigious altercations, and to promote domestic peace.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—31. Various judicial laws.—Of these laws a few only require explanation or remark. Verses 2 and 3 mark the difference of burglary and common robbery. A thief shall restore four or five fold, as the case may be; if his blood be shed, it shall be required; but if he be found "breaking up," or into the premises in the night, or before sunrise, and blood be shed in repelling him, it is burglary, and his blood shall not be required. The laws respecting the kind treatment of strangers, and with regard to taking a pledge of the poor, certainly claim our admiration. The outer garment worn by the Israelites (which the Arabians call a hyke) not only covered their shoulders in the day, but formed the whole of their bedding at night. The precept, ver. 28. "Thou shalt not revile the gods," &c. is differently understood. Certainly it cannot refer to the idols of the heathen, which they were always to hold in execration. Generally, the two members of the verse are considered parallel, and the term Elohim, here rendered gods, is understood to mean judges, as in chap. xxi. 6. and ver. 8. of this. But some here understand it in its highest sense, as referring to the great CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1. Shall restore, &c.—[There is a smaller compensation required in other things, (ver. 3.) and also a disproportion between an ox and a sheep. The reason of the former is, as Maimonides explains it, because money, goods, &c. are better guarded in houses and cities, than cattle in a field; which consequently can be more easily stolen. The reason of the latter seems to be, as it is explained by Bp. Patrick, that an ox was of greater value, and more useful for purposes of husbandry. This is more equitable than the constitutions of Plato, which required all thefts to be punished alike by paying double.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. If fire break out.—Before the autumnal rains, it is customary to burn up the dry herbage, which, if great care is not taken, is very liable to set fire to the corn.—Harnier.

Ver. 8. The judges.—Hebrew, Elohim, which is used for judges in the preceding chapter, (ver. 6.) and frequently. See the Exposition of ver. 28.

Ver. 13. Bring it for witness.—[Or rather, "Let him bring," aid hatte-rathah, a testimony or evidence of the thing torn, such as the horns, hoofs owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And if it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be torn in pieces; then let him bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 ¶ And if a man borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it, he shall surely make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be a hired thing, it came for his hire.

16 ¶ And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

17 If her father utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins.

18 ¶ Thou shalt not suffer a <sup>a</sup> witch to live.

19 ¶ Whosoever lieth with a <sup>b</sup> beast shall surely be put to death.

20 ¶ He that sacrificeth unto <sup>c</sup> any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

21 ¶ Thou shalt neither vex a <sup>d</sup> stranger, nor oppress him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

22 Ye shall not afflict any <sup>e</sup> widow, or fatherless child.

23 If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry;

24 And my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be <sup>f</sup> widows, and your children fatherless.

25 ¶ If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as a <sup>g</sup> usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

26 ¶ If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to <sup>h</sup> pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? and it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me, that I will <sup>i</sup> hear; for I am <sup>j</sup> gracious.

Supreme. "Thou shalt not revile (or blaspheme) God, or curse the ruler of thy people;" making the whole parallel in sense to the exhortation of St. Peter, "Fear God, and honour the king." (1 Pet. ii. 17.)

The consecration of the first-born to God had been before ordained, (chap. xiii. 2, 12.) and probably also the first-fruits of the harvest and the vintage; but it is here subjoined, that they must not be delayed beyond the eighth day, the day on which circumcision was performed; and the object in all these precepts was, that they might be "a holy people unto the Lord." The heathen, though ignorant of the true origin of this rite, devoted to their gods the first-fruits both of their harvest and vintage. Thus Pliny says, that the Romans never tasted either their new corn or wine, till the priests had offered the first-fruits to the gods. So Horace—

— "Whate'er your garden yields,
The choicest honours of your cultur'd fields,
To him be sacrificed."

The apostle James considers believers as being sons of God, and "a kind of first-fruits of his creatures;" and St. John speaks of "the redeemed among men" as "the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb." (James i. 18. Rev. xiv. 4.)

&c. This is still the law in some countries among graziers: if an animal entrusted to a person be lost, and the keeper asserts that it was devoured by dogs, &c. the law obliges him to produce the horns and hoofs, because on these the owner's mark is generally found. If these can be produced, the keeper is acquitted. A similar law is found in the Code of Gentoo Laws, which obliges a cowherd to bring the head, tail, fore-foot, or some such convincing proof of an animal which has died of a distemper, in order to be acquitted.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. If a man entice a maid.—That is, seduce her. See Deut. xxii. 28, 29.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.—For the laws against witchcraft, see Deut. xviii. 10.

Ver. 27. Wherein shall he sleep?—Niebuhr describes the hyke, or outward garment of a poor Arab, as forming his bedding also. "With the cloth which he wears on his shoulders, he covers his whole body, and sleeps quite happy and contented."—Orient. Lit. No. 206

26 ¶ Thou shalt not <sup>a</sup> revile the <sup>v</sup> gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people.
29 ¶ Thou shalt not delay to <sup>w</sup> offer the first of thy ripe <sup>x</sup> fruits, and of thy <sup>y</sup> liquors: the first-born of thy <sup>z</sup> sons shalt thou give unto me.
30 Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: seven <sup>a</sup> days it shall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it me.
31 And ye shall <sup>b</sup> be holy men unto me: neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of <sup>c</sup> beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

CHAPTER XXIII.

<sup>1</sup> Of slander and false witness: 3 of justice: 4 of charitableableness: 10 of the year of rest: 12 of the sabbath: 13 of idolatry: 14 of the three feasts. 20 An angel is promised, with a blessing, if they obey him.
THOU shalt not <sup>a</sup> raise a false <sup>b</sup> report: put not thy hand with the wicked to be an <sup>c</sup> unrighteous witness.
2 Thou shalt not follow a <sup>d</sup> multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou <sup>e</sup> speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment:
3 ¶ Neither shalt thou countenance a <sup>f</sup> poor man in his cause.
4 ¶ If thou meet thine enemy's <sup>g</sup> ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.
5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his <sup>h</sup> burden, and wouldest forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.
6 ¶ Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy <sup>i</sup> poor in his cause.
7 Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not <sup>j</sup> justify the wicked.
8 And thou shalt <sup>k</sup> take no gift; for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.
9 Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the <sup>l</sup> heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—19. Farther political laws, and gracious promises.—The 2d and 3d verses of this chapter enjoin strict impartiality in judgment. "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil," is an excellent maxim, but the original is more comprehensive. The Hebrew Rabbins include the great, as well as the many. "Thou shalt not follow the great, the mighty, the learned, to do evil: neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after (the) many (or great) to wrest judgment." An ancient Jewish commentator tells us, "that, among the Jews, the judges of less authority and character were to give their opinion first, for fear they should be biased by the judgment of those of greater." On the contrary, a sycophant Roman senator desired to know the opinion of Tiberius in a certain case, and then he should soon be able to form his own!
The three great annual feasts are here enjoined, namely, the passover, or feast of unleavened bread, to which was annexed that of the first-fruits; the pentecost, or feast of harvest; and the feast of tabernacles, (or booths,) and of the ingathering at the end of the year, when all the fruits of the earth and of the vintage were completely gathered in. Of these feasts, two things must be remarked. 1. That all the males were to attend them from a certain age; that is, according to Maimonides, every son that can hold his father by the hand, and go up from the gates of Jerusalem to the mount of the temple; his father is bound to cause him to go up and appear with him, that he may catechise him (or train him up) in the commandments. 2. That females, slaves, and men that were lame, infirm, blind, &c. were not to attend. As to the women, the learned Joseph Mede gives three reasons for their non-attendance. 1. From the weakness of their sex; 2. From the danger of their virtue, amidst so vast a mixed multitude of men; and, 3. From the necessity of their remaining at home to take care of their families and houses.—One of the prohibitions here given may seem singular to many: "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk." This is, first, a lesson of humanity, like that which forbids taking the dam with the young of birds: (Deut. xxi. 6.) and secondly, a prohibition of an ancient practice of idolatry, which they had probably seen in Egypt. Dr. Cudworth quotes the following from an old Karaitic manuscript:—"It was a custom of the ancient heathens, when they had gathered in all their fruits, to take a kid and boil it in the dam's milk; and then, in a magical way, to go about and besprinkle with it all their trees, fields, gardens, and orchards, thinking thereby to make them more abundantly fruitful." Spenser has shown that the Zabians also used this idolatrous custom.

Ver. 20—33. A guide promised to the Israelites.—"Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way," &c. To the rank and character of this angel we have repeatedly adverted; (see on Gen. xvi. 7. xxxii. 24. xlviii. 16. Exod. xiv. 19. xix. 1.) and some particulars are here added, which seem to confirm the opinion above given, that this angel was no less a person than the Son of God himself. It is here said, "My name is in him;" i. e. my peculiar name, JEHOVAH. Christ is "the image of the invisible God," the "brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person;" and being thus "in the form of God, he thought it no robbery to be equal with God;" yet did he humble himself, first, to be the guardian angel of the Israelites, and, subsequently, the Redeemer of mankind. (Col. i. 15. Heb. i. 3. Phil. ii. 6.)
The modern Jews, indeed, explain this text of a created angel; but not so their fathers. Some of the ancient Rabbins say, this angel was "Metatron, the great scribe;" alluding probably to Isaiah ix. 6. where Messiah is called "the Counsellor," which the Septuagint renders, "The Angel of the Great Council;" called the Angel of the Covenant, Mal. iii. 1. But the most express and remarkable illustration of his character is quoted by Dr. Clarke from Philo Judæus, who says, "God, as the shepherd and king, conducts all things according to law and righteousness, having established over them his right Word, his only begotten Son, who, as the viceroy of the Great King, takes care of, and ministers to, this sacred flock. For it is somewhere said, 'Behold, I AM; and I will send my angel before thy face to keep thee in the way.'"
Of this great angel it is said, "Beware of him, and obey his CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 2. Thou shalt not follow a multitude, &c.—See the Biblioth. Bib. on this passage; also Ainsworth and Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 5. And wouldest forbear to help him.—Margin, "Wilt cease to help him," or "And wouldest cease to leave (thy business) for him; thou shalt surely leave it (to join) with him." All these versions mean, that the ass, even of an enemy, is not to be left to perish under his burden in a ditch.

voke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him.

22 But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries.

23 For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I will cut them off.

24 Thou shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do after their works: but thou shalt utterly overthrow them, and quite break down their images.

25 And ye shall serve the Lord your God, and he shall bless thy bread, and thy water; and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee.

26 There shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren, in thy land: the number of thy days I will fulfil.

27 I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come, and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee.

28 And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee.

29 I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

32 Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods.

33 They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, it will surely be a snare unto thee.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Moses is called up into the mountain: 6 he sprinkles the blood of the covenant. The glory of God appeareth. 15 Moses goeth into the mountain, where he continueth forty days and forty nights.

AND he said unto Moses, Come up unto the Lord, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye afar off.

2 And Moses alone shall come near the Lord, but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people go up with him.

3 And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do.

4 And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord.

6 And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar.

7 And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient.

8 And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel:

10 And they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire-stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness.

voice; provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions." This last sentence has been urged to prove that this angel was, as we have said, Christ himself; for who else could pardon? But, on the other hand, some have thought it inconsistent with his gracious character; but if we refer to what is said above, chap. vi., on the name JEHOVAH, we shall perhaps see the propriety of the caution. The awful name residing in the angel, was to remind them of the terrible judgments inflicted on the Egyptians, the fame and terror of which going before them, was to intimidate their enemies; as it is said, "I will send my fear before thee;" and, at the same time, the recollection of them should guard them against treating himself with presumption or contempt. He, in whom this name resided, must not be trifled with.

A host of hornets, also, were to precede them, and gradually prepare their way; and wherever Israel obtained possession, one of their first aims should be to destroy the objects and monuments of idolatry, lest they should be seduced into the same crimes. It may be thought strange that idolatry, which to us appears infinitely absurd, should be so bewitching to the ancients; and this may be attributed partly to the pomp and splendour of their religious rites, but still more to the license it allowed to the grosser passions of mankind; the indulgence of which, in many instances, formed a part of their religious worship. The same thing is observable in the popular superstitions of the present day. Christianity is too simple in its services, and too strict in its morality, to suit the taste of carnal minds.

Ver. 23. Mine Angel shall bring thee unto the Amorites, &c.—The Samaritan, LXX., Coptic, and at least one Hebrew MS., add the Gergashites, which makes up the seven nations of Canaan.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 28. I will send hornets before thee.—This is repeated Deut. vii. 20. and we read of its fulfilment in Josh. xxiv. 12. (Tzitzrah, the hornet, is probably so called from the Arabic zarrah, to lay prostrate, strike down, because of the destruction occasioned by the violence of its sting.)—Bagster. The hornet is a large species of wasp, very strong and bold, and its sting terrible. Eliau says, that the Phaseliens (a people descended from the Canaanites) were forced to leave their habitations by wasps; and many similar instances may be found in Orient. Litt. No. 211; or Taylor's Expos. Index.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 10. A paved work of a sapphire-stone.—[Sappir, is without doubt the sapphire; which is a most beautiful precious stone of a fine blue colour second only to the diamond in lustre, hardness, and value. The CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—18. The covenant with God ratified by sacrifice.—Two or three important circumstances in this chapter call for our remark. First, the covenant with God, which was written by Moses, and contained the precepts recited in the preceding chapters, including the ten commandments. To this the people, on their part, all answer with one voice, and say as before, "All the words which the Lord hath said will we do." A sacrifice of burnt-offerings and peace-offerings is then offered upon an altar, hastily erected beneath the mount; and Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it both on the altar and on the people, saying, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." Thus without shedding of blood there was no covenant, any more than there was remission of sins, for almost all things were by the law purged with blood. (Heb. ix. 18—22.) For the doctrine of atonement is (as it were) the heart of both the old and new dispensations, without which there is no salvation under either. 2. After this, Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, were admitted, if we may so express it, into the court of heaven, and beheld the glory of the divine majesty. "They saw the God of Israel;" the starry heavens themselves forming the pavement of his celestial throne. Some have supposed that Jehovah was here manifested in a human form: but since it is elsewhere said, that "they saw no manner of similitude in the mount," it seems more reasonable to understand it of an appearance of glory only, as it is said, verse 17, it "was like devouring fire on the top of ancient oriental sapphire is supposed to have been the same as the lapis lazuli. Pliny informs us that "the sapphire glitters with golden spots; that they are of an azure or sky-blue colour, but rarely intermixed with purple." The ruby and topaz are considered of the same genus. Supposing, says Dr. A. Clarke, that these different kinds of sapphires are here intended, how glorious must a pavement be, constituted of polished stones of this sort, perfectly transparent, with an effulgence of heavenly splendour poured upon them!—Bagster. The late king of France (Louis XVI.) had a sapphire with "a stripe of fine yellow topaz in the middle."—Encyc. Brit.

Ver. 11. He laid not his hand.—That is, he inflicted no punishment, as the term is generally taken, (see Neh. xiii. 21. Psalm lv. 20.) and as the Greek and the Chaldee paraphrase here explains it, notwithstanding the prohibitions (chap. xix. 21, 24. xxiv. 2.) against any of them attempting to ascend the mount.

Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.

12 And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the <sup>h</sup> mount, and be there: and I will give thee <sup>h</sup> tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.

13 And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua: and Moses went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.

15 ¶ And Moses went up into the mount, and a <sup>h</sup> cloud covered the mount.

16 And the <sup>h</sup> glory of the Lord abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like <sup>h</sup> devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel.

18 And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount: and Moses was in the <sup>h</sup> mount forty days and forty nights.

the mount, in the eyes of the children of Israel."—It is added, that they (the nobles, &c.) "did eat and drink," which the Jewish doctors explain figuratively: and the Chaldee paraphrase says, "They saw the glory of God, and rejoiced in their sacrifices which were accepted, as if they had eaten and drunk." But as it was customary to partake of the sacrifices, especially the peace-offering, so it seems more natural to explain it literally, as do the Assembly's annotators, of "making a sacred banquet in the sacrifices offered just before, which forms a proper type of the Lord's Supper, which is a feast upon a sacrifice, wherein we enjoy communion with the Lord."

Lastly, Moses is again called up into the mountain alone, to receive the law, written "by the finger of God upon tablets of stone;" and there he abode forty days and nights, (perhaps including the six preceding,) as Elijah did afterwards in the same mount Horeb, and Jesus in the wilderness of Judea. (Kings xix. 8. Matt. iv. 2.)

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—40. Offerings required for the building of the Temple.—These offerings, probably, were derived chiefly from the free-will offerings of the Egyptians to the Israelites on their leaving Egypt; and were, therefore, the more valuable as free-will offerings from Israel to Jehovah. As they were voluntary, the proportions were to be regulated by the means and liberality of the giver. "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." (2 Cor. viii. 12.)

Directions are now given for the formation of the Tabernacle and its sacred furniture, of which the principal article was the "ark of the testimony," the typical design of which gives it more importance than the choice wood of which it was composed, or the precious metal with which it was overlaid. The ark itself was a chest, about four feet five inches in length, and two feet eight inches in breadth and depth. This was called the "ark of the covenant," because therein were contained the two tables of stone on which the law was inscribed, with some other articles; and the covering of gold was called the mercy-seat, or propitiatory, because on this was sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice to make atonement. This cover was wreathed, or indented, somewhat in the manner of an ancient crown; and upon it were placed, at the two ends, carved figures, with wings that overshadowed the ark. These figures appear to have been so well known at the time, that no description is here given; we shall, therefore, defer our inquiries into their peculiar form, till we come to consider the larger figures in the Temple.

As to the typical import of these things, from the explanations given by the apostle to the Hebrews, (chap. ix.) there can be no doubt of the general design, though of the minutiae, as the apostle says in one instance, "we cannot now speak particularly." The Tabernacle itself was built as a residence for the Shekinah, the glory of the God of Israel; who, as Israel dwelt in tents, condescended to dwell in a tent also; but when the ilex kind, like the cochineal worm in the Opuntia of America; which is by naturalists arranged under the same genus as the Arabic Kermes, which also denotes this colour. —Bagster.

Ver. 10. An ark.—(Aron, denotes a chest or coffer, in general; but is supplied particularly to the chest or ark, in which the testimony or two tables of the covenant were laid up; on the top of which was the propitiatory or mercy-seat; and at the end of which were the cherubim of gold; between whom the visible sign of the appearance of God appeared as seated upon his throne. We meet with imitations of this divinely instituted emblem among several heathen nations, both ancient and modern. Apuleius, describing an idolatrous procession after the Egyptian mode, says, "A chest, or ark, was carried by an-

his people came to a city of habitations, required likewise a house to dwell in. As to the Tabernacle, Moses not only received directions for building it, but had a model or pattern shewn him in the mount, from which it is probable he himself took these directions. As this tent was designed for the special residence of Deity, so it was calculated to typify the divine Logos, or "Word of God," who was "made flesh, and dwelt amongst us." (John i. 14.)

The ark itself also typified the same divine person, in the dignity and purity of his nature, being made of wood incorruptible, covered with pure gold. The mercy-seat brings to our mind the atonement that he offered; the chest itself showed, that the law of God resided in his heart, as the tables of stone in the Mosaic ark. We decline to enter now into the mystery of the cherubim, but from these figures looking down upon the ark, we may safely admit the inference of the apostle, concerning the truths and mysteries of the gospel, that "unto these things the angels earnestly desire to look;" and that unto them is "made known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God." (1 Peter i. 12. Ephes. iii. 10.)

"The table of shewbread," containing twelve cakes or loaves, was to exhibit the various provisions of God's house, adapted to every tribe of the spiritual Israel; and the golden candlestick (or rather lamp) represented him who is the "true light;" and who, coming into the world and the church, enlightens every other, containing their secret things, entirely concealing the mysteries of religion." Plutarch, describing the rites of Osiris, says, "On the tenth day of the month, at night, they go down to the sea, and the stologists, together with the priests, carry forth the sacred chest, in which is a small boat or vessel of gold." — Bagster.

Ver. 33. Shittim-wood.—Shittim-wood is probably the acacia Nilotica. Jerome says, that the Shittim-wood grows in the deserts of Arabia, and is like white thorn, as to its colour and leaves, but the tree is so large as to furnish very long planks. The wood is hard, tough, and extremely beautiful. It is thought he means the black acacia, because that is the most common tree in the deserts of Arabia. It is of the size of a large mulberry tree. The spreading branches and larger limbs are armed with thorns, which grow three together. The bark is rough; and the leaves are oblong, standing opposite each other.—The flowers, though somewhat white, are generally of a bright yellow; and the fruit, which resembles a bean, is contained in pods like those of the lupin. "The Acacia," says Dr. Shaw, "being by much the largest and most common tree in the deserts," (Arabia Petraea), we have some reason to conjecture, that the shittim-wood was the wood of the acacia; especially as its flowers are of an excellent smell, for the Shittah tree is, in Isa. xli. 19, joined with the myrtle and other fragrant shrubs. It may be remarked, that of the two Hebrew names, Shittim is masculine, and Shittah feminine. So Bruce says "the MALE is called Saiei; for it proceeds the gum Arabic on an incision with an axe."—Bagster Herodotus tells us the Egyptians build their man who does not shut his eyes against the illuminating influences of the Holy Spirit.

The great object of all this was to provide a suitable emblematic dwelling for the God of Israel: "and here (says he) will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims." To hold communion with God, properly understood, is the great end and object of public worship, under both the old and new dispensations.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—37. Building of the Tabernacle.—With this typical description of Christ and his church before our eyes, let us ask ourselves what our judgment on these subjects is. Do we see any glory in the person of Christ? any excellency in his character, or preciousness in his salvation, or wisdom in the doctrine of the cross? Do we perceive any beauty in holiness, or any amiableness in the character of Christians? These things are hidden under external meanness, from the carnal eye of the superficial observer, but are spiritually discerned by every true believer; who sees, through the exterior covering, the internal glory and hidden excellency of heavenly things. As our judgment, choice, and consequent practice are, so is our state towards God. "To you that believe, Christ is precious."—Let us also examine ourselves, as to the state of our own hearts; whether we possess a consciousness of dependance on God, love to him, hatred of sin, desire after holiness, and a full pur-ships with it, because incorruptible. It is a species of thorn, and yields gum Arabic.

Ver. 31. A candlestick of pure gold.—This candlestick, (or rather chandelier,) consisted of an upright shaft, or pillar, with a lamp at top, and three branches on each side, (supposed to represent the seven days of the week,) each of which contained a small lamp, which was supplied with the purest oil.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1. The tabernacle. [For plans of the tabernacle, see plates.]—[Mishcan, from shachan, to dwell, means simply a dwelling-place or habitation. "When God had brought out the children of Israel out of Egypt," says the very learned Dr. Cudworth, "resolving to manifest himself in a peculiar manner present among them, he thought good to dwell amongst them in a visible and external manner; and therefore, while they were in the wilderness, and sojourned in tents, he would have a tent or tabernacle built, to sojourn with them also.—Now the tabernacle, being thus a house for God to dwell in visibly, to make up the notion of dwelling or habitation complete, there must be all things suitable to a house belonging to it.—Hence, in the holy place, there must be a table and a candlestick, because these were the ordinary furniture of a room. The table must have its dishes, and spoons, and bowls, and covers, belonging to it, though they were never used; and always be furnished with bread upon it. The candlestick must have its lamps continually burning." &c.]—Bagster.—With cherubims of cunning work.—Margat. "The work of a cunning workman, or embroiderer." The word cherubims, 5 Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second; that the loops may take hold one of another.

6 And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches: and it shall be one tabernacle.

7 ¶ And thou shalt make curtains of <sup>a</sup> goats' hair to be a covering upon the tabernacle: seven curtains shalt thou make.

8 The length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure.

9 And thou shalt couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the forefront of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

11 And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the <sup>a</sup> tent together, that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, shall hang over the back-side of the tabernacle.

13 And a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other <sup>a</sup> side of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle on this side and on that side, to cover it.

14 ¶ And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make boards for the tabernacle of shittim-wood standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two <sup>a</sup> tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another: thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And thou shalt make the <sup>a</sup> boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward.

19 And thou shalt make <sup>b</sup> forty sockets of silver under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle on the north side there shall be twenty boards,

21 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward thou shalt make six boards.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto <sup>k</sup> one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 And thou shalt make bars of shittim wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the <sup>l</sup> fashion thereof which was showed thee in the mount.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make a <sup>m</sup> vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and finetwined linen of cunning work: with cherubims shall it be made:

32 And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold upon the four sockets of silver.

33 And thou shalt hang up the vail under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the vail the ark of the testimony: and the vail shall divide unto you between the <sup>n</sup> holy place and the most holy.

34 And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place.

35 And thou shalt <sup>a</sup> set the table without the vail, and the candlestick over against the table on the side of the tabernacle toward the south: and thou shalt put the table on the north side.

pose of heart, through divine grace, to glorify him? Will our religion bear examination? and are we more careful to approve our hearts to God, than our characters to men? For notwithstanding all our imperfections, this state of mind is in the sight of God of great price.—The hypocrite is the reverse of all this; he keeps up a specious appearance before men, but he shrinks from examination; for "his inward part is very wickedness," and God knows it.—Thus also the Christian's comfort and his inheritance are not an outside show of mirth and prosperity, covering an aching heart, and a soul doomed to destruction; is now more usually spelt without the s, and more properly, as cherubim itself is plural.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt make curtains.—Of these there were four sets; 1. Of fine linen. 2. Of goat's hair, (a sort of camblet.) 3. Of rams' skins dyed red; and, 4. Of badgers' skins; which was the outward covering, and rendered the whole impervious to the rain.

Ver. 14. Rams' skins.—[Oroth ailm, meoddamin, literally, the skins of red rams. It is a fact attested by many respectable travellers, that in the Levant, sheep are often met with having red or violet coloured fleeces. Almost all ancient writers speak of the same thing. Homer describes the rams of Polyphemus as having a violet coloured fleece; and Pliny, Aristotle, and others, mention the same. From facts of this kind, it is very probable, that the fable of the golden fleece had its origin.—Badgers' skins.—Oroth techashim: which nearly all the ancient versions have taken to be the name of a colour; though they differ very much with regard to the particular colour in colour: the LXX., Vulgate, and Coptic, have skins dyed of a violet colour; the Syriac, acure; and the Arabic, black; and Bochart contends for the hyacinthus, a very deep blue. It is more probable, however, that it denotes an animal; for, as Dr. Geddes remarks, had the sacred writer meant to express only a variety of colour, he would hardly have repeated oroth, skins, after meoddamin, red, in ch. xxv. 5. It probably signifies the dolphin, as the Arabic tuchas, and dachas also denote."—Bochart.

but an inward sweetness and peace unobserved of men, and a glorious inheritance, reserved within the vail. Nay, the mean appearance of the church, and of the Christian, is often a security from persecution and temptation.—As every part of this spiritual building of God, in subserviency to his power and love, conduces to the stability of the whole, let us consider how much it behooves us to "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" let us watch against discontent, envy, ambition, and contention; and, each in his proper place, study to serve the common interests of genuine Christianity.—T. Scott.

Ver. 29. Overlay the boards with gold.—That is, with thin beaten gold, resembling our leaf gold, but probably much thicker.

Ver. 31. Thou shalt make a vail (or veil).—This was a large curtain, which divided the two parts of the tabernacle and temple. This was rent at the death of Christ, which rending the apostle makes typical of the rending of the body of Christ, thereby opening a way to heaven, Heb. ix. 8, 24; x. 19, 20. Compare Matt. xxvii. 51.—The word taches, often used in this chapter, signifies buttons, or clasps.

Ver. 32. Their hooks of gold.—[Waneyhem, which we translate their hooks, is rendered by the LXX. kephalides, and by the Vulgate, capita, capitals. Hence Calmet contends, 1. That if Moses does not mean the capitals of the pillars by this word, he mentions them no where else; and it would seem strange, that while he describes them with so much exactness, that he should not mention the capitals; or that pillars, every way so correctly formed, should have been destitute of this necessary ornament. 2. As Moses was commanded to make the roavim of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver, (chap. xxvii. 10, 11.) and the roavim of the pillars of the vail of gold (chap. xxxvii. 36.) and that 1775 shekels were employed in making them, overlaying their chapters, rasheyhem, their heads, and filleting them, (ch. xxxviii. 28.) it is more reasonable to suppose that all this is spoken of the capitals of pillars, than of any kind of hooks, especially as hooks are mentioned under the word taches or clasps.—Bochart.

36 ¶ And thou shalt make a <sup>p</sup> hanging for the door of the tent, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needle-work.

37 And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The altar of burnt-offering, with the vessels thereof: 9 the court of the tabernacle: 20 the oil for the lamp.

AND thou shalt <sup>a</sup> make an altar of shittim-wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad; the altar shall be four-square: and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

2 And thou shalt make the <sup>b</sup> horns of it upon the four corners thereof: his horns shall be of the same: and thou shalt overlay it with brass.

3 And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, and his shovels, and his basins, and his flesh-hooks, and his fire-pans: all the vessels thereof thou shalt <sup>c</sup> make of brass.

4 And thou shalt make for it a grate of network of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brazen rings in the four corners thereof.

5 And thou shalt put it under the compass of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6 And thou shalt make <sup>d</sup> staves for the altar, staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with brass.

7 And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to bear it.

8 Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: <sup>e</sup> as it was showed thee in the mount, <sup>f</sup> so shall they make it.

9 ¶ And thou shalt make the <sup>g</sup> court of the tabernacle: for the south side southward there shall be hangings for the court of fine twined linen of a hundred cubits long for one side:

10 And the twenty pillars thereof and their twenty sockets shall be of brass: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets shall be of silver.

11 And likewise for the north side in length there shall be hangings of a hundred cubits long, 21 In the tabernacle of the congregation without the vail, which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall <sup>n</sup> order it from evening to morning before the LORD: It shall be a <sup>o</sup> statute for ever unto their generations on the behalf of the children of Israel.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Aaron and his sons are set apart for the priest's office: 2 holy garments are appointed: 6 the ephod: 15 the breastplate: 30 the Urim and Thummim: 38 the plate of the mitre.

AND take thou unto thee <sup>a</sup> Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—21. Furniture of the Tabernacle.—Of what vast importance, in true religion, must the Person, the priesthood, and the sacrifice of the Son of God be, when they are forced upon our attention in such a variety of types and representations!—He indeed is our prophet, and we must welcome and submit to his teaching; our King, and we must willingly obey him; our Example, and we must imitate him: but he is also our Altar, our Priest, our Sacrifice, our Mediator; and we have neither been truly taught by him, nor have we rendered him any genuine obedience, unless we have learned to come to the Father, as lost sinners, through him, the Way, the Truth, and the Life; to draw all our sufficiency from his fullness, as the Fountain of grace; and to rely on his merits, as the Foundation of our hope.—We have abundant cause to bless our God, that we are within the enclosure of his visible church, and favoured with the means of grace: let us not however rest in outward profession, but be very earnest and diligent, to be found of the number of those who “truly have fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.” We should also recollect, that even the Scriptures will not prove effectual to enlighten our minds, in those things which belong to eternal salvation, without the unction of the Holy Spirit, communicated to us through that great High-Priest, of whom Aaron and his sons were types, and who “walketh amidst his golden candlesticks.” But at the same time we must consider, that ministers, by opening and applying the Scriptures, and preaching the gospel continually; and private Christians, in performing the duties of their several stations; and all, by their fervent and frequent prayers: are instrumental in diffusing the divine light in this dark world. Let us then diligently tend the lamp of the sacred Scriptures, that we may walk in the light ourselves, and communicate it to all around us. And may the Lord send forth many able and faithful ministers, to diffuse the light throughout the earth: for, blessed be his name, it is not now confined to the sanctuary in Israel, but is intended to lighten the gentiles in every part of the world.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—43. The garments and breast-plate of Aaron.—The Jewish service is distinguished from the Christian in nothing more than in its pomp and splendour, compared with the modest simplicity of the latter. The former was not

Ver. 36. Hangings, &c.—[This may be termed the first vail, as it occupied the door or entrance to the tabernacle; the vail that separated the Holy of Holies is called the second vail, (He. ix. 3.) Morier, describing the tent of a chief of the Ebaluts, says, “It was composed of a wooden frame of circular laths, which were fixed on the ground, and then covered over with large felts, that were fastened down by a cord, ornamented by tassels of various colours. A curtain curiously worked by the women, with coarse needle-work of various colours, was suspended over the door. In the king of Persia's tents, magnificent perdahs, or hangings of needle-work, are suspended, as well as on the doors of the great mosques in Turkey.”—Bagster.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1. An altar of Shittim wood.—Of this wood, see note on chap. xxv. 10. Taking the cubit at about twenty-one inches, (see note on Gen. vi. 15.) this altar must be nearly nine feet square, and above five feet high.

Ver. 2. The horns of it upon the four corners.—To these horns it was customary to tie the sacrifices. Psalm cxviii. 27. The altars of the heathen were also generally formed with horns, and sometimes with the horns of animals sacrificed.—Orient. Lit. No. 219.

Ver. 4. Make for it a grate.—Calmet supposes this altar to have been a sort of box covered with brass plates, on the top of which was a grating, to supply the fire with air, and permit the ashes to fall through on the pan below. The grating on each side, probably, sloped toward the centre.

Ver. 9. The court of the tabernacle was formed by curtains hung on pillars: it was nearly sixty yards in length, and half as wide; it was also nearly three yards high, admitting the tabernacle, on each side, to be seen above it.

Ver. 20. Pure oil.—[That is, such oil as could be easily expressed from the olives, after they had been bruised in a mortar; and which is much purer than that obtained after the olives are put under the press. Columella, who is a legitimate judge in such matters, says, that the oil which flowed out of the fruit either spontaneously, or with little application of the force of the press, was of a much finer flavour than what was obtained otherwise.]—Bagster.—To cause the lamp to burn (Hebrew, to ascend up) always.—That is, from evening till morning.—Josephus (Ant. l. iii. c. 9.) says, that the whole of seven lamps burned all night; and that in the morning four were extinguished, and three burned the whole of the day. Such might have been the practice in his time; but it appears sufficiently evident from ch. xxx. 8. and 1 Sam. iii. 3. that they were anciently extinguished in the morning. The temple of Vesta, model of the Tabernacle; and from this the followers of Zoroaster, who still worship as an emblem of the Deity. In the very ancient temple of Hercules, at Gades, now Cadix, in Spain, a perpetual fire was kept burning on their altars.]—Bagster.

2 ¶ And thou shalt make <sup>b</sup> holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for <sup>c</sup> glory and for beauty. 3 And thou shalt speak unto all that are <sup>d</sup> wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the garments which they shall make; <sup>e</sup> a breast-plate, and <sup>f</sup> an ephod, and <sup>g</sup> a robe, and <sup>h</sup> a brodered coat, <sup>i</sup> a mitre, and <sup>j</sup> a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

6 ¶ And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the two shoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And the <sup>k</sup> curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou shalt take two onyx-stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel:

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, according to their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver in stone, like the <sup>l</sup> engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold.

12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel: and Aaron shall <sup>m</sup> bear their names before the Lord upon his two shoulders for a <sup>n</sup> memorial.

13 And thou shalt make ouches of gold;

14 And two chains of pure gold at the ends; of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 ¶ And thou shalt <sup>o</sup> make the breast-plate of 16 Four-square it shall be, being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof.

17 And thou shalt <sup>p</sup> set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones; the first row shall be a <sup>q</sup> sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this shall be the first row.

18 And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

20 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a <sup>r</sup> jasper: they shall be set in gold in their <sup>s</sup> enclosings.

21 And the stones shall be <sup>t</sup> with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes.

only adapted to impress the people with awe and reverence, in the rude state of society in which they were when they came out of Egypt; but all this temporal splendour had a reference to higher objects, either of spiritual or celestial glory. But as we need not, as Christians, enter into all the particulars which were necessary to building and furnishing the Jewish tabernacle, we shall confine our readings and remarks to those objects which were most clearly and significantly typical of the evangelical dispensation.

The tabernacle itself, we have seen, was typical of the incarnation of the Son of God, who, "in the days of his flesh," tabernacled among men; but the most holy place, represented his present state of exalted glory. The great High Priest of our profession having entered within the veil, not with the blood of bulls and goats, but with his own most precious blood, he hath sprinkled it before the throne, and "ever liveth, to plead on our behalf the merit of his atonement." This is the scene typically portrayed before us in this chapter, under the figure of Aaron, in his priestly robes and ornaments.

The purity and splendour of Aaron's robes, evidently figured the excellences of character which unite in Christ our Lord. And the breast-plate of judgment, which contained twelve precious stones, on which were engraved the names of the tribes of Israel, represented the manner in which our Lord Jesus bears the names of his people on his heart. Also in the inscription of the high priest's crown, while we have the name of that God whom he served, we have also the great object of all revealed religion—HOLINESS TO JEHOVAH. But Dr. Watts has so beautifully illustrated this similitude between the high priests of Judaism, and Christianity, that we cannot refrain from quoting his language.

"Jesus, in thee our eyes behold
A thousand glories more,
Than the rich gems, and polish'd gold,
The sons of Aaron wore.
They first their own burnt-offering brought,
To purge themselves from sin;
Thy life was pure, without a spot,
And all thy nature clean.
Once in the circuit of a year,
With blood, but not his own,
Aaron within the veil appears,
Before the golden throne.
But Christ, by his own powerful blood,
Ascends above the skies,
And, in the presence of our God,
Shows his own sacrifice.
He ever lives to intercede
Before his Father's face:
Give him, my soul, thy cause to plead,
Nor doubt the Father's grace."

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 4. A breast-plate.—[Choshen, in Arabic, according to Gigerius (cited by Le Clerc on ch. xxv. 9.) signifies the breast, and also a brigandine, or coat of mail, particularly the forepart; but in Hebrew, it is only used for the square breast-plate of the high-priest, in which were set twelve precious stones, each being engraved with the name of one of the sons of Jacob. Compare verse 15.—An ephod.—[The ephod, from aphad, to bind close, around the body, seems to have been a short cloak without sleeves, girded over all the other garments. There were two kinds of ephods; one of plain linen for the common priests, and the other superbly ornamented and embroidered for the high-priest. The latter is what is described from ver. 6. 8.—Bagster.—A robe.—A long slip of blue cloth, connected with the ephod.—A brodered coat.—A tunic, or straight coat with sleeves.—A mitre.—Hebrew, misenepheth, from tsanaph, to wrap round; a turban.—And a girdle, curiously wrought, ver. 8.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 13. Ouches of gold.—The word rendered ouches, the same learned commentator would render sockets, in which the jewels were inserted. Sometimes it seems used for buttons and loops; at others, for clasps; perhaps any kind of fastening by jewellery.

Ver. 17. Set it in settings.—Hebrew, "Fill it in fillings."—[Sardius, or ruby.—Odum, from adam, to be red, ruddy, seems to denote the ruby; as adam does in Persian, a beautiful gem of a fine deep red colour, with a mixture of purple; viii. 11; xx. 15; xxxi. 10; La. iv. 7.—Topaz.—Pitdah, is constantly rendered by the LXX. Topazion, and Vulgate, topazius, with which agrees Josephus. The topaz is a precious stone of a pale dead green, with a mixture of yellow, sometimes of a fine yellow; and hence called Chrysolite by the moderns, from its gold colour; chap. 8.—Carbuncle.—Barkeeth, from barak, to lighten, glitter, the carbuncle, a very elegant gem of a deep red colour, with a mixture of scarlet. From its bright lively colour, it had the name of carbunculus, a little coal; for, when held up before the sun, it appears like a piece of bright burning charcoal.—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Emerald.—[Nophech, an emerald, the same with the ancient Smaragdus, as it is rendered by Onkelos and Jonathan; one of the most beau-rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breast-plate be not loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breast-plate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the LORD continually.

30 ¶ And thou shalt put in the breast-plate of judgment the <sup>v</sup> Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his <sup>v</sup> heart before the LORD continually.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be a hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of a <sup>x</sup> habergeon, that it be not rent.

33 And beneath, upon the <sup>v</sup> hem of it thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about:

34 A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron, to minister: and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in <sup>z</sup> unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out, that he die not.

36 ¶ And thou shalt make a <sup>a</sup> plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on a <sup>b</sup> blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon the fore-front of the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may <sup>c</sup> bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be <sup>d</sup> accepted before the LORD.

39 And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of <sup>e</sup> needle-work.

40 ¶ And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for <sup>f</sup> glory and for beauty.

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 1—46. The consecration of Aaron, and appointed sacrifices.—"Almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was, therefore, necessary, that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these: but the heavenly things themselves, with better sacrifices than these." (Heb. ix. 22.) Persons unaccustomed to read the Scriptures, may be surprised to find so much "shedding of blood," and so numerous sacrifices. On this subject, two or three things may be suggested. 1. This was perpetually to remind the Israelites of the evil nature of sin, and of the necessity of an atonement, in order to

Ver. 30. Urim and Thummim.—[The Urim and Thummim, lights and perfections; rendered by the LXX. manifestation and truth; and, by the Vulgate, Doctrina et Veritas, doctrine and truth. Among the various and contradictory opinions respecting the form and substance of these mysterious appendages, the most probable seems to be that of Josephus, Philo, Ep. Patrick, Parkhurst, and the Jewish writers generally; who state, that they were no other than the twelve precious stones of the high priest's breast-plate. In support of this statement, it is observed, 1. That in the description of the high priest's breast-plate, Exod. xxxix. 8, et seq., the Urim and Thummim are not mentioned, but only the rows of stones; and, on the contrary, in Lev. viii. 8, the Urim and Thummim are expressly mentioned, but not a word is said of the four rows of stones. 2. As Moses has given such a particular description of every thing relative to the high priest's dress, these would certainly have been described had they been different from what was previously mentioned. The learned Brannius supposes, that when Moses commanded to put in the breast-plate the Urim and Thummim, it meant only that he should make choice of the most perfect set of stones, and have them so polished as to give the brightest and finest lustre.]—Bastger.—On this, see Levit. viii. 8; Numb. xxviii. 21. 1 The sacrifice and ceremonies of consecrating the priests. 38 The continual burnt-offering. 45 God's promise to dwell among the children of Israel.

AND this is the thing that thou shalt do unto <sup>a</sup> them to hallow them, to minister unto me in the priest's office: Take one young bullock, and two rams without blemish,

2 And <sup>b</sup> unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened tempered with oil, and wafers unleavened anointed with oil: of wheaten flour shalt thou make them.

3 And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them in the basket, with the bullock and the two rams.

4 And Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt <sup>c</sup> wash them with water.

5 And thou shalt take the <sup>d</sup> garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breast-plate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod:

6 And thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

7 Then shalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour it upon <sup>e</sup> his head, and anoint him.

8 And thou shalt bring his <sup>f</sup> sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and <sup>g</sup> put the bonnets on them; and the priest's <sup>h</sup> office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt <sup>i</sup> consecrate Aaron and his sons.

10 And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation; and Aaron and his sons shall put their <sup>j</sup> hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And thou shalt kill the bullock before the forgiveness. 2. The perpetual sacrifice of animals which other nations worshipped, was calculated to guard them against the like idolatry; and that this did not always deter them, shows more strongly the necessity of such a caution. 3. This profuse shedding of animal blood, and the strict prohibition against shedding that of man, marked in the strongest manner the God of Israel's abhorrence of murder, and of human sacrifices, which in that age were general throughout the heathen world. 4. With respect to the wave-offering and the heave-offering, which are here mentioned, these two parts, the breast and the shoulder, were waved backward and forward, (like a wave of

Ver. 35. His sound shall be heard.—The design of these was, that they might know when the incense was offered, and mingle their prayers with it.—Orient. Cust. No. 46.

Ver. 36. Plate of pure gold.—[The word tzitz, which we translate a plate, properly signifies a flower. It is rendered by the LXX. a leaf; and is called nezer, a crown, a diadem, by the author of the book of Wisdom. Josephus says that it was adorned with three rows of the flower which the Greeks call kaunos, probably the blue bottle. The Jewish doctors say that it was two fingers broad, of a circular form suited to the shape of the head, and so long, that it reached from ear to ear, and was fastened upon a blue lace or ribband, which was tied behind the head; and as the plate reached only half round the head, the remaining part of the ribband was highly ornamented with artificial flowers.]—Bastger.

Ver. 41. Consecrate them.—Hebrew, "Fill their hand <sup>i</sup>" namely, with the sacrifices they were to offer. Thus was their ordination perfected; hence the LXX. use the term perfecting for consecrating; and St. Paul, in the same way, applies it to our great High Priest, Heb. vii. 28.—Ainsworth.

LORD, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou shalt take of the <sup>k</sup> blood of the bullock, and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

13 And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar.

14 But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung shalt thou burn with <sup>m</sup> fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering.

15 Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the <sup>n</sup> head of the ram.

16 And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar.

17 And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and <sup>o</sup> unto his head.

18 And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the LORD: it is a <sup>p</sup> sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

19 And thou shalt take the <sup>q</sup> other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram.

20 Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it <sup>r</sup> upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

21 And thou shalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the anointing <sup>s</sup> oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and he shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

22 Also thou shalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder: for it is a ram of consecration:

23 And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread, that is before the LORD.

24 And thou shalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his sons; and shalt <sup>t</sup> wave them for a <sup>u</sup> wave-offering before the LORD:

25 And thou shalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the altar for a burnt-offering, for a <sup>v</sup> sweet savour before the LORD: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 And thou shalt <sup>w</sup> take the breast of the ram of Aaron's consecration, and wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD: and it shall be thy part.

27 And thou shalt <sup>x</sup> sanctify the breast of the wave-offering, and the shoulder of the heave-offering, which is waved and which is heaved up, of the ram of the consecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons:

28 And it shall be Aaron's and his sons' by a statute for ever, from the children of Israel: for it is a heave-offering: and it shall be a heave-offering from the children of Israel of the sacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offering unto the LORD.

29 And the holy garments of <sup>y</sup> Aaron shall be his sons' after him, to be anointed therein, and to be consecrated in them.

30 And <sup>z</sup> that son that is priest in his stead shall put them on <sup>a</sup> seven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation to minister in the holy place.

31 And thou shalt take the ram of the consecration, and seethe his flesh in the holy place.

32 And Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram, and the <sup>b</sup> bread that is in the basket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

33 And they shall <sup>c</sup> eat those things where with the atonement was made, to consecrate and to sanctify them: but a stranger <sup>d</sup> shall not eat thereof because they are holy.

34 And if ought of the flesh of the consecrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then thou <sup>e</sup> shalt burn the remainder with fire: it shall not be eaten, because it is holy.

35 And thus shalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: <sup>f</sup> seven days shalt thou consecrate them.

36 And thou shalt <sup>g</sup> offer every day a bullock for a sin-offering for atonement; and thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, and thou shalt anoint it, <sup>h</sup> to sanctify it.

37 Seven days thou shalt make an atonement for the altar, and sanctify it; and it shall be an altar most holy: whatsoever <sup>i</sup> toucheth the altar shall be holy.

38 ¶ Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the <sup>j</sup> altar; two lambs of the first year day by day continually.

39 The one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even:

Ver. 20, Tip of the right ear.—[All this was probably intended to signify, that the priest should dedicate all his faculties and powers to the service of God: his ear to the hearing and study of the law: his hands, to diligence in the sacred ministry, and to all acts of obedience; and his feet to walking in the way of God's precepts: for the ear is the symbol of obedience, the hand of action, and the foot of the path or conduct in life. And the sprinkling might farther teach him, that he could neither hear, work, nor walk profitably, uprightly, and well pleasingly in the sight of God, without the application of the blood of the sacrifice.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22, The rump, or tail, of some of the Eastern sheep is very large, (weighing according to Ludolf, from 12 to 40 lb.) and is accounted a great delicacy.—See Orient. Cust. No. 47.—[“This tail,” says Dr. Russell, is very broad and large, terminating in a small appendix that turns back upon it. It is of a substance between fat and marrow, and is not eaten separately, but mixed with lean meat in many of their dishes, and also often used instead of

A common sheep of this sort, without the head, feet, skin, and entrails, weighs about twelve or fourteen Aleppo rotoloes (a rotoloe is five pounds,) of which the tail is usually three rotoloes or upwards; but such are of the largest breed, and have been fattened, will sometimes weigh above thirty rotoloes, and the tails of these ten.”—Bagster.

Ver. 27, Ram of consecration.—[All miluim, literally, “the ram of fill ing,” so called according to some, because, at the consecration of the priests, certain pieces of the sacrifice were put into their hands, (ver. 24.) on which account their consecration itself is called “filling their hands.” (ch. xxviii. 41.) Rabbi Solomon gives a different reason for the ram being so called, from malai, to be full, complete; because the sacrifice completed the consecration, and thereupon the priests were fully invested in their office.]—Bagster.

41 And the other lamb thou shalt offer at even, and shalt do thereto according to the meat-offering of the morning, and according to the drink-offering thereof, for a sweetsavour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

42 This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD: where I will <sup>k</sup> meet you to speak there unto thee.

43 And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and <sup>l</sup> the tabernacle shall be <sup>m</sup> sanctified by my glory.

44 And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office.

46 And they shall know that <sup>o</sup> I am the LORD their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the LORD their God.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The altar of incense. 11 The ransom of souls. 17 The brazen laver: 22 the holy anointing oil: 34 the composition of the perfume.

AND thou shalt <sup>a</sup> make an altar to burn incense upon: of shittim-wood shalt thou make it.

2 A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof; four-square shall it be; and two cubits shall be the height thereof: the horns thereof shall be of the same.

3 And thou shalt <sup>b</sup> overlay it with pure gold, the <sup>c</sup> top thereof, and the <sup>d</sup> sides thereof round about, and the horns thereof; and thou shalt make unto it a crown of gold round about.

4 And two golden rings shalt thou make to it under the crown of it, by the two <sup>e</sup> corners thereof, upon the two sides of it shalt thou make it; and they shall be for places for the staves to bear it withal.

5 And thou shalt make the <sup>f</sup> staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold.

6 And thou shalt put it before the <sup>g</sup> vail that is by the ark of the testimony, before the <sup>h</sup> mercy-seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with thee.

7 And Aaron shall burn thereon <sup>i</sup> sweet incense every morning: when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it.

8 And when <sup>k</sup> Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it; a perpetual incense before the LORD, throughout your generations.

9 Ye shall offer no <sup>l</sup> strange incense thereon nor burnt-sacrifice, nor meat-offering; neither shall ye pour drink-offering thereon.

10 And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it <sup>m</sup> once in a year, with the blood of the sin-offering of atonements: once in the year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the LORD.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 12 When thou takest the <sup>n</sup> sum of the children of Israel <sup>o</sup> after their number, then shall they give every man a <sup>p</sup> ransom for his soul unto the LORD, when thou numberest them: that there be no <sup>q</sup> plague among them when thou numberest them.

14 Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 The rich shall not <sup>r</sup> give more, and the poor shall not <sup>s</sup> give less than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD to make an atonement for your souls.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement-money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

the case as to the lamb which formed the morning and evening sacrifice, and pointed very clearly and beautifully to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world. (John i. 29.)

On the consecration of Aaron and his sons we may farther remark, 1. The manner of consecration, by pouring on their heads the holy anointing oil, as representing the influences of the Holy Spirit, in all cases necessary to the proper fulfilment of the priestly office; and, 2. As pointing specially to him whom God "anointed with the Holy Ghost without measure, and who went about continually doing good." (Acts x. 38; John iii. 34.) 3. We see here an open recognition of the doctrine of imputation; that is, of the guilt of the sinner to the sacrifice, on which is evidently founded the doctrine of atonement by the death of Christ, who bore our sins in his own body on the cross.

"My soul would lay her hand
On that dear head of thine,
While like a penitent I stand,
And there confess my sin."—Watts.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1—38. The altar of incense, laver of brass, &c.—These are objects of too much importance to be passed over. The altar of incense was foursquare, one cubit (that is, about twenty-one inches) each way, and two in height. This was made of shittim-wood, and overlaid with gold, like the ark itself. On this was offered the incense; a perfume, described in the end of the chapter. The scent of the perfume burnt upon this altar, (sometimes called the golden altar,) had undoubtedly a mystical signification, which is explained to us by the apostle John, in the book of Revelation. "And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." (Rev. viii. 3, 4.) This incense, then, represents the merits and intercession of our Redeemer, which give efficacy and acceptance to the prayers of all his saints. 2. We have "the brazen laver" of water, for the purpose of washing the hands and feet of Aaron and his sons; for cleanliness is a virtue nearly allied to godliness; and, indeed, the services of the tabernacle requiring the slaughter of so many animals, made it necessary for them to pay great attention to this virtue: for as almost all things under the law were typically purified by blood, so were they actually cleansed by water; and every such act of purification was calculated to remind them of "the washing of regeneration," and the purifying influences of God's Holy Spirit. 3. We have the composition of the precious anointing oil and fragrant incense, on which we shall only observe the extent and costliness of the materials; circumstances on which some would be ready to say with Judas, on another occasion, "Why was not this sold, and the produce given to the poor?" Many seem ready enough to serve God with that which costs them nothing; but when they are called upon to make any sacrifices, or to contribute to support the cause of religion, they withdraw, upon principles of economy.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1. Incense.—[Where so many sacrifices were offered, it was essentially necessary to have some pleasing perfume to counteract the disagreeable smells that must have arisen from the slaughter of so many animals, the burning of so much flesh, the sprinkling of the blood, &c. No blood was ever sprinkled on this altar, except once a year, on the grand day of expiation. It was called also the golden altar, (Num. iv. 11.) and the incense was as constantly burnt on it every day, as the morning and evening sacrifice of a lamb was burnt on the brazen altar.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Before the mercy-seat.—That is, in a line with it; but without side the vail, because it was used every morning and evening, whereas the high-priest entered within the vail only once a year. Some think that the glory which resided within the vail, was in some manner discernible through it.

12 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

13 Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my <sup>s</sup> sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is <sup>a</sup> sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I <sup>am</sup> the LORD that doth sanctify you.

15 Six days may work be done, but in the seventh is the sabbath of <sup>i</sup> rest, holy to the LORD: whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day he <sup>shall</sup> surely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.

Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us <sup>b</sup> gods which shall go before us: for <sup>as</sup> for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of <sup>c</sup> Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the <sup>d</sup> golden ear-rings which <sup>are</sup> in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring <sup>them</sup> unto me.

3 And all the people brake off the golden ear-rings which <sup>were</sup> in their ears, and brought <sup>them</sup> unto Aaron.

4 And he received <sup>them</sup> at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a <sup>e</sup> molten calf: and they said, These <sup>be</sup> thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when Aaron saw <sup>it</sup>, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made <sup>f</sup> proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the LORD.

6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the <sup>g</sup> people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

7 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go, get thee down: for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have <sup>h</sup> corrupted themselves:

8 They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These <sup>be</sup> thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and behold, <sup>i</sup> it is a stiff-necked people:

10 Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may <sup>j</sup> wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and <sup>k</sup> I will make of thee a great nation.

11 ¶ And Moses <sup>besought</sup> the LORD his God, and said, LORD, <sup>m</sup> why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand?

thought not so) have been made instrumental in this work. Little did Captain Cook and his coadjutors suppose, that in navigating the Southern Pacific Ocean, they were the harbingers of Christian Missionaries: yet so it proved: and should the progress of religion among sailors correspond with present appearances, thousands of Missionaries may be formed, to carry the gospel round the world with little or no expense. Then, indeed, may we say, in a new and unexpected sense, that "His way is in the sea, and his path in the great waters." (Psalm lxxvii. 19.)

The close of this chapter contains a repetition of the law of the sabbath, with the penalty of death against offenders. Far be it from us to wish to revive the penal statutes of Judaism under the Christian dispensation; but those who think the neglect of the sabbath a light and trifling matter, would do well to recollect, that the God of Israel classed this offence under the same penalty as murder! The sabbath was also to be a distinguishing sign that Israel were the Lord's people. And now, at the end of the forty days Moses was in the mount, the Lord gave to him the "two tables of stone, written with the finger of God," and containing the ten commandments; of which, this of the sabbath was one of the most conspicuous.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 1-14. Aaron makes a calf, and the Israelites worship it.—Moses was a god to Aaron: indeed, Aaron seems to have been nobody without Moses. "A man

Ver. 17. Refreshed.—[God, in condescension to human weakness, applies to himself here what belongs to man. Though it probably refers to the delight and satisfaction with which He contemplated the completion of all his works, and pronounced them very good.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Written with the finger of God.—Dr. Winder, and other learned men, suppose this the first instance of Alphabetical writing; we are inclined, however, to give it a much earlier date. There seems little doubt but it arose but of the science of hieroglyphics.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 3. All the people.—Here is another instance of the word all being used for many; for it is plain from the following history, that many retained their jewels. See ch. xxxv. 22; also Exposition of ch. ix.

Ver. 4. Fashioned it with a graving tool.—The order of the words here is somewhat doubtful, which makes the sense equivocal. Either Aaron first cast the calf, and afterwards cleared away redundances with a kind of graver, or small scraper; or else, with such an instrument he cut out the mould in which it was cast. See Foot's Synop. It is doubtful, however, whether Aaron himself had sufficient ingenuity to do either; nor was it needful, as there were among them artists who could engrave on stones, (chap. xxviii. 9.) and others who were skilled in casting; (chap. xxv. 12.) but the hand he took in countenancing and directing the transaction, involved him deeply in the guilt of the idolatry. See Deut. ix. 20.—These be thy gods.—Or, "This is thy god," as the Holy Ghost expoundeth it, Neh. ix. 18.—Ainsworth. So also ver. 8.

Ver. 6. Sat down to eat.—[It is highly probable, that at this feast they sacrificed after the manner of the Egyptians, and indulged themselves in every species of excess and wantonness. Herodotus, giving an account of a solemn feast, which the people of Egypt celebrated at Bubastis in honour of the goddess Diana, says, "To her they offer many sacrifices, and while the victim is burning, they dance and play a thousand tricks, and drink more wine than in the whole year besides. For they assemble to the number of about seven hundred thousand men and women, besides children." Aaron's feast of the golden calf seems to have been in imitation of this. See Burder's Orient. Cust. and Harmer's Obs.]—Bagster.

12 Wherefore should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people.

13 Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

15 ¶ And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

17 And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

19 ¶ And it came to pass as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.

20 ¶ And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

21 And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?

22 ¶ And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief.

23 For they said unto me, Make us gods, which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf.

25 And when Moses saw that the people were naked, (for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame among their enemies,) 26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

27 And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.

29 For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the Lord; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold.

32 Yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their sin; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written.

33 And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: Behold, mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them.

35 And the Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made.

latter, and then "rose up to play;" an expression that plainly enough intimates, their conduct was not influenced by true devotion, which abhors such levity.

The Lord, whose eye had watched these proceedings, now informs Moses, that the people had corrupted themselves, by turning idolaters; and sent him down to them in anger, with awful threatenings of vengeance and destruction. Moses, however, acted the part of a true patriot; he prayed for them, and pleaded with the Lord, for his own glory rather than for their sakes, that he would spare them.

Ver. 15—35. Moses in anger breaks the tables of the law, but pleads for mercy to the offenders.—Here we may remark, 1. A description of the tables (or tablets) of the law, which were of stone, in the form of slabs, and are stated to have been written on both sides; in which there seems no difficulty, though the slabs might be thin, since they were written or engraved by the finger of God, and not cut with the tool of a mason. 2. Moses coming down from the mount, accompanied by Joshua, they heard a great and confused noise. The latter, being a military man, and not previously informed of the rebellion, as Moses had been, took it for the sound of war: but Moses replied, Not so; "I hear the voice of singing;" and when he came lower down, he saw (though at a distance) the calf and the dancing; and his anger waxed hot, and he cast down the tables out of his hands, and broke them: not accidentally, but designedly, to express the manner in which they had broken their covenant with God. (Deut. ix. 16—19.) 3. Moses saw that the people were naked; not absolutely so, but stripped of their ornaments, which exposed them to the ridicule of their enemies on that account, but still more on account of their adopting the idolatrous practices of the heathen, which they had pretended to despise and execrate. 4. The decided conduct of Moses, on this occasion, forms a perfect contrast to the weakness of Aaron. He took the calf from them, and threw it in the fire; from which we may conclude it was not very large, or it would have been too heavy, as being made of gold. Having melted it into a shapeless mass, it is said he ground it. By Deut. ix. 21, it appears, that after burning the image, it was beaten with a hammer into thin plates of gold, and those probably ground, or filed, to powder; and he made them swallow it; and if (as some think) a chemical process was also employed to reduce the gold to powder, it must have been a nauseous draught for them. 5. Aaron is next called to account for his conduct in this nefarious business, and offers an apology as weak as had been his conduct. First he pleads, that the people were "set on mischief," which, indeed, was too true; but then we read of no means taken to counteract their evil disposition, either by remonstrance, or by persuasion: but when he adds, "I cast it (the gold they gave him) into the fire, and there came out this calf;" we cannot be surprised to hear, (as we are

Ver. 17. When Joshua heard.—It appears by chap. xxiv. 13. that when Moses rose up to go to the sacred mount, his minister (or servant) Joshua rose with him, and no doubt went into some part of the mount to attend on him; but not to the top, where Moses was, for it was his peculiar privilege to enter within the cloud. For this reason, Joshua neither knew nor suspected the rebellion.

Ver. 25. Naked.—[The term naked may mean either that they were unarmed and defenceless, or ashamed from the consciousness of guilt. Some think that the people were nearly or literally naked; for the Egyptians and other heathen, when performing some of their religious rites, appeared in this indecent manner. See Spencer, De Leg. Heb. p. 24.]—Basier.

Ver. 29. For Moses had said &c.—Margin "And Moses said. Consecrate yourselves (or, Fill your hand; see note on chap. xxviii. 41.) to-day to the Lord, because every man hath been against his son, and against his brother." The former sense appears the most consistent, since this act of the Levites is commended by Moses, just before his death. (Deut. xxxiii. 9.)

Ver. 32. Blot me out of thy book.—[In the public registers, all that were born of a particular tribe were entered in the list of their respective families under that tribe. This was the book of life; and when any of these died, his name might be considered as blotted out of this list.]—Basier. In China, the names of all persons tried are written in two books, or tablets—the book of life, and the book of death: but the emperor has the power to reverse these sentences, by transferring any names from the one book to the other. If he blot them out from the book of life, they die.—Orient. Lit. No. 228.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 The Lord refuseth to go with the people. 9 The Lord talketh with Moses. 12 Moses desireth to see the glory of God.

AND THE LORD said unto Moses, Depart and go up hence, thou and the people which thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt, unto the land which I sware unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, Unto thy seed will I give it:

2 And I will send an angel before thee; and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite:

3 Unto a land flowing with milk and honey: for I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiff-necked people: lest I consume thee in the way.

4 ¶ And when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned: and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people: I will come up into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb.

7 ¶ And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, and called it the Tabernacle of the Congregation. And it came to pass, that every one which sought the LORD, went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp.

told, Deut. ix. 20, that the Lord was "very angry with Aaron, to destroy him;" but Moses prayed for him, and therefore was he spared. The crime of Aaron was, however, chiefly pusillanimity; he was terrified into what he did by the threats of the people. He seems, indeed, to have aimed to unite with their idolatry the worship of the true God; for when they set up the calf, he proclaimed a feast unto JEHOVAH; a conduct more detestable in the sight of God than mere idolatry itself; for we find every attempt to unite his name with that of idols, was considered as the grossest insult to the Lord. Lastly, a severe judgment now followed; but we must not suppose it to have been indiscriminate. "That be far from thee, (said Abraham to the Lord,) that be far from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked." In the first place, those who gave their pendant ornaments to Aaron were, of course, without them, and thereby confessed their idolatry. In the next place, those who submitted to drink the golden calf, were doubtless penitents. Thirdly, women and children were exempted from this punishment, for they were men only that suffered; and out of 600,000, besides the mixed multitude, only about 3000 were slain, which was not more than one in 200 men, and these, in all probability, not without examination; for the executioners were ordered to go "from gate to gate," and every gate was a kind of police-office; (as we should call it;) and when it is added, "let them slay every man his brother," &c. it can only mean, they were to execute judgment without respect of persons. (Gen. xxxiv. 20. Deut. xvii. 6. Ruth iv. 1, 11.)

In the close of the chapter, we have Moses remonstrating with the body of the people, and then going to plead for them before God. And Moses said, "Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and made them gods of gold." Alas! the Israelites are not the only people who have made them gods of gold—no idolatry is so common. "Yet now, if thou wilt (or, O that thou wouldst) forgive their sin!—and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." Whatever be the meaning of this passage, which has been much controverted, there is no instance in Scripture of a good man renouncing his own salvation. Moses was willing to surrender his office, his comforts, and his life, so as to be blotted out of the book of the CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 5. I will come up—Ainsworth remarks, it may be Englished, "If I should go up in the midst of thee, I should consume thee;" and Dr. Boothroyd to the same effect. The latter remarks, "that the Hebrew future frequently denotes the subjunctive mood, is too obvious to need proof."—Put off thy ornaments.—The LXX. render it, "Put off your robes of glory, and your ornaments;" and Dr. Clarke cites Pitts, to show that it is still customary, in the East, to strip off their outside garments in times of mourning. See 1 Sam. xiv. 24. Mich. i. 8.

Ver. 6. Stripped themselves of their ornaments.—Among the Romans, an accused person "changed his dress, laid aside every kind of ornament, let the hair of his head and beard grow," &c.—Adam's Rom. Antiq.

Ver. 7. Moses took the tabernacle.—[Eth haohel, the tent, not eth hamishcan, the tabernacle, for this was not erected; but probably the tent of Moses, which was before in the midst of the camp, and to which the people came for judgment: and where, no doubt, God frequently met his servant. The situation, as well as the superior elegance, of a chief's tent, was one mode by which he was honoured. "The basha's tent," says Thevenot, "pitched near Cairo,

8 And it came to pass when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, and stood every man at his tent-door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle.

9 ¶ And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the LORD talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent-door.

11 And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp; but his servant Joshua the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, See, thou sayest unto me, 'Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and consider that this nation is thy people.

14 And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.

15 And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence.

16 For wherein shall it be known here that I living; (Psalm lxxix. 28. Ezek. xlii. 9.) but no man ought to sacrifice the salvation of his soul for any consideration whatever. (Mark viii. 36.) And it is no less than a contradiction in terms, to suppose that God requires or permits it; for he requires us to love him with all our heart, which is plainly impossible in that state where neither love nor hope can ever enter.

The last verse of this chapter appears not to relate to any single event, but rather to the course of divine Providence. It is said, "the Lord plagued (or smote) the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made;" on which the Jews have formed this striking proverb, "That no affliction has ever happened to Israel, in which there was not some grain of the dust of the golden calf." A remark that may also be applied to Christians; for, if we examine carefully into our afflictions, we shall find them all embittered with some dregs of our idolatry.

CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 1—11. The Lord threatens not to go with the people; but is appeased.—To understand this chapter, we must advert to some preceding circumstances. In the opening of the 32d chapter we are told, that "when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, (or a god,) which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him." Here is no mention of JEHOVAH, who had said, (chap. xxix. 46.) "Thou shalt know that I am the LORD thy God, that brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt." Was not this renouncing him, and giving the glory of their salvation to "the man Moses?" Alas! how prone are we to put the instrument of our deliverance in the place of the Deliverer! But what was the consequence of this? "The Lord 'hearkened and heard,'" and he said unto Moses, "Go, get thee down; for the people which thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt have corrupted themselves." Here the Lord, as it were, renounces the people, and turns them over to Moses, to whom they had foolishly given the glory of their deliverance. "Therefore now go: lead the people into the place of which I have spoken unto thee." And again, he said, "Depart hence, thou, and the people whom thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt;" as if the Lord had said, was a very lovely tent, and reckoned to be worth 10,000 crowns: it was very spacious, and encompassed round with walls of waxed cloth. In the middle was his aviary of green waxed cloth, lined within with flowered tapestry, all of one sort; within the precincts behind, and on the sides of his pavilion, were chambers and offices for his women: round the pale of his tent, within mistel shot, were above 200 tents, pitched in such a manner that the doors of them all looked towards the basha's tent; and it ever is so, that they may have their eye always on their master's lodging, and be in readiness to assist him if he be attacked."—Bagster.

and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth.

17 And the LORD said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name.

18 And he said, I beseech thee, show me thy glory.

19 And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the LORD before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy.

20 And he said, Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me, and live.

21 And the LORD said, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock:

22 And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock; and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by:

23 And I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen.

1 The tables are renewed. 5 The name of the LORD proclaimed. 8 Moses entretheth God to go with them. 10 God maketh a covenant with them. 28 Moses cometh down with the tables.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest.

2 And be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me in the top of the mount.

3 And no man shall come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount: neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

4 And he hewed two tables of stone, like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

5 ¶ And the LORD descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD passed by before him, and proclaimed, The LORD, The LORD God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth,

7 Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving

"They have attributed all their deliverances to THEE, and not to me: go now, and see if thou canst lead them into Canaan without me; for I will not go up." This appears to us another figure of irony, like what we noticed in the Exposition of Genesis ii. 22. reproaching the people for their ingratitude and threatening to leave them to themselves. And here it is proper to distinguish between predictions or decrees, which are absolute, and cannot be altered, and promises or threatenings, which are often conditional. Thus it was said, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown;" yet this did not come to pass, because the people of Nineveh repented; and then "God repented of the evil, that he said he would do unto them; and he did it not." (Jonah iii. 4, 9, 10.) So here God threatened to leave them to themselves; yet when the people mourned, and put off their ornaments, (as a sign of mourning,) and sought the LORD, and worshipped, the LORD did not execute his threatenings, which is what is meant by his repenting. (See Exposition of Gen. vi. 6.)

Again, some explanation seems wanted as to the angel here mentioned. Chap. xxiii. 20, &c. it is promised, "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way," &c. "Beware of him, . . . for my name is in him." Now, when the LORD threatens not to go up, he yet promises to send his angel before them to prepare their way. (Chap. xxxii. 34; & xxxiii. 2.) But Rabbi Menachem says, "This angel is not the angel of the covenant, of whom he spake in the time of favourable acceptance, my presence shall go; for now the holy blessed God had taken away his divine presence from among them, and would have led them by the hand of another angel." Of this angel, it is observable, that he does not say, "He shall keep you in the way; beware of him, for my name is in him," &c., as in the former instance.

Another thing deserving remark, is the tabernacle here spoken of. Now, it is well known that the word "tabernacle" means a tent, and so the word should be here understood; for the original term is not the same as is applied to the sacred tabernacle, (chap. xxvi. 1; & xxv. 11, and elsewhere,) for that was not yet erected; but the tent of Moses, (as the Septuagint explains it,) a large tent placed in the centre of the encampment; probably used for devotional purposes, and perhaps for hearing causes, and therefore called "the tent (or tabernacle) of the congregation," until the new erection was completed. This Moses removed without the camp, and the cloud of glory, which had resided on the top of Sinai, now came down to the door of Moses' tent to converse with him, as an indication that God had left them, until they became properly humbled, and were pardoned.

Ver. 12—23. Moses is promised a view of the divine glory.—We are told in the preceding part of this chapter, that "the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend;" and in these verses we have some account of this divine communication. Moses having obtained this intimate access to the divine Majesty, presents two distinct requests—"Show me thy way," and "Show me thy glory."—1. "Show me thy way." Many and mysterious events had lately passed before the view of Moses, clouded with obscurity, and even apparently inconsistent, particularly as respected the future prosecution of his mission; and he entreth to be favoured with an insight into the design of God as to his future proceedings. The LORD had threatened to withdraw the divine Shekinah, and go no farther with them. He had spoken of sending an angel before them, but not the angel of the covenant, in whom his name resided; and, says he, "thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. . . . Now, therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me thy way, that I may know thee; and consider that this nation is thy people." There is much address (if we may so speak) in thus introducing the people of Israel, while he had this free access to commune with God. We should never forget our brethren and dear connexions, when we have access with freedom to a throne of grace. He receives a renewal of the gracious promise: "My presence shall go with thee;" and the prophet immediately subjoins, as if it were to rivet the promise now made, "If thy presence go not with me, (or with us,) carry us not up hence." How often has this prayer been adopted by believers under both dispensations, in reference to the changes in life which have been contemplated! and it is a prayer appropriate to every new undertaking in which we may engage. So prayed Jabez—"O that thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested." (1 Chr. iv. 10.)

2. Moses prays, "I beseech thee show me thy glory!" The answer is, "I will make all my goodness pass before thee." The only view which we sinners can endure of God's glory, is the display of his goodness and his mercy. The face of God, the full display of the divine Majesty, no man hath seen or can see; even the seraphim veil their faces with their wings in his presence. (Isa. vi. 2.) But the LORD promises to place Moses in a cleft of the rock, and cover him with his hand as he passes by, that he might see his back; or, more literally, "the hinder part" of his glory. This is fulfilled in the next chapter. So the meridian glories of an unclouded sun are too bright for mortal gaze, (and some Hindoo devotees have actually blinded themselves by the attempt;) but when it has passed over, and sets in a thin cloud in the west, it gilds both the sea and the sky with its beams, and we behold its milder glories without pain or terror.

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 1—17. The covenant renewed.—Moses was now commanded to prepare blank tablets, whereon the LORD promises to write again the ten commands. Upon his taking them up, as ordered, on the next morning, the LORD fulfilled his promise made on the preceding day. He caused the proclamation of all his goodness to pass before him, and announced his name as "the LORD, the LORD God, merciful and gracious," &c. "keeping mercy for thousands," that is, thousands of generations, (as Exod. xx. 6.) and that will by no means clear (the guilty.) The two last words, it may be remarked, being in italic, are supplementary; and if, instead of Ver. 20. Canst not see my face.—[This is well explained by Rabbi Jehudah. Of that divine glory mentioned in the Scripture, there is one degree which the eyes of the prophets were able to explore; another which all the Israelites saw, as the cloud and consuming fire; the third is so bright, and so dazzling, that no mortal is able to comprehend it; but should any one venture to look on it, his whole frame would be dissolved." In such inconceivable splendour is the DIVINE MAJESTY revealed to the inhabitants of the celestial world, where he is said to "dwell in the light which no man can approach unto." (1 Ti. vi. 16.) By the "face of God," therefore, we are to understand that light inaccessible before which angels may stand, but which would be so insufferable to mortal eyes, that no man could see it and live.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 7. Will by no means clear.—Hebrew, "Clearing he will not clear." This expression occurs in two other places, in Numb. xiv. 18. it is rendered as here; but in Nahum i. 3, in the sense above suggested:

iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 ¶ And Moses made haste, and bowed his head toward the earth, and worshipped.

9 And he said, If now I have found grace in thy sight, O LORD, let my LORD, I pray thee, go among us; for it is a stiff-necked people; and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thine inheritance.

10 ¶ And he said, Behold I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among which thou art shall see the work of the LORD: for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 Observe thou that which I command thee this day: Behold, I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite.

12 Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, lest it be for a snare in the midst of thee:

13 But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves:

14 For thou shalt worship no other god: for the LORD, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God:

15 Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice;

16 And thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods.

17 Thou shalt make thee no molten gods.

18 The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.

19 All that openeth the matrix is mine: and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male.

20 But the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All the first-born of thy sons thou shalt redeem. And none shall appear before me empty.

21 Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing-time and in harvest thou shalt rest.

22 And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the year's end.

23 * Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the LORD God, the God of Israel.

24 For I will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall any man desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God thrice in the year.

25 Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left until the morning.

26 The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not see the milk in his mother's milk.

27 And the LORD said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee, and with Israel.

28 ¶ And he was there with the LORD forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water. And he wrote upon the table the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.

29 ¶ And it came to pass when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone, and they were afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a vail on his face.

34 But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the vail off, until he came out. And he came out and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with Him.

"the guilty," we insert "the wicked," i. e. the impenitent; if we fail of the precise sense, we shall have one in perfect harmony with the context and whole tenor of Scripture; and also with the best Jewish expositors: for the Chaldee explains it, of "them that turn not;" and the Jerusalem Targum applies it to the day of judgment, when the impenitent only shall be condemned.

The following caution, not to form alliances of any kind with idolaters, was very important, considering the proneness of the Israelites to this crime, and the temptations held out by the heathen to partake of their sacrifices, which were frequently accompanied with luxurious feasts, and licentious sports. But the closing article, "Thou shalt make no molten gods," has an evident reference to their golden calf. The direction to destroy their statues and their altars may be thought to savour of a barbarous state, in the eyes of those who admire "the elegant mythology of Greece and Rome." We have certainly not now the same reason for destroying the vestiges of pagan antiquity as the Jews had; but it deserves to be considered,

"He will not at all acquit the wicked." Some of the Hebrew doctors explain it, "He cleanses those that repent, but those who are unwilling to repent, he does not cleanse."—Robertson.

whether many are not betrayed into heathenish principles, or popish superstition, by their enthusiastic attachment to the poetry of the classics, and the monuments of ancient art.

Ver. 27—35. Moses comes down from the mount.—As it was expressly said in the beginning of the chapter, that the LORD wrote the commandments upon this set of tables, as well as upon the former, what Moses is here commanded to write, must either have been the additional precepts here recorded, or a transcript of the commands for the use of the people, which was highly necessary. The pronoun "he," however, in the 28th verse, may, we conceive, be applied to the LORD more properly than to Moses, and then agrees perfectly with the first verse of the chapter.

When Moses came down from the mount, we are told his face shone with such a radiancy, (though at first he was not aware of it,) that Aaron and the people were afraid to come near him, until he put a vail over it, which he took off when he returned into the divine presence, and resumed when he came down again to speak to the people. St. Paul, alluding

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 The sabbath. 4 The free gifts for the tabernacle. 20 The readiness of the people to offer. 30 Bezaleel and Aholiab are called to the work.

AND Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, * These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should do them.

2 ¶ Six <sup>b</sup> days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to <sup>c</sup> you a holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD: whosoever doeth work therein <sup>d</sup> shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall kindle no <sup>e</sup> fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day.

4 ¶ And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: whosoever is of a <sup>f</sup> willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' <sup>g</sup> hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood,

8 And oil for the light, and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breast-plate.

10 And every wise-hearted among you shall <sup>h</sup> come, and make all that the LORD hath commanded;

11 The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets;

12 The <sup>i</sup> ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the vail of the covering;

13 The table, and his staves, and all his vessels, and the <sup>j</sup> shew-bread;

14 The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light;

15 And the <sup>k</sup> incense-altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, to this circumstance, and comparing the dispensation of Moses with that of Jesus, mentions it as proving the former to be glorious in itself, yet as having no glory compared with the superior glory of the gospel. And whereas Moses wore a vail, symbolical of the darkness of the dispensation of which he was minister, the ministers of the New Testament use no disguise, but preach the gospel with all simplicity and plainness. But the Jews, according to the apostle, had the vail still; not on their faces, as Moses had, but upon their hearts, until such time as it should please God to remove it, and give them to see "the light of the glory of God, as shining in the face of Jesus Christ." Such seems to be the apostle's reasoning in the 3d chapter of his 2d Epistle to the Corinthians.

This history, also, in a moral view, affords a reflection too useful to be omitted. The face of Moses shone so as to dazzle all who saw it, while he himself knew it not. Happy is it, when such is the case with the Christian. Much communion with God will communicate a glory to his character, which the good man himself will be the last to discover.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 1—35. Voluntary offerings, &c.—Let us here observe the faithfulness of Moses, and learn to imitate it, in every thing intrusted to us; and through him look unto Jesus, who was "faithful as a Son over his own house."

applied both to the shooting forth of rays of light, and to the shooting out of horns from young animals, the Vulgate, by a curious mistake, has represented Moses as wearing horns—"the skin of his face was horned." And the painters have, in consequence, represented him ever since with two or three long rays of light, like horns, instead of a surrounding glory.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 11. Taches.—[Kerasim, from karas, to bend, so called from their curved form: hooks, clamps, or any thing used for the purpose of fastening, taches, as we call them, formed by aphæresis from the French attacher, to fasten. They were equivalent, perhaps, to our hooks-and-eyes.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Candlestick.—[Menorah, rather, a chandelier, which was of pure gold, and is described as having one shaft, with six branches proceeding from it, adorned at equal distances with six flowers, like lilies, with as many bowls and knobs placed alternately. On each of the branches there was a lamp; and one on the top of the shaft, which occupied the centre, making in all seven lamps. Calmet remarks, that the ancients used to dedicate candlesticks in the temples of their gods, bearing a number of lamps. Pliny mentions one in the form of a tree, with lamps like apples, which Alexander the Great consecrated in the temple of Apollo. Athenæus mentions one which supported 365 lamps, which Dionysius the Younger, king of Syracuse, dedicated in the Prytæneum at Athens.]—Bagster.

and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle;

16 The altar of burnt-offering, with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

17 The <sup>k</sup> hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court;

18 The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords;

19 The <sup>l</sup> clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

20 ¶ And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.

21 And they came, every one <sup>m</sup> whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments.

22 And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD.

23 And every man with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' <sup>n</sup> hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them.

24 Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought the LORD's offering: and every man with whom was found shittim-wood for any work of the service, brought it.

25 And all the women that were wise-hearted did <sup>o</sup> spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen.

26 And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' <sup>p</sup> hair.

27 And the <sup>q</sup> rulers brought onyx-stones,

Without a willing mind the most costly offerings would be abhorred; but with it, the meanest will meet with a gracious acceptance; and our hearts may be said to be willing, when we cheerfully contribute and assist, according to our ability, in promoting the cause of God and his truth: but, as even this is the gift and work of God, we should beseech him daily to increase in us a willing mind, to abound unto every good work. They, who in mean employments are diligent and humbly contented, are as acceptable to God, as those who are engaged in more splendid services. The women who spun the goats' hair were wise-hearted, as well as the persons who presided over the work of the tabernacle, or as Aaron who burned incense there; because they "did it heartily to the Lord." Thus the labourer, mechanic, or menial servant, who conscientiously attends to the work of his situation, in the faith and fear of God, may be as wise for his station as the most useful minister, and will certainly meet with the divine acceptance as well as he. In short, our wisdom and duty consist in giving God the glory and use of our talents, be they more or less; neither abusing nor burying them, but occupying with them till our Lord shall come; being satisfied that it is better to be a door-keeper in his service, than the most mighty and renowned of the ungodly.—T. Scott.

Ver. 18. The pins of the tabernacle.—[These, as Dr. Wall observes, were not particularly mentioned. Josephus says, that to every board of the tabernacle, and to every pillar of the hangings of the court, there were ropes or cords, fastened at the top of the board or pillar, and that the other end of the rope was fastened to a nail or pin, which, at a good distance off, was driven into the ground up to the head, a cubit deep. This was to keep the tabernacle from being blown down by the wind. Dr. Shaw, describing the tents of the Bedouins, says, "These tents are kept firm and steady by bracing or stretching down their eaves with cords tied to wooden hooked pins, well pointed, which they drive into the ground with a mallet; one of these pins answering to the nail, as the mallet does to the hammer, which Jael used in fastening to the ground the temples of Sisera." Ju. vi. 21.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Tablets.—Bochart supposes this word (cumax) to be a girle; rather, perhaps, the jewel which fastened the girle.

Ver. 25. Blue and purple, &c.—As these colours are distinguished from the fine linen, some have supposed that died wool, of these colours, might be woven with the linen; but this was expressly forbidden, Lev. xix. 19. Deut. xxii. 11. See also Ezek. xlv. 17, 18. But as Aholiab was an embroiderer, Scott supposes the white linen was embroidered with threads (why not silk?) of these colours.

and stones to be set, for the ephod, and for the breast-plate;

28 And <sup>p</sup> spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.

29 The children of Israel brought a <sup>q</sup> willing offering unto the LORD, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring, for all manner of work which the LORD had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.

30 ¶ And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, <sup>r</sup> the LORD hath called by name Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah;

31 And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, in <sup>a</sup> wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship.

32 And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, 33 And in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work.

34 And he hath <sup>s</sup> put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan.

35 Them hath he <sup>t</sup> filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work.

2 And Moses called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom, even every one whose heart <sup>c</sup> stirred him up to come unto the work to do it:

3 And they received of Moses all the offering which the children of Israel had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free-offerings every morning.

4 And all <sup>d</sup> the wise men, that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made;

De. 10. 3.

5 And they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much <sup>a</sup> more than enough for the service of the work which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, <sup>f</sup> and too much.

8 ¶ And every wise-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle made <sup>g</sup> ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he coupled the five curtains one unto another: and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain from the selva in the coupling: likewise he made in the uttermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

12 Fifty <sup>h</sup> loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second: the loops held one curtain to another.

13 And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches: so it became <sup>i</sup> one tabernacle.

14 ¶ And he made curtains <sup>j</sup> of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle: eleven curtains he made them.

15 The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain: the eleven curtains were of one size.

16 And he coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves.

17 And he made fifty loops upon the uttermost edge of the curtain in the coupling, and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second;

18 And he made fifty taches <sup>k</sup> of brass to couple the tent together, that it might be one.

19 ¶ And he made <sup>l</sup> a covering for the tent of badgers' skins died red, and a covering of badgers' skins above that.

20 ¶ And he made <sup>m</sup> boards for the tabernacle of <sup>n</sup> shittim-wood, standing up.

CHAP. XXXVI. Ver. 1—38. Liberality of the people, &c.—The promptitude and alacrity with which these builders set about their work, the exactness with which they performed it, and the disinterested fidelity with which they objected to the people's bringing any more contributions, are well worthy of our imitation. Thus should we serve God, yea, and our earthly superiors for his sake, in all things lawful; and thus should all, who are employed in public trusts, abhor filthy lucre, be superior to covetousness, and avoid all occasions and temptations to it, or appearances of it; for robbing the public is robbing many, which is worse than private theft; as murdering a multitude is worse than killing an individual.—Nor is the people's liberality less worthy of commendation: for this proclamation to restrain their bounty was far more reputable for them, and honourable to God, than one would have been, which required an addition to their too scanty contributions.—It should however be carefully observed, that though the rich can never devote their substance too entirely to the service of God, yet they may exceed in the particular application of it: and there have been ages of the church, and there may still be instances, in which an ill-judged liberality has introduced pride, indolence, and luxury, where there should be bright examples of humility, diligence, and self-denial. But this is not the general fault of the age in which we live: and though some few individuals may err on this side; yet

CHAP. XXXVI. Ver. 1. Then wrought, &c.—[Junius properly connects this verse with the end of the preceding chapter, and begins this chapter with the second verse. This is an expedient which frees the sacred text from a manifest inconsistency according to the present division; since it represents Bezaleel and Aholiab setting about their work before called to it by Moses, (ver. 2.) By thus connecting it, and reading occasionally, in the future time, the proper sense is elicited: And Bezaleel and Aholiab shall work, &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Cherubims.—[Kerouvim, cherubim, not cherubims. What these were we cannot determine. Some, observing that the verb keraw, in Syriac, sometimes means to resemble, make like, conceive the noun keraw, signifies more than an image, figure, or representation of any thing. Josephus says, they were flying animals, like none of those which are seen by man, but such as Moses saw about the throne of God. In another place he says, "As for the cherubim, nobody can tell or conceive what they were like. These symbolical figures, according to the description of them by Ezekiel, (ch. 1. 10.; x. 14.) were creatures with four heads and one body; and the animals of which these ornaments consisted were the noblest of their kind; the lion, among the wild beasts; the bull, among the tame ones; the eagle, among the birds; and man, at the head of all: so that they might be, says Dr. Priestley, the representatives of all nature. Hence some have conceived them to be somewhat of the shape of flying oxen; and it is alleged in favour of this opinion, that the far more common meaning of the verb keraw, in Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, being to plough, the natural meaning of keraw, is a creature used in ploughing. This seems to have been the ancient opinion which tradition had handed down, concerning the shape of the cherubim with the flaming sword, that guarded the tree of life, (Gen. iii. 24.) Ovid's fable concerning Jason's golden fleece being guarded by brazen footed bulls, breathing out fire, was perhaps derived from it.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Rams' skins.—[This was the third covering of the tabernacle. The first and lowermost was made of fine linen, richly embroidered with figures of cherubim, in shades of blue, purple, and scarlet: (ver. 8—13.) It is reasonable to suppose, that the right side of this curtain was undermost, and so it formed a beautiful ceiling in the inside of the tabernacle. The second covering, which lay over the embroidered one, was made of a sort of mohair, (ver. 14—17.) and the fourth, or uppermost one, which was to keep the others from the weather, was made of tachash, or badgers' skins, as it is termed.]—Bagster.

21 The length of a board was ten cubits, and the breadth of a board one cubit and a half.

22 One board had two tenons, equally distant one from another: thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle.

23 And he made boards for the tabernacle; twenty boards for the south side southward:

24 And forty sockets of silver he made under the twenty boards; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

25 And for the other side of the tabernacle which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards,

26 And their forty sockets of silver; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

27 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward he made six boards.

28 And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

29 And they were <sup>a</sup> coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring: thus he did to both of them in both the corners.

30 And there were eight boards; and their sockets were sixteen sockets of silver, <sup>o</sup> under every board two sockets.

31 ¶ And he made <sup>p</sup> bars of shittim-wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle,

32 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the sides westward.

33 And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other.

34 And he overlaid the boards with gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

35 ¶ And he made a <sup>q</sup> vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubims made he it of cunning work.

36 And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold; and he cast for them four sockets of silver.

37 And he made a <sup>r</sup> hanging for the tabernacle-door of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined <sup>s</sup> linen, of <sup>t</sup> needle-work;

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 The ark. 6 The mercy-seat with cherubims: 10 the table: 17 the candlesticks: 25 the altar of incense.

AND Bezaleel made <sup>a</sup> ark of shittim-wood: two cubits and a half was the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it and a cubit and a half the height of it:

2 And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a crown of gold to it round about.

3 And he cast for it four rings of gold, to be set by the four corners of it: even two rings upon the one side of it, and two rings upon the other side of it.

4 And he made staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

5 And he put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, to bear the ark.

6 ¶ And he made the <sup>b</sup> mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

7 And he made two <sup>c</sup> cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy-seat;

8 One <sup>d</sup> cherub on the end on this side, and another <sup>e</sup> cherub on the other end on that side: out of the mercy-seat made he the cherubims on the two ends thereof.

9 And the <sup>f</sup> cherubims spread out their wings on high, and covered with their wings over the mercy-seat, with their faces one to another; even to the <sup>g</sup> mercy-seat-ward were the faces of the cherubims.

10 ¶ And he made the <sup>h</sup> table of shittim-wood: two cubits was the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof:

11 And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made thereunto a crown of gold round about.

12 Also he made thereunto a border of a hand-breadth round about; and made a crown of gold for the border thereof round about.

13 And he cast for it four rings of gold, and put the rings upon the four corners that were in the four feet thereof.

14 Over against the border were the rings, the places for the staves to bear the table.

15 And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold, to bear the table.

the circumstances of too many, of every denomination, who labour in the word and doctrine, as well as the appearance of many places of worship, evidently prove that most men, in our days, are sufficiently careful not thus to injure the cause of godliness. Wisdom, however, is profitable to direct: and when God puts wisdom and grace into the heart, the hands will be diligently employed in every good work, or cheerfully stretched out to contribute to it.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. Ver. 1.—29. Mercy-seat, &c.—After what

Ver. 21. Boards.—[Each of these boards, taking the cubit at nearly twenty-two inches, was about eighteen feet long, and two feet nine inches broad. As these boards are said to be standing up (ver. 20.) their length was consequently the height of the tabernacle; and as the two sides were composed of twenty of these, standing up, (ver. 23, 25.) and the west end of six, with two boards to project at the corners, (ver. 27, 28.) the tabernacle must therefore have been thirty cubits, or fifty-five feet long, and about ten cubits, or eighteen feet broad. These boards were fastened, at the bottom by two tenons in each board, which fitted into two mortises in the foundation, at the top by links or hasps, and on the sides by five wooden bars, which run through rings or staples in each of the boards. The boards and bars were all overlaid with gold; and their rings for the staves, and their hasps at top were of the same metal. The foundation on which they stood consisted of about ninety-six solid blocks of silver, two under each board, about eighteen inches long, and of a suitable thick broadness, each weighing a talent, or about a hundred weight. Four blocks of silver formed the bases of the columns, which supported the curtain that divided the inside of the tabernacle into two rooms.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Vail, &c.—[Parachoth, from parach, probably of the same import as the Arabic, pharaka, to separate, divide, make a distinction between somewhat, the inner vail, which divided the tabernacle into two, and separated, and made a distinction between the Holy place and the Holy of Holies. This vail was made of the same rich materials as the inner covering of the tabernacle, and curiously embroidered with cherubim and other ornaments. Though it does not appear from Scripture at what distance from either end of the tabernacle this vail was hung, yet it is reasonably conjectured, that it divided hath been already said, we need only observe, that such repetitions were peculiarly useful to the Israelites; for in these types they chiefly had their gospel, and they were not permitted to see the things themselves, as they were placed within the sanctuary: and thus in the New Testament we have the same things related in two or three places, with not very material variations, yet not without usefulness.—The exactness of the workmen to their rule is worthy of our imitation: and it is never unseasonable to observe, that through the great Antitype, the substance ded it in the same proportion in which the temple, built after this model, was divided; that is, two thirds of the whole length were allotted to the first room, and one third to the second; so that the room beyond the vail, the Holy of Holies, was exactly square, being ten cubits each way, and the first room, the sanctuary, was twice as long as it was broad.]—Bagster.

Ver. 37. Hanging.—[This vail was a fine embroidered curtain, of the same materials, and of the same workmanship, as the inner vail and inner covering of the tabernacle. The text does not say how low it hung. Philo, makes it touch the ground; but Josephus, will have it to come down but half way, so that the people might have a view of the inside of the tabernacle; but then he says, there was another curtain over that, which came to the ground, to keep it from the weather, and was drawn aside on the sabbath and other festivals.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXXVII. Ver. 10. The table, &c.—[Imitations of this sacred utensil also we find in the temples of ancient heathen nations. In the temple of Junc Populonia, there was a magnificent table for the utensils required at sacrifices and libations, as Macrobius states from older accounts. F. Montfaucon has given us a draught of a very celebrated piece of antiquity, called the table of Isis, which was a table made of brass, almost four feet long and nearly the same breadth. The ground work was a black enamel, distinguished into various plates inlaid, which represented figures of various kinds, distinguished into several divisions and compartments, and interspersed by various hieroglyphics. Though nothing can be confidently asserted respecting the signification, or the original design of this table, yet it seems not improbable that it was an imitation of the table of shew-bread. See Shuckford.]—Bagster.

16 And he made the vessels which were upon the table, his dishes, and his spoons, and his bowls, and his covers to cover withal, of pure gold.

17 ¶ And he made the candlestick of pure gold; of beaten work made he the candlestick; his shaft, and his branch, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers were of the same:

18 And six branches going out of the sides thereof; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side thereof, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side thereof:

19 Three bowls made after the fashion of almonds in one branch, a knop and a flower; and three bowls made like almonds in another branch, a knop and a flower: so throughout the six branches going out of the candlestick.

20 And in the candlestick were four bowls made like almonds, his knops and his flowers:

21 And a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches going out of it.

22 Their knops and their branches were of the same: all of it was one beaten work of pure gold.

23 And he made his seven lamps, and his snuffers, and his snuff-dishes, of pure gold.

24 Of a talent of pure gold made he it, and all the vessels thereof.

25 ¶ And he made the incense-altar of shittim-wood: the length of it was a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit; it was four-square; and two cubits was the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 ¶ And he made the holy anointing oil, and the pure incense of sweet spices, according to the work of the apothecary.

2 And he made the horns thereof on the four corners of it; the horns thereof were of the same: and he overlaid it with brass.

3 And he made all the vessels of the altar, the pots, and the shovels, and the basins, and the flesh-hooks, and the fire-pans: all the vessels thereof made he of brass.

8 ¶ And he made the laver of brass, and the foot of it of brass, of the looking-glasses of the women assembling, which assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

9 ¶ And he made the court: on the south side southward the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, a hundred cubits:

10 Their pillars were twenty, and their brazen sockets twenty; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, were of silver.

11 And for the north side, the hangings were a hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty: the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver.

12 And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver.

13 And for the east side eastward fifty cubits.

14 The hangings of the one side of the gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And for the other side of the court-gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 All the hangings of the court round about were of fine twined linen.

17 And the sockets for the pillars were of brass; the hooks of the pillars, and their fillets, of silver; and the overlaying of their chapters of silver; and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver.

of all these shadows, our way being opened to the mercy-seat, we should continually draw near in faith; feeding daily upon him and his fulness, as the nourishment of our souls; walking through this dark world according to the light of his word, and seeking for renewed and enlarged anointings of his Holy Spirit; that here we may rejoice in him and glorify him, and at length be for ever with him in heaven.—T. Scott.

Ver. 17. Candlestick.—[Horodotus (l. c. 62.) states, that, "when the people have assembled in the city of Sais to sacrifice and to celebrate the festival, they light round their houses lamps, which are filled with salt and oil, in which the wick swims and burns the whole night. This festival is called the feast of the burning of lamps. Even those Egyptians who do not attend at this meeting do not fail to keep the festival: so that lamps are burning at the same time not only at Sais but throughout all Egypt." As the Egyptians, according to Clement Alexandrinus, were the first who used lamps in their temples, they probably borrowed the use of them from the golden candlestick.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1. Burnt-offering.—[This altar consisted of four boards of shittim (acacia) wood, covered with brass, and hollow in the middle; but it is supposed to have been filled up with earth when used, for it is expressly said (ch. xx. 24.) that the altar is to be of earth. As it was five cubits long and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, if the cubit be reckoned at twenty-one inches, it must have been eight feet nine inches square, and about five feet three inches in height.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Horns.—[Horns were much used in all ancient altars among the heathens, and some were entirely constructed of the horns of the beasts that had been offered in sacrifice; but such altars appear to have been erected rather as trophies in honour of their gods. Thus Nonnus says, that Agave, at the command of Cadmus, went up on a high mountain, and offered a sheep upon an altar adorned with horns. Fragments of stone altars, adorned with horns, were still seen at the beginning of the seventeenth century among the CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1–31. Burnt-offerings, &c.—In all ages there have been some persons more devoted to God, more constant in their attendance upon his ordinances, and more willing to part with lawful things for his sake, than others. These are never censured, but always commended and honoured in the word of God: for when relative duties and social obligations are not neglected or violated, we cannot too much re-

Ver. 8. The looking glasses.—"Brazen mirrors." [The word maroth, from raah, to see, denotes reflectors, or mirrors, of any kind. That these could not have been looking GLASSES, as in our translation, is sufficiently evident, not only from GLASS not being then in use, but also from the impossibility of making the BRAZEN LAYER of such materials. The first mirrors known among men were the clear fountain and unruffled lake. The first artificial ones were made of polished brass, afterwards of steel, and when luxury increased, of silver; but at a very early period, they were made of a mixed metal, particularly of tin and copper, the best of which, as Pliny informs us, were formerly manufactured at Brundisium. When the Egyptians went to their temples, according to Cyril, they always carried their mirrors with them. The Israelitish women probably did the same; and Dr. Shaw says, that looking glasses are still part of the dress of Moorish women, who carry them constantly hung at their breasts.]—Bagster.—[Of the women assembling at the door of the tabernacle.—[Heb. assembling by troops. It is supposed that these women kept watch during the night.—Among the ancients, women were generally employed as door-keepers. (See 1 Sam. ii. 22. Matt. xxvi. 68. John xvii. 17.) Aristophanes, assigns them the same office, and calls them ekke, which seems a common name for a maid-servant. Homer mentions Actoria, Penelope's maid, whose office was to keep her chamber door. Sir J. Chardin observes, that women are employed to keep the gate of the palace of the Persian kings.]—Bagster.

19 And their pillars were four, and their sockets of brass four; their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their chapters and their fillets of silver.

20 And all the  $\epsilon$  pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of brass.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 The clothes of service, and holy garments: 2 the ephod: 3 the breastplate: 30 the plate of the holy crown. 32 All is viewed and approved by Moses.

AND of the  $^a$  blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made  $^b$  clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; as the  $^c$  Lord commanded Moses.

2 ¶ And he made the  $^d$  ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

3 And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in the scarlet, and in the fine linen, with cunning work.

4 They made shoulder-pieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together.

5 And the curious girdle of his ephod, that was upon it, was of the same, according to the work thereof; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the Lord commanded Moses.

6 And they wrought onyx-stones enclosed in ouches of gold, graven as signets are  $^e$  graven, with the names of the children of Israel.

7 And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a  $^f$  memorial to the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses.

8 ¶ And he made the  $^g$  breast-plate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 It was four-square; they made the breast-plate double: a span was the length thereof and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled.

10 And they set in it four  $^h$  rows of stones: the first row was a  $^i$  sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the first row.

11 And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond.

12 And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.

13 And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jasper: they were enclosed in ouches of gold in their enclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the

Amen.—T. Scott.

Ver. 24. The gold that was occupied.—[If we follow the estimation of the learned Dean Prideaux, the value of the twenty-nine talents, and 730 shekels of gold, will be $890,863 45. The value of the silver contributed by 603,550 Israelites, at half a shekel per man, will amount to $200,932 24. The value of the 70 talents, 2400 shekels of brass, will be $2281 48. The gold weighed 4245 pounds; the silver, 14,603 pounds; and the brass, 10,277 pounds, troy weight. The total value of all the gold, silver, and brass, will consequently amount to $1,093,927 17., and the total weight of these three metals will amount to 29,124 pounds troy, which, reduced to avoirdupois weight, is equal to FOURTEEN TONS 268 pounds.—It may, perhaps, seem difficult to imagine how the Israelites could be possessed of so much wealth in the desert; but it should be remembered, that their ancestors were opulent men before they came into Egypt; that they were farther enriched by the spoils of the Egyptians and Amalekites; and that it is probable, they traded with the neighbouring nations who bordered on the wilderness.—There appear to be three reasons why so much riches should have been employed in the construction of the tabernacle, &c. 1. To impress the people's minds with the glory and dignity of the Divine Majesty, and the importance of his service. 2. To take out of their hands the occasion of covetousness. 3. To prevent pride and vain glory, by leading them to give up to the divine service even the ornaments of their persons.]—Bagster.

numbers in a good cause, much may be done in a short time: and when the commandment of God is continually attended to, as the rule and standard of every service, the whole will be done well.—We ought indeed daily to prove our own work, to take the counsel and regard the judgment of others, to present all we do before the Lord, and beg to be shown how far he approves or disapproves it: but the grand trial of all our actions will be at the conclusion of them. We ought not therefore rashly to judge others, or their works, before the time; nor be elated by man's applause, or cast down by his reproach, which are often alike erroneous and unmerited: but we should exercise

Some, with Bp. Patrick, have supposed, they had not then the art of making gold thread; but this seems improbable, as they possessed several ornamental arts of far more difficult acquirement. In the present instance, it is probable, figures made in a more solid form than could have been effected by gold thread might have been required; as narrow filaments, cut out of thin plates, appear more suitable to embroider the ephod, and at the same time would be more ornamental.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Onyx-stone.—[Shoham, the meaning of which is not easily determined. It has been variously rendered a beryl, emerald, prasiolite, sapphire, sardius, ruby, carnelian, onyx, and sardonyx. It is probable that it may signify both the onyx and sardonyx. This latter stone is a mixture of the chalcedony and carnelian, sometimes in strata, and at other times blended together, and is found striped with white and red strata, or layers. It is generally allowed, that there is no real difference, except in hardness, between the carnelian, chalcedony, agate, sardonyx, and onyx. The onyx, it is well known, is of a darkish horny colour, resembling the nail or hoof, from which circumference it has its name. It has often a plate of a bluish white or red in it, and when on one or both sides of this white, there appears a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers, says Woodward, call the stone a sardonyx.]—Bagster.

15 And they made upon the breast-plate chains at the ends, of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings, and put the two rings in the two ends of the breast-plate.

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breast-plate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breast-plate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward:

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod:

21 And they did bind the breast-plate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breast-plate might not be loosed from the ephod; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was a hole in the midst of the robe, as the hole of a habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomgranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomgranates upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomgranates;

26 A bell and a pomgranate, a bell and a pomgranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in; as the LORD commanded Moses.

27 ¶ And they made coats of fine linen of woven work for Aaron and for his sons,

28 And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine twined linen, 29 And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needle-work; as the LORD commanded Moses.

crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 ¶ Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

33 And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, the tent, and all his furniture, his tables, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets;

34 And the covering of rams' skins died red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the veil of the covering;

35 The ark of the testimony, and the staves thereof, and the mercy-seat;

36 The table, and all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread;

37 The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order, and all the vessels thereof, and the oil for light;

38 And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the tabernacle-door;

39 The brazen altar, and his grate of brass, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot;

40 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and his sockets, and the hanging for the court-gate, his cords, and his pins, and all the vessels of the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation;

41 The clothes of service to do service in the holy place, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office.

42 According to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work.

43 And Moses did look upon all the work, and behold, they had done it as the LORD had commanded, even so had they done it; and Moses blessed them.

CHAPTER XL.

1 The tabernacle is commanded to be reared, 9 and anointed. 13 Aaron and his sons to be sanctified. 34 A cloud covereth the tabernacle.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

3 And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the veil.

4 And thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order the things that are to be set in or-ourselves to keep a conscience void of offence, be contented with its testimony, and wait that day, "when the Lord shall come, and bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts, and then shall every man have praise of God." For though the glory of all the good we do belongs to him, and our best needs much forgiveness; yet, if by his grace our hearts are humbly upright and willing, and we work by his rule, for his glory, and in dependance on his teaching and assistance, he will graciously applaud us, and say, "Well done, good and faithful servants;" and his blessing will abundantly repay our labour, which indeed is even here its own reward. After his example, therefore, as well as that of Moses, parents, masters, ministers, magistrates, and others, should learn not to be always finding fault; but to show them-admixture of other matter; susceptible of elegant tinges from metalline particles; giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acid menstrua; scarcely calcinable by any degree of fire; and of one simple and permanent appearance in all lights. Ver. 13. Figure.—(Leshem, the figure, the same as the jacinth, or hyacinth, a precious stone of a deep red, with a considerable tinge of yellow. "neophrastus and Piny say it resembles the carbuncle, of a brightness spark-

CHAP. XL. Ver. 1—38. The tabernacle reared and consecrated.—This was one year, all but fifteen days, after the Israelites left Egypt; 50 days after that event the law was given, and it is reckoned that Moses spent eighty days, from first to last, on the holy mount; only half a year was therefore occupied in this laborious undertaking; but their hearts were in the work, and they wrought willingly. "When unanimity, diligence, and zeal, animate the hearts of numbers in a good cause," says Scott, "much may be done in a short time; and when the commandling like fire.—Agate.—Shevo, the agate, a semi-pellucid compound gem, formed of different simple minerals, as chalcedony, cornelian, jasper, hornstone, quartz, amethyst, opal, &c. joined irregularly or in layers. It is of a white, reddish, yellowish, or greenish ground; and so variously figured in its substance as to represent plants, trees, animals and other objects.—Amethyst.—Achlamah, an amethyst, a transparent gem, composed of a strong blue and deep red; and according as either prevails, affording different tinges of purple, sometimes approaching to violet, and sometimes even fading to a pale rose colour.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Beryl.—(Tarehish, probably the beryl, a pellucid gem, of a sea, or der upon it; and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof.

5 And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

6 And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt-offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

7 And thou shalt set the <sup>a</sup> laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein.

8 And thou shalt set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court-gate.

9 ¶ And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and <sup>a</sup> anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and shalt hallow it, and all the vessels thereof: and it shall be holy.

10 And thou shalt anoint the altar of the burnt-offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and <sup>c</sup> it shall be an altar <sup>e</sup> most holy.

11 And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it.

12 And thou shalt bring <sup>b</sup> Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water.

13 And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and <sup>a</sup> anoint <sup>i</sup> him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

14 And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats:

15 And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office: for their anointing shall surely be <sup>a</sup> an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

16 ¶ Thus did Moses; according to all that the Lord commanded him, so did he.

17 And it came to pass in the <sup>i</sup> first month, in the second year, on the first <sup>day</sup> of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up.

18 And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars.

19 And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the Lord commanded Moses.

20 And he took and <sup>m</sup> put the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the <sup>n</sup> mercy-seat above upon the ark:

21 And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the <sup>a</sup> vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 And he put the <sup>p</sup> table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle <sup>a</sup> northward, without the vail.

23 And he set the bread in order upon it before the Lord; as the Lord had commanded Moses.

24 And he put the candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward.

25 And he <sup>r</sup> lighted the lamps before the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses.

26 And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation before the vail:

27 And he <sup>a</sup> burnt sweet incense thereon; as the Lord commanded Moses.

28 And he set up the hanging <sup>at</sup> the door of the tabernacle.

29 And he put the <sup>a</sup> altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 And he set the <sup>a</sup> laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash <sup>withal</sup>.

31 And Moses, and Aaron, and his sons, washed their hands and their feet thereat:

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they <sup>v</sup> washed; as the Lord commanded Moses.

33 And he reared <sup>w</sup> up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court-gate. So Moses finished the work.

34 ¶ Then a cloud <sup>x</sup> covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

36 And when the <sup>y</sup> cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of <sup>a</sup> Israel went onward in all their journeys:

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not <sup>a</sup> till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the <sup>b</sup> Lord <sup>was</sup> upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

ment of God is continually attended to, as the rule and standard of every service, the whole will be done well."

The priesthood of Aaron is here said to be an "everlasting priesthood;" but the meaning of this term (everlasting) is always to be regulated by the subject to which it is applied. The priesthood cannot last longer than the dispensation to which it belongs, and the dispensation being changed, there is, of course, a necessity to change the priesthood: both Moses and Aaron must give place to Jesus, whose complex character and united offices they but faintly represented. (See Heb. ch. vii. 11—14.) The perpetuity of his priesthood is to be argued from the unchangeable nature of the Christian dispensation. He only can be a priest for ever, who is himself ever living. (Ver. 24—28.)

The business of this day was crowned by the divine presence. "Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle," so that "Moses was not able to enter in." It is difficult for us to form an accurate idea of this scene. Thus much we may remark, that the external cloud afforded sufficient evidence of the Lord's presence to the people in general, while the glory within, was such that even Moses could not support. The best evidence of the Lord's presence with his people in the present state, is often involved in mystery and obscurity; if his glory were to be revealed without a cloud, we should be constrained to say with St. Paul, "Whether in the body, or out of the body, we know not." (2 Cor. xii. 2.)

The cloud hitherto had taken various stations; now it rested on the tabernacle, and the glory in the most holy place. What the cloud was to them, a written revelation is to us. Before the Scriptures were complete, visions and revelations were necessary assistants; now, the whole revealed will of God is concentrated in the sacred canon: "the Bible, and the Bible only, is our rule" and guide.

bluish green colour.—Jasper.—Yaspeh, the jasper, a hard stone, of which there are not less than 15 varieties of various colours, as green, red, yellow, brown, black, &c.—Bagster.

CHAP. XL. Ver. 19. He spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle.—That is, the coverings of skins, &c. over the framework.

Ver. 20. He put the testimony in the ark.—That is, the tables of the law were put inside the chest of the ark.

Ver. 33. Tabernacle.—The tabernacle might either be called a house or a tent, because it had wooden walls and partitions like a house, and curtains and hangings like a tent; but as it externally resembled a common oblong tent, and the wooden walls were without a roof, and properly only supports for the many curtains and hangings spread over them, it is more properly called a tent. Even the ordinary tents of the Arabs have at least two main divisions; the innermost for the women, and hence called sacred, i. e. cut off, inaccessible. In the tent of an emir the innermost space is only accessible to himself. The furniture is costly, the floor covered with a rich carpet, and has it stand with a censer and coals, on which incense is strewed. Hence we have the simple idea after which this magnificent royal tent of JEHOVAH, the King or God of the Hebrews, was made.—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON EXODUS.

MOSES, having in the Book of Genesis described the Creation of the World, the Origin of Nations, and the peopling of the earth, details in the Book of Exodus the Commencement and Nature of the JEWISH CHURCH and POLITY, which has very properly been termed a Theocracy, in which Jehovah appears not merely as their Creator and God, but as their King. Hence this and the following books of Moses are not purely Historical; but contain not only laws for the regulation of their moral conduct and the rites and ceremonies of their religious worship, but judicial and political laws relating to government and civil life. A part of these has been detailed in this book; and an account given of the erection of a superb royal palace, the tabernacle, in which Jehovah was pleased to dwell, or manifest his especial presence, by the shechinah, or glory, appearing between the Cherubim. The stupendous FACTS, connected with these events, are fully attested by every succeeding writer of the Sacred Scriptures, as may be clearly perceived by consulting the References and notes; and many of the circumstances are confirmed by the testimony of heathen writers.

NUMENIUS, a Pythagorean philosopher, mentioned by EUSEBIUS, speaks of the OPPOSITION OF THE MAGICIANS, whom he calls James and Jambres, to the miracles of Moses. Though the names of these magicians are not preserved in the sacred Text, yet tradition had preserved them in the Jewish records, from which ST. PAUL, (2 Ti. iii. 8.) undoubtedly quotes. The EX-ODUS of the Israelites from Egypt, and their miraculous PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA, are attested by PALEMON and CHEREMON, MANETHO, BEROSUS, ARTAPANUS, STRABO, DIODORUS SICULUS, NUMENIUS, JUSTIN, and TA-CITUS. The tradition mentioned by Diodorus, among the Ichthyophagi, who lived near the Red sea, that the whole bay was once laid bare to the very bottom, and that the waters afterwards returned to their accustomed channel with a most tremendous revulsion, is not extinct to the present day. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Corondel, according to DR. SEAW, preserve the remembrance of a mighty army having been once drowned in the bay which PTOLEMY calls Clyma. The very country where the event happened, in some degree bears testimony to the accuracy of the Mosaic narrative. The Scriptural Etham is still called Ethi; the wilderness of Shur, the mountain of Sinai, and the country of Paran, are still known by the same names; and Maryah, Eloth, and Midian, are still familiar to the ears of Arabs. Several writers, particularly AURELIUS, in the verses ascribed to him, speak of the delivery of the TWO TABLES OF THE LAW from God, and of the institution of the Hebrew rites. Add to this, that many of the notions of the heathen respecting the appearance of the Deity, and their religious institutions and laws, were borrowed from this book; and many of their fables, as has been partially shown, were nothing more than distorted traditions of those events which are here plainly related by Moses. —Bagster.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED LEVITICUS.

THIS Book is called LEVITICUS, because it chiefly contains laws and regulations respecting the duties of the Priests and Levites, though many of them refer also to the body of the people. The New Testament teaches us to consider many of these rites of sacrifice and purification as typical of the atonement of Christ, and the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit. How far the body of the people saw into the spiritual meaning of these rites, it is difficult to say. Unbelievers, most likely, did not trouble themselves about it; and believers would penetrate their design, more or less, in proportion as they were enlightened.

Leviticus contains little history, except the awful death of Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, as soon as consecrated, for irreverence in their sacred office; and it principally consists of ritual laws, delivered to Moses from above, and put in execution by him the first month after the Tabernacle was erected; though moral precepts are frequently interspersed.—In these ceremonies the gospel was preached to Israel: and the solemn and exact manner, and the many repetitions, with which they are enforced, are suited to impress the serious mind with a conviction, that something immensely more important and spiritual, than the external observances, is couched under each of them. We are indeed thus taught, that all true religion must be grounded on divine revelation, and be regulated by it; and not be left in any degree to human invention: yet one inspired apostle calls the legal institutions "beggarly elements," and "the law of a carnal commandment;" and another allows, that they formed "a yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear."—But if we look carefully into the New Testament, we shall be convinced, that these ordinances, which to numbers appear so unmeaning and unreasonable, were not only "shadows of good things to come," but real prophecies; which, being exactly accomplished in the gospel, prove the book in which they are found to be divinely inspired. It is not known how far the Israelites observed the singular law concerning the sabbatical year, and that of Jubilee, which, it is evident, were very frequently neglected; but no impostor would have ventured to enact such statutes; much less to have committed himself by these words:

"And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Then I will command my blessing on you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in, ye shall eat of the old store." (xxv. 20–22.) Yet, we do not find, in the whole history, a single complaint that this extraordinary promise failed of an exact accomplishment. The twenty-sixth chapter likewise contains an evident prediction of the present state of the nation of Israel, which amidst all its dispersions and oppressions has hitherto been preserved a distinct people, apparently in order to the performance of the promises made them in the close of the chapter. It seems peculiarly useful, in this skeptical age, to introduce each book in the sacred volume, by some notice of those prophecies found in it, which have received an evident accomplishment, many ages after the time when we have full proof the books were extant; as this tends to establish, not only their authenticity, but also their divine authority, far more than human testimony can do.—In addition to this we may observe, that the sacred writers, in all the subsequent parts of Scripture, and even our Lord, as well as his apostles, quote or refer to this book in language which proves, both that it is the genuine work of Moses, and also that the statutes contained in it are the word of God; the two points which many, called Christians, seem at present ready to concede to skeptics and infidels. (2 Chron. xxx. 16. Ezra vii. 6, 12. Matt. viii. 4. Luke ii. 22–24. Rom. x. 4, 5. Comp. Lev. xxvi. 12 with 2 Cor. vi. 16. and Lev. xix. 18. with Gal. vi. 14.) Let us therefore adhere to the testimony of these unexceptionable witnesses, and study it as a part of "the oracles of God;" and very important instruction will be derived from it, even to us in this remote age, though we are no longer under the obligation of its ritual appointments. —T. Scott.

The few events mentioned in this book, and all the laws delivered, are supposed by Usher and others to have been within one month, answering to part of April and part of May, in the year of the world 2514, or 1490 years before the Christian era.

CHAPTER I.

1 The burnt-offerings: 3 of the herd, 10 of the flocks, 14 of the fowls.

AND the LORD called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you bring an offering unto the LORD, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

3 ¶ If his offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a male without blemish: he shall offer it of his own voluntary will at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD.

4 And he shall put his hand upon the head

5 And he shall kill the bullock before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And he shall flay the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces.

7 And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar, and lay the wood in order upon the fire.

8 And the priests, Aaron's sons, shall lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1–17. The various burnt-offerings.—In the preceding book we read of the Lord addressing Moses from the cloud on mount Zion, but now the tabernacle was finished, "The Lord called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle," &c. Indeed, the tabernacle was set up on purpose to be a place of communion between God and Israel. A place of worship on their part; and on his, the oracle from which they received the revelation of his will; and in both respects, it pointed towards the divine Logos, the Word of God who "tabernacled among us," that, as the only Mediator between God and man, he might reveal his will to us, and present our services to him. (John i. 14–18.)

Burnt-offerings were of three kinds—a bullock from the herd, a sheep or kid from the flock, and, among birds, two turtle doves

CHAP. I. Ver. 2. An offering.—Hebrew, Korban, answering to that introductory present which, in the East, is well known to be necessary, to obtain an audience with princes and great men. So all our access to God, is through the atonement of Jesus Christ. Ephes. ii. 18.; iii. 12. This Holocaust (or whole burnt-offering) was the principal of the daily sacrifices, and was required to be a male without blemish.

Ver. 4. He shall put his hand, &c.—This is the first express mention of laying the hand (or hands, chap. xvi. 21.) upon the head of the victim. Maimonides says, "He that imposeth . . . layeth his hands between the two horns, and confesseth, upon the sin-offering, the iniquity of sin; and upon the trespass-offering, the iniquity of trespass; and upon the burnt-offering, the iniquity of doing that he should not, and not doing that he ought," &c.—Ainsworth.

or young pigeons. These were to be wholly consumed, except the hides of the animals, which were the perquisite of the priests. The rich were expected to bring the former, and the middling class, the second, namely, a sheep or kid; but from the poor who, under both the Jewish and Christian dispensations are especially considered, the Lord will accept a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons. "It is observable, (says Henry), that those creatures were chosen for sacrifice which were most mild and gentle, harmless and inoffensive, to typify the innocence and meekness that was in Christ; and to teach the innocence and meekness that should be in Christians. The poor man's turtle doves are said to be an offering of a sweet-smelling savour, as much as that of an ox or a bullock. Yet, after all, 'to love God with all our heart,' and to 'love our neighbour as ourselves, worth. This was probably a very ancient rite; and, according to Herodotus, was practised by the Egyptians.—Orient. Lit. No. 10. To make atonement.—The Hebrew Capper, signifies to cover, not with a garment, (which is easily taken off,) but as with a plaster that cleaveth. (Gen. vi. 14.) It implies reconciliation, and is applied, Gen. xxxii. 20 to appeasing the anger of Esau.

Ver. 6. He shall flay.—As the skin was to be the priest's, it is natural to suppose, that he and his servants performed such offices; though it is probable the offerer might be required to take part in them.

Ver. 7. The sons of Aaron shall put fire on the altar.—That is, shall supply it from the sacred fire in the tabernacle, (Clarke,) or perhaps it only means, to keep up the fire by a supply of wood. So Ainsworth.

CHAPTER XIII.

<sup>1</sup> The laws and tokens whereby the priest is to be guided in discerning the leprosy.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying,

2 When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh a <sup>a</sup> rising, a <sup>b</sup> scab, or bright spot, and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought unto Aaron the <sup>c</sup> priest, or unto one of his sons the priests:

3 And the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him, and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall <sup>d</sup> shut up him that hath the plague seven days:

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day: and behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more:

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day: and behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean: it is but a scab: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing, he shall be seen of the priest again:

8 And if the priest see that, behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprosy.

9 When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest:

10 And the <sup>e</sup> priest shall see him: and behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be <sup>f</sup> quick raw flesh in the rising:

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up: for he is unclean.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague from his head even to his foot, whosoever the priest looketh;

13 Then the priest shall consider: and behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: it is all turned white: <sup>g</sup> he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw flesh is unclean: it is a leprosy.

16 Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be changed into white, he shall come unto the priest;

17 And the priest shall see him: and behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a <sup>b</sup> boil, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be showed to the priest;

20 And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the priest look on it, and behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague.

24 Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is a <sup>l</sup> hot <sup>m</sup> burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish, or white;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it: and behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin: it is a leprosy broken out of the burning: wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days:

27 And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day: and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—59. Plague of leprosy.—As the law contained in the preceding chapter, was easily understood and applied, it was addressed to Moses only; but as that contained in this chapter and the next, involved many difficulties, of which the priests were the appointed judges, it was given to Aaron likewise.—Whatever diseases, in some respects like that here described, had been known in other nations; it is evident from the very language used, that this disease was in great measure peculiar to Israel.—It is called “the plague of leprosy,” which implies that it was generally, if not always, inflicted by the immediate judgment of God. Indeed, this must be evident from a careful consideration of the scriptures. No remedy is any where mentioned: nay, it is implied in the answer of the king of Israel respecting the leprosy of Naaman, that it could not be cured but by the immediate power of God. (2 Kings v. 7.) When any one supposed that he was visited with this disorder, or it was suspected by those about him, he was not directed to consult a physician, but to apply to the priests; great care was required, and many particular rules given, in order to distinguish it from other maladies; and when it was removed, the diseased

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. The plague of leprosy.—[Tzaraath, probably from the Arabic, zarath, to smite or make white; doms farrith, the leprosy, from the Greek lepra, from lepis, a scale; so called because in this disease the body is covered with thin white scales, so as to give it the appearance of snow. The leprosy is a dreadful disorder, common in Egypt and Syria, and generally manifests itself at first in the manner described in the text. Its commencement is imperceptible; there appearing only a few reddish spots on the skin, which are not attended with pain or any other symptom, but cannot be removed. It increases imperceptibly, and continues for some years to be more and more manifest, the spots become larger, spread over the whole skin, and are sometimes raised, though flat. When it increases, the upper part of the nose swells, the nostrils distend, the nose becomes soft, swellings appear on the under jaws, the eyebrows are elevated, the ears grow thick, the ends of the fingers and feet and toes swell, the nails grow scaly, the joints of the hands and feet separate, the palms of the hands and soles of the feet are ulcerated, and in the last stage the patient becomes horrible, and falls to pieces.]—Baxter.—Tacitus pretends that the Hebrews were so infested with this plague, that the Egyptians were glad to drive them out of their country. (See Michaëlis.) That they were thus afflicted in Egypt, there can be no reasonable doubt; neither can we doubt that the disorder originated in the state of slavery they endured—in hard labour, improper food, and want of air; being crowded into towns where their labours were required, without the relaxation even of a sabbath, and without the opportunities of cleanliness. These things were therefore the more particularly enjoined upon the people, with a view of guarding them against the spread of the disorder. And as they had among them no physicians, it was part of the priests' duty to attend to their comfort and their cleansing. Maundrell saw several persons in the holy land with symptoms analogous to those here described, and whose appearance was very loathsome and disgusting, quite different from what he had seen in England. Those who are curious to investigate this subject more fully, will find abundant information in Michaëlis.

Ver. 13. Covered his flesh.—[It may seem strange that the partial leprosy should be pronounced unclean, and the person totally covered with the disease clean. This was probably owing to a different species or stage of the disease, the partial being contagious, the total not. That there are two different species, or degrees, of the disease described here is sufficiently evident: in one, the person was all covered with a white enameled scurf; in the other, there was a quick raw flesh in the rising. On this account, the one was deemed unclean or contagious, the other not; for contact with the quick raw flesh would be more likely to communicate the disease, than the touch of the hard dry scurf. The ichor proceeding from the former, when brought into contact with the flesh of another, would soon be taken into the constitution by means of the absorbent vessels; but where the surface was perfectly dry, the absorbent vessels of another, coming in contact with the diseased man, could imbibe 28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 If a man or woman have a plague upon the head or the beard;

30 Then the priest shall see the plague: and behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and behold, it be not in sight deeper than the skin, and that there is no black hair in it; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days:

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin;

33 He shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more:

34 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight at a stay, and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 If a man also or a woman have in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white; it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 And the man whose hair is fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean.

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be.

54 Then the priest shall command that they person is more frequently said to be cleansed, than healed.—It does not appear to have been infectious, as many suppose; but, as ceremonial pollution was communicated to all who touched the leper, he was excluded from the society of the people, as well as from the courts of the Lord: and when the leprosy was cleansed, he was not re-admitted, till after divers sacrifices and purifications.—All this seems to represent the state of a sinner, whose heart is entirely unsanctified, and in whom sin has dominion: whatever his profession may be, he has yet no benefit from the great Sacrifice for sin, nor is he meet for communion with God, or his people on earth, much less in heaven, unless he be cleansed: and as we proceed, we shall perceive many other things admitting of an apt accommodation.—A few hints, however, must suffice on this intricate, and to us not very interesting subject. Yet we must suppose that the all-wise Legislator had some important meaning in these institutions: and nothing, and there was consequently but little or no danger of infection. This is the learned Dr. Mead's view of the subject; who thus accounts for the circumstances mentioned in the text.—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Shut up seven days.—[Precisely the same measures were adopted in the Island of Barbadoes when the leprosy broke out there, which Hillary has described. The patients were shut up for seven days, at the expiration of which it appeared whether the disease were the real leprosy or only a coarser African itch, which is there called encrow. The spots were also rubbed with cloam tartar per deliquium: if they disappeared, they were ordinary harmless spots; if they remained, or soon returned, it was the leprosy. Poynton states, that when the leprosy raged at Guadaloupe, the inhabitants presented various petitions to the commandants and intendants, stating all the circumstances; "the disturbance which distrust had occasioned in that thriving colony; the complaints and smutts which charges of infection occasioned; the laws previously made against leprosy, and their expulsion from civil society. They demanded a universal inspection of all persons suspected of labouring under this disease, in order that those infected might be removed into lazarettos, or places at a distance from all communication with others." All that these people required, and which was also granted them, we find prescribed in the laws relative to the leprosy contained in this chapter.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. Freckled.—[The word bahak, from the Syriac bahak, to be white, or shining, here rendered "a freckled spot," is used by the Arabs to denote a kind of leprosy, of which Niebuhr says, "Bahak is neither contagious nor dangerous. A black boy at Mocha, who was affected with this eruption, had here and there upon his body white spots. We were told that the use of sulphur had relieved this boy for a time, but had not entirely removed the disease." He adds subsequently, "The Arabs call a sort of leprosy, in which some little spots show themselves here and there on the body, bahak; and it is without doubt the same. (Lev. xiii.) They believe it to be so far from contagious, that one may lie with the person affected without danger."—[On the 15th day of May, 1766, I myself first saw the bahak leprosy in a Jew at Mocha. The spots in this disease are of an unequal size. They do not shine; are not perceptibly higher than the skin; and do not change the colour of the hair. Their colour is an obscure white, inclining to red. The rest of the skin of the patient was darker than that of the people of the country in general; but the spots were not so white as the skin of a European, when not sun-burnt. The spots in this leprosy do not appear on the hands or near the navel, but on the neck and face, yet not on that part where the hair grows thick. They gradually spread, and continue sometimes only about two months, but in some cases one or two years, and then disappear, by degrees, of themselves. This disorder is neither contagious nor hereditary, nor does it occasion any inconvenience." Hence a person infected with the bahak is declared clean.]—Bagster.

Ver. 47. Garments.—[This leprosy in garments appears so strange to us, that it has induced some, with Bp. Patrick, to consider it as an extraordinary punishment inflicted by God upon the Israelites, as a sign of his high displeasure; while others consider the leprosy in clothes (and also houses) as having no relation to the leprosy in man. When Michaelis was considering the subject he was told by a dealer in wool, that the wool of sheep which die of disease, if it has not been shorn from the animal while living, is unfit to manufacture cloth, and liable to something like what Moses here describes; and which he imagines to be the plague of leprosy in garments. The whole account, however, as Dr. A. Clarke observes, seems to intimate that the garment was affected by the contagion of the real leprosy; which it is probable was occasioned by a species of animalcula, or vermin, burrowing in the skin, which we know to be the cause of the itch; these, by breeding in the garments, must necessarily multiply their kind, and fret the garments, i. e. corrode a portion of the finer parts, after the manner of moths, for their nourishment. The infection of garments has frequently been known to cause the worst species of wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall snut it up seven days more :

55 And the priest shall look on the plague after that it is washed : and behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread ; it is unclean ; thou shalt burn it in the fire ; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the priest look, and behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it ; then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof :

57 And if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin ; it is a spreading plague : thou shalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp, or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed the second time, and shall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

CHAPTER XIV.

The rites and sacrifices in cleansing of the leper. The signs of leprosy in a house :

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 ¶ This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing : He shall be brought unto the priest :

3 And the priest shall go forth out of the camp : and the priest shall look, and behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper,

4 Then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two birds alive and clean, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop :

5 And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel, over running water.

6 As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them, and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water :

7 And he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field.

8 And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and wash himself in water, that he may be clean : and after that he shall come into the camp, therefore we should not blame the sober attempts of those, who modestly point out what seems to them to have been intended. —T. Scott.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—57. Leprosy cleansed.—No means are here appointed for healing the leper : the cleansing mentioned being no other than his ceremonial purification, previously to his re-admission to sacred ordinances and to society, when the Lord had been pleased to remove the plague : and the rules given very aptly represent many of the duties of repenting sinners, as well as those of ministers respecting them.—It seems the priests might visit the lepers, and even touch them, without contracting uncleanness : and the seasonable instruction which scarlet fever, and even the plague ; and those infected with psora or itch anim, which communicated the disease even in six or seven years after the infection.—Bagster.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 4. Two birds alive.—[Or, sparrows.—The word tzippor, from the Arabic zaphara, to fly, is used in the Scriptures to denote birds of every species, particularly small birds. But it is often used in a more restricted sense, as the Hebrew writers assert, to signify the sparrow. Aquinas says the same ; and Jerome renders it here the sparrow. So the Greek strolia, in Matthew and Luke, which signifies a sparrow, is rendered by the Syrian translator, tzipparin, the same as the Hebrew tzipporim. Nor is it peculiar to the Hebrews to give the same name to the sparrow and to fowls of the largest size ; for Nicander calls the hen, the domestic sparrow, and both Plautus and Avianus call the ostrich, passer marinus, "the marine sparrow." It is evident, however, that the word in this passage signifies birds in general ; for if the sparrow was a clean bird, there was no necessity for commanding a clean one to be taken ; since every one of the species was ceremonially clean ; but they might give them, as well as the assistance that they would be able to afford them in their devotions, might often render this a great mercy and comfort to them under their affliction. The "two birds," one slain over springing water in an earthen vessel, and the other set at liberty, having been dipped in this mixture of blood and water, may signify Christ shedding his blood for sinners, and then rising and ascending into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us : or the bird that was slain may represent the Saviour dying for our sins ; and the living bird, the sinner, preserved and liberated, by being washed in his atoning blood, and the purifying grace of his Spirit ; and being set free from sin and Satan, seeking those if it was unclean, then it could not be called clean.—Bagster. This ceremony, in its typical import, seems very similar to the sacrifice of the scape-goat which see, chap. xvi.

Ver. 9. Wash his flesh.—[Lichtenstein states, that "Among the Kossas (a nation of South Africa,) there are certain prevailing notions respecting moral (ceremonial) uncleanness. All children are unclean till they are admitted among grown up persons, (which happens with the males through the various ceremonies attending circumcision ; all lying-in women are unclean for the first month ; all men who have lost their wives, for a fortnight ; and all widows, for a month ;—a mother who has lost a child, for two days ; all persons who have been present at a death, the men returning from a battle, &c. No one may have intercourse with such an unclean person, till he has washed himself, rubbed his body with fresh paint, and rinsed his mouth with milk. But he must not do this till after the lapse of a certain time, fixed by general consent for each particular case, and during this time he must wholly refrain from washing, painting, or drinking milk."—Bagster.

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he shall bring them on the eighth day for his cleansing unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord.

24 And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the <sup>a</sup> priest shall wave them <sup>b</sup> for a wave-offering before the Lord:

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall take <sup>c</sup> some of the <sup>d</sup> blood of the trespass-offering, and put <sup>e</sup> it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot:

26 And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand:

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger <sup>a</sup> some of the oil that <sup>b</sup> is in his left hand seven times before the Lord:

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that <sup>a</sup> is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering:

29 And the rest of the oil that <sup>a</sup> is in the priest's hand, he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the Lord.

30 And he shall offer the one of the <sup>a</sup> turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get;

31 Even such as he is able to get, the one <sup>a</sup> for a sin-offering, and the other <sup>b</sup> for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed, before the Lord.

32 This is the law of <sup>a</sup> him in whom <sup>b</sup> is the plague of leprosy, whose hand is not <sup>c</sup> able to get that <sup>d</sup> which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to <sup>a</sup> you for a possession, and I <sup>b</sup> put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a <sup>a</sup> plague in the house.

36 Then the priest shall command that they <sup>a</sup> empty the house, before the priest go <sup>b</sup> into it to see the plague, that all that <sup>c</sup> is in the house be not made unclean; and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house:

37 ¶ And he shall look on the plague, and behold, if the plague <sup>a</sup> be in the walls of the house, with hollow streaks, greenish, or reddish, which in sight <sup>b</sup> are lower than the wall;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house <sup>a</sup> seven days:

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look; and behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house;

40 Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones in which the plague <sup>a</sup> is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place <sup>b</sup> without the city:

41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city into an unclean place:

42 And they shall take other stones, and put <sup>a</sup> them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house.

43 And if the plague come <sup>a</sup> again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

44 Then the priest shall come and look; and behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it <sup>a</sup> is a <sup>b</sup> fretting leprosy in the house: it <sup>c</sup> is unclean.

45 And he shall break <sup>a</sup> down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house: and he shall carry <sup>b</sup> them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover, he that goeth into the house all the while that it is <sup>a</sup> shut up, shall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes: and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes.

48 ¶ And if the <sup>a</sup> priest shall come in, and look <sup>b</sup> upon it, and behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered: then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, <sup>c</sup> because the plague is healed.

49 And he shall <sup>a</sup> take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop:

51 And he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." The "cedar-wood," a supposed emblem of the soundness of the cleansed leper's flesh, may denote the sincerity of the true convert's heart, and the incorruptible nature of true grace: the "scarlet," as distinguished from the glistening whiteness of the leprosy, might imply that the man was recovered to his former ruddy complexion, and represent the true penitent as come to himself and to his right mind; the "hyssop,"

Ver. 22. Turtle doves.—[The dove is a genus of birds, too well known to need a particular description; and of which there are several species besides the turtle dove; as the wood pigeon, tame pigeon, and others. The dove is universally allowed to be one of the most beautiful objects in nature. 'The brilliancy of her plumage, the splendour of her eye, the innocence of her look, the excellence of her dispositions, and the purity of her manners, have been the theme of admiration and praise in every age. To the snowy whiteness of her wings, and the rich golden hues that adorn her neck, the inspired Psalmist alludes in most elegant strains. (Ps. lxxiii. 13.) She is the chosen emblem of simplicity, gentleness, chastity, and feminine timidity; and for this reason, as well as from their abounding in the east, they were probably chosen as offerings by Jehovah.]—Bagster.

Ver. 34. Leprosy in a house.—[It was probably from this text, that the leprosy has been in general considered to be a supernatural disease, inflicted imsop," a shrub commonly used in the legal sprinklings, might signify faith, of small estimation among men, but of great efficacy in applying the salvation of Christ to the soul; or it might show that mean instruments may be useful in directing sinners to Christ. These were to be dipped in the blood and water: for all our sincerity, repentance, and faith, are derived from the Holy Spirit, and are accepted only through the blood of the Saviour.—T. Scott.

mediately by God himself; but it cannot be inferred from this expression, as it is well known, that in Scripture, God is frequently represented as doing what in the course of his providence, he only permits to be done. The house-leprosy is considered by Michaelis to be the same as the salt-petre, which sometimes attacks and corrodes the houses that stand in damp situations. He states, that it is not, properly speaking, salt-petre, but an acid of nitre, from which, by the addition of a fixed alkali, salt-petre can be made. It is sometimes owing to other causes, as the acid of sea salt; and the component parts of the efflorescence have been found to approach very near to those of Epsom salts, that is, vitriolic acid and magnesia. It affects mouldy walls to such a degree as to occasion their tumbling down; spoiling things which he near them; and being even pernicious to health, especially when sleeping close to the wall.]—Bagster.

Ver. 44. Break down the house.—[From the view which Michaelis takes of and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times:

52 And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet:

53 But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

54 This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and scall,

55 And for the leprosy of a garment, and of a house,

56 And for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot:

57 To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

1 The uncleanness of men in their issues. 13 The cleansing of them. 19 The uncleanness of women in their issues. 23 Their cleansing.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying,

2 ¶ Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

5 And whosoever toucheth his bed, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1.—33. Diseases.—It is not needful for us particularly to consider the laws contained in this chapter: they are not binding on us; and the emblematical instruction may be sufficiently understood. In some cases, the disease mentioned was contracted by licentiousness; in others it might be the result of shameful secret practices: and even the diseases the house-leprosy, he conceives that the Mosaic ordinances on this subject become easily intelligible, and are both wise and prudent. The very things, says Michaelis, that must be done at the present day, if we want to clear the house of salt petre. It is proper to observe, however, that some learned men are of opinion, that the house was really infected with the human leprosy; and that the infection of the house, as well as of the person and the garments, proceeded from animalcula.—Bagster.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 2. A running issue.—The LXX. translate it, "A poronrhosa." See Michaelis, where also the other uncleanness here mentioned is treated of. We will only remark, that young men, as well for the sake of their health, as of their morals, should be guarded against self-pollution; and that where there is a strong addiction to it, marriage is the best remedy.

Ver. 9. Saddle.—Merchav, from rachav, to ride, here rendered by our translators saddle, and frequently chariot. Harmer thinks it rather means a litter, or couche, of which we have already given a description in Gen. xxxi. 34.—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Rinsed his hands.—[It is rather doubtful whether the words hath not rinsed his hands in water, refer to him who was diseased, or to him who had had his hands touched. Most understand it of the former, that if the person who had the issue rinsed his hands in water, just before he touched any one, he and infirmities, which were only an affliction, and had no immediate connexion with personal and actual sin, were all originally the consequence of the sinful state of human nature: nay, the cases, in which neither positive disease nor actual sin was implied, might be thus marked, to show how a fallen nature pollutes every thing we do.

did not communicate any pollution: otherwise, he did. But the Syriac refers it to the person touched by him, though it seems strange that he should be cleansed by washing his hands, when perhaps some other part was touched.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Every skin, &c.—[The poorer class of Arabs of our times, make use of mats in their tents, and other inhabitants of these countries, who affect an- cient simplicity of manners, make use of goat-skins. Dr. E. Chandler, in his Travels in Greece, tells us, that he saw some dervishes at Athens sitting on goat-skins; and that he was afterwards conducted into a room furnished in like manner, with the same kind of carpeting, where he was treated with a pipe and coffee by the chief dervish. Those that are at all acquainted with oriental manners, in these later times, know that their dervishes (who are a sort of Mohammedan devotees, a good deal resembling the begging friars of the church of Rome) affect great simplicity, and even sometimes austerity, in their dress and way of living. As these dervishes that Dr. Chandler visited, sat on goat-skins, and used no other kind of carpet for the accommodation of them that visited them; so it should seem that the Israelites in the wilderness made use of skins for mattresses to lie upon, and consequently, we may equally suppose to sit upon in the day time instead of a carpet. Harmer's Observ.]—Bagster.

of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation: and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 ¶ But p if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the LORD for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 Thus shall ye a separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness: that they die not in their uncleanness, when they r defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith;

33 And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her that is unclean.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 How the high-priest must enter into the holy place. 11 The sin-offering for himself, 15 the sin-offering for the people. 20 The scape-goat. 29 The yearly feast of the expiations.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses after the death of the two sons of a Aaron, when they offered before the LORD, and died:

2 And the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all b times into the holy place within the vail before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the c cloud upon the mercy-seat.

3 ¶ Thus shall Aaron d come into the holy e place: with a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering.

We have great cause for thankfulness that we need fear no defilement but that of sin; and have no occasion for any of these ceremonial and burdensome purifications: yet when we consider how nearly we are beset with occasions of moral uncleanness, by day and by night, alone and in company, nay, sleeping as well as awake, we may well say with David, "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults."—T. Scott.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—34. The sacrifices of the great day of atonement.—By the first verse of this chapter we find, that the precepts contained in it were delivered immediately after the death of Nadab and Abihu, though not entered in that order into the sacred canon. Indeed, it is unreasonable to expect, in writings between three and four thousand years old, and delivered "at sundry times and in divers manners," the regularity and arrangement of modern authors. The chapter before us describes the important services of the great day of atonement, with the peculiar ceremony of the scape-goat. The priest, being himself a sinner, was to offer first a bullock for his own sins, before he offered a goat for those of the people. Every circumstance is here instructive: we can notice a few only, with the inspired commentary in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

1. The high-priest was not at all times to go into the holy place "within the vail," but only on great and extraordinary occa-

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 2. Holy place.—According to a belief which was universally prevalent among ancient nations, the innermost sanctuary was the peculiar abode of the god to whom the temple was dedicated. Into this part, no mortal except the priest dared to enter; which was, therefore, called the inaccessable. Every uninitiated person, who ventured to penetrate into the inner sanctuary, expiated his boldness by a sudden death. Pausanias relates, that at "the inclosure and inaccessible sanctuary of Isis," near Tithorea, "a person, to whom, as not being initiated, access was not lawful, once out of inquisitiveness and wantonness, entered the sanctuary when the pile (prepared for the sacrifices) was already kindled: there he saw the whole place full of spectres. Returning to Tithorea, and relating what he had seen, it is said, he immediately died. Something similar was told me by a Phœnician. The Egyptians are accustomed to celebrate a festival in honour of Isis, at the time when, as they say, she mourned for Osiris. At this time, a Roman governor of Egypt once sent a man, whom he had bribed, into the sanctuary of Coptos. He in-

4 He shall put on the f holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he z wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and make an atonement for h himself, and for his house.

7 And he shall take the two goats, and present them before the LORD at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the i scape-goat.

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the LORD's j lot fell, and offer him for a sin-offering.

10 But the goat on which the lot fell to be the scape-goat, shall be presented alive before the LORD, to make an k atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 ¶ And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself:

12 And he shall take a censer l full of burning coals of m fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet n incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail:

14 And he shall take of the blood of the q bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward: and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.

15 ¶ Then shall he kill the goat of the r sin-offering that is for the people, and bring his sions: "The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing"—2 That he then entered, "not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the error of the people;" but "Christ being come a High-Priest of good things to come, . . . neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in (for all) into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us" (Heb. ix. 8—12.)

But the most interesting service of the day was the offering of the two goats. "The dying goat (says Scott) represent Christ suffering for our sins: the scape-goat, (or the goat which escaped into the wilderness,) Christ rising, to carry into effect the purposes of his death, the actual forgiveness and justification of a sinner." Christ having entered into the presence of God on our behalf, all our sins are buried in the sands of the desert, or, as the Scriptures elsewhere express it, "cast into the depths of the sea," to appear no more against us. The doctrine of imputation is here exhibited in the clearest manner. First, the high-priest went into the holy place, and sprinkled the blood of the slain sacrifices before the mercy-seat, thereby making reconciliation or atonement before God; he then took the live goat, and laying both his hands upon his head, confessed "over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and deed came out again; but, in relating what he had seen, he fell down dead on the spot." The same author mentions the temple of Dindymene, which they thought was unlawful to open more than one day in the year; and h says of the temple of Orcus, that "it was opened but once a year."—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Scape-goat.—[Heb. azazel.—The Hebrew has been supposed by some to be the name of a place, either a mountain or cliff, to which the goat was led. But no place of that name has ever been pointed out, except a mountain near Sinai, which was too distant for the goat to be conducted there from Jerusalem. Other learned men think it was the name of the devil, who was worshipped by the heathen in the form of a goat. But Ep. Patrick justly objects to this opinion; for it is difficult to conceive, that when the other goat was offered to God, this should be sent among demons. The more probable opinion seems to be, that it was a name given to the goat itself, on account of his being let go from aziz, a goat, and azal to depart.]—Bagster.

blood * within the vail, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat:

16 And he shall make an * atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation, that * remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness.

17 And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation * when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.

18 And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and * make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow * it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

20 ¶ And when he hath made an end of * reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat:

21 And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess * over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting * them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a * fit man into the wilderness:

22 And the goat shall * bear upon him all their iniquities unto a * land not * inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness.

23 And Aaron shall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there:

24 And he shall wash his flesh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himself, and for the people.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The blood of beasts must be offered at the door of the tabernacle. 10 All eating of blood is forbidden, 15 and all that dieth alone, or is torn.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, saying, all their transgressions in all their sins, (a very comprehensive expression,) putting them (i. e. their sins) upon the head of the goat, and then sent him away, by the hand of a fit man, into the wilderness." Thus the goat was to "bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited." Here we must remark, that this atonement was merely typical; for "the blood of bulls and goats could not take away sin." Of what use, it may be said, was all this ceremony? It was, first, important in showing them the necessity of an atonement; and, secondly, in directing them to the greater and better sacrifice of Christ, who "took away sin by the sacrifice of himself."

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—16. Sundry prohibitions.—The language of this chapter evidently means, that the Israelites, while in the wilderness, must not kill any of those animals which were appointed to be sacrificed, even for food, elsewhere, either in the camp, or without: but must bring them all, as peace-offerings, to the door of the tabernacle; that the blood might be sprinkled, the fat burnt on the altar, and the due portion allotted to the priest, according to the laws before given.—It may be supposed, that few animals, in proportion to the multitudes of Israel, would at this time be slain; the manna being their principal sustenance: and when they came into Canaan, and many of them lived far from the sanctuary, they might kill cattle for food in any place. "Even as the roe-buck, and as the hart, so shalt thou eat them." (Deut. xii. 15, 22.) These animals, therefore, or any other clean animal, not appointed for sacrifice, if caught in the wilderness, might be eaten, without being brought to the door of the tabernacle. In the meanwhile, the transgression of this law would be imputed to any Israelite as a capital crime; even as if he had committed murder; and, if the magistrate did not punish him, God himself would "cut him off from among his people."—This law was intended to honour the divine institutions, and to put an end to the custom of offering sacrifices "in the open field," or in any place indiscriminately, by habituating the people to bring all their oblations to the tabernacle; nay, to present the animals slain for food as a sacrifice to God.—It was also meant as a preservative from idolatry, which was even at that time secretly practised, in direct violation of the national covenant. For idolatry is evi-

Ver. 22. The goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities.—[Most ancient nations had vicarious sacrifices, to which they transferred, by certain rites and ceremonies, the guilt of the community at large. The white bull, sacrificed by the Egyptians to Apis, was of this kind: they cut off the head of the victim, loaded it with execrations, that "if there was any evil hanging over them, or the land of Egypt, it might be poured on that head," and then sold it to the Greeks, or threw it into the Nile. Herod Petronius Arbitr says, that it was a custom among the ancient inhabitants of Marseilles, when afflicted by any pestilence, to take one of the poorer citizens, who offered himself for the purpose; and having fed him for a whole year with the purest and best food, adorned him with vervain, and clothed him with sacred vestments, they led him round the city, loading him with execrations, praying that all the evils to which the city was exposed might fall upon him, and then precipitated him from the top of a rock. Suidas observes, that it was a custom to devote a man annually to death, for the safety of the people, with these words, be thou our purifier, and throw him into the sea, as a sacrifice to Neptune.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Let go the goat.—[To what has already been adduced concerning similar practices among various nations, we may add, that the nearest resemblance to the scape-goat of the Hebrews is found in the Ashvamedh, Jugg of the Hindoos; which is thus explained in the Code of Gentoo Laws: "An Ashvamedh Jugg is when a person, having commenced a Jugg, (i. e. a religious ceremony,) writes various articles upon a scroll of paper, on a horse's neck, and dismisses the horse, sending along with the horse a stout and valiant person, equipped with the best necessities and accoutrements, to accompany the horse day and night, whithersoever he shall choose to go; and if any creature, either man, genius, or dragon, should seize the horse, that man opposes such attempt, and having gained the victory upon a battle, or beneath the earth, would seize this horse, and the horse of himself comes to the house of the celebrator of the Jugg, upon killing that horse, he must throw the flesh of him upon the fire of the Juk, and utter the prayer of his deity: such a Jugg is called a Jugg Ashvamedh, and the merit of it, as a religious work, is infinite."]—Bagster.

3 What * man soever there be of the house of Israel, that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp,

4 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the LORD before the tabernacle of the LORD: blood shall be <sup>b</sup>imputed unto that man, he hath shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people:

5 To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices which * they offer in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest, and offer them for peace-offerings unto the LORD.

6 And the priest shall <sup>d</sup>sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the LORD at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and * burn the fat for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

7 And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto <sup>f</sup>devils, after whom they have gone a <sup>g</sup>whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 ¶ And thou shalt say unto them, <sup>h</sup>Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, that offereth a burnt-offering or sacrifice, 9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that <sup>i</sup>eateth any manner of blood; I will even <sup>j</sup>set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For <sup>k</sup>the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to <sup>l</sup>make an atonement for your souls: for it is the <sup>m</sup>blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

dently intended, when it is said, that the people "sacrificed to devils, after whom they had gone a whoring," the common term for idolatry in the Scriptures. The word translated "devils," is taken from the roughness of a goat, and indeed signifies goats: and many translate it satyrs, which are fabled to have appeared in the form of goats in the woods to their votaries: and it is certain, that several imaginary deities of the Gentiles were often worshipped by images, formed nearly in the shape of goats.—Our translation, however, is not improper: for CHAP. XVII. Ver. 4, 5. Unto the door of the tabernacle.—To prevent the blood being offered to idols, as was practised by the heathen, while they were in the wilderness every animal proper for sacrifice was to be brought to "the door of the tabernacle," to be slain; but after they settled in Canaan, this law, becoming impracticable from the distance of some tribes from the tabernacle, was repealed. Deut. xii. 15, 22.

Ver. 7. Sacrifices unto devils.—(Seirim, properly signifies hairy, or hairy ones; and hence is used not only for he-goats, but also for certain fabulous beings or sylvan gods, to whom was ascribed the form of goats. Maimonides says, that the Zabian idolaters worshipped demons under the form of goats; and that this custom being spread among other nations, gave occasion to this precept. He-goats, however, are probably intended here, which were objects of divine honour among the Egyptians under the name of Mendes. Herodotus says that all goats were worshipped in Egypt; but particularly he-goats. From these seem to have sprang Pan, Silenus, and the innumerable herd of those imaginary beings, fauns, satyrs, dryads, &c. all woodland gods, and held in veneration by the Greeks and Romans.)—Bagster.—Gone a whoring.—These idolaters were, with peculiar propriety, compared to fornication and adultery, because those crimes, in many cases, formed a part of the heathen worship.

Ver. 11. The life is in the blood.—See note on Gen. ix. 4. [This sentence, which contains a most important truth, had existed in the Mosaic writings for 3600 years, before the attention of any philosopher was drawn to the subject. That the blood actually possesses a living principle, and that the life of the whole body is derived from it, is a doctrine of revelation, and a doctrine which the experiments of the most accurate anatomists have served strongly to confirm. The proper circulation of this important fluid through the whole human system was first taught by Solomon in figurative language, (Ec. xii. 6.) and discovered, as it is called, and demonstrated, by Dr. Harvey in 1628; though some Italian philosophers had the same notion a little before. This accurate anatomist was the first who fully revived the Mosaic notion of the itality of the blood; which was afterwards adopted by the justly celebrated Dr. J. Hunter, professor of anatomy, and established by him, by a great variety of strong reasoning and accurate experiments.]—Bagster.

all idolatry in fact defies devils, by rendering worship to those ambitious spirits, even as all wickedness is serving them; and by both Satan aspires to be honoured as the god and prince of this world.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—30. Customs of the heathen to be avoided—laws of marriage.—If we would obey the divine commands, we must break off bad customs, and also renounce conformity to the world: for wherever we go, we shall find its maxims and observances, in many things, directly opposite to ing." The hunting of wild animals was allowed for food; and as it respected the more destructive beasts, as foxes, wolves, &c. to protect the flocks and herds; but to hunt or shoot, for mere sport or amusement, has no countenance in the word of God, or the principles of humanity.

Ver. 15. That which died of itself.—Tavernier describes the wretched state of the poor in some countries to be such, that they will cook and eat such animals; but there is peculiar danger attending both these and those torn of beasts, as there are many wolves and wild dogs subject to hydrophobia.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 3. After the doings of Egypt.—The laws of Moses were not only good in themselves, but many of them were particularly designed to guard the Israelites against the superstitious and idolatrous practices of the Egyptians and the Canaanites, into which, however, they repeatedly fell, notwithstanding the heavy penalties with which those laws were enforced. For the abominations of Egypt, see Ezek. xx. 7, 8. xxxii. 8. For those of Canaan, see Deut. xii. 30, 31.

Ver. 6. Near of kin.—[Heb. remainder of his flesh.—Notwithstanding the prohibitions here, it must be evident, that in the infancy of the world, persons very near of kin, and even brothers and sisters, must have joined in matrimonial alliances; and therefore we cannot pronounce them immoral in themselves. But, in these first instances, necessity required it; but when this necessity no longer existed, the thing became inexpedient and improper: for, 1. As human nature now is, it is very expedient that those, who are so much together in youth, should, by such a restriction, be taught to look upon all such intercourse as prohibited and incestuous; for unless such restrictions are made, it would be impossible to prevent the prevalence of very early corruption among young persons. (See Michaelis on the laws of Moses.) 2. That the duties owing by nature to relatives might not be confounded with those of a social or political kind: for could a man be a brother and a husband, or a son and a husband, at the same time, and fulfil the duties of both? Impossible. 3. That by intermarrying with other families, relationship and its endearments might be diffused. These prohibitions are, therefore, to be considered, either as moral, or so nearly connected with moral obligations, as to be observed by all mankind; and in general, the wiser heathens have deemed such marriages unlawful, and abstained from them.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XIX.

A repetition of sundry laws.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying. 2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my sabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 And if ye offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, ye shall offer it at your own will.

the law of God: yet enforced with an authority which rivals his, and which is disobeyed with great difficulty, and at the expense of much contempt and reproach. But the broad, smooth, frequented paths of the world lead to destruction; the ways of God to life eternal: every one of his commandments is also good in itself, and conducive to the peace, comfort, and true honour of the human species; and he is as kind in what he prohibits, as in what he allows. He formed mankind for social life, created them male and female, instituted marriage, and blessed it; he hath formed the regulations of it in wisdom and love, for the good of individuals, of families, and of society,—of the present and of succeeding generations. Where his laws are observed, the most important advantages follow: where they are disregarded, disgrace, disease, and numberless most destructive evils ensue.—But what a sink of iniquity is the human heart, that it should be necessary to prohibit such detestable, filthy, and cruel practices, as are here mentioned! That ever it should enter into the minds of rational creatures to serve the devil and their own lusts, with degradation far beneath the brutes themselves! From this polluted fountain the earth hath been filled with abominable crimes in all ages, and the very creation groans under the burden of man's iniquity: and though one land after another vomiteth out its inhabitants, as unable any longer to endure their wickedness; and though one generation is swept away after another into the grave; yet still the earth is filled with sin. Ere long it shall be burnt up with all its works: and "new heavens and a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness," shall succeed. But unless we be previously cleansed in the fountain of the Redeemer's blood, and have a "new heart given us, and a new spirit put within us," we shall not find admission there. Let us then profit by the awful examples of vengeance recorded, and fear the threatenings denounced, in the sacred oracles: let us mortify the deeds of the body, and learn self-denial: and above all, aware of the deceitfulness and wickedness of the human heart, let us walk watchfully, and humbly dependant upon the grace of God sought in earnest prayer. Then we shall escape the condemnation of the wicked, and the Lord himself will be our God and our Portion for ever.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XIX. ver. 1—38. Miscellaneous laws.—Though the contents of this chapter are chiefly repetitions of laws previously given, it contains some excellent moral precepts that ought not to be passed over. The introductory precept, "Ye shall be holy, for I am holy;" deserves our especial notice, for much of the character of a people depends upon the character of their God. The idols of the heathen are represented, even by their own poets, as cruel, false, lewd, and dishonest; how, then, could it be expected that their worshippers should be otherwise? It is much to be feared, that the continual study of these models in our classical schools, without a proper antidote from their teachers, has done much to corrupt the morals of youth, and even contributed to fill the ranks of infidelity. Reverence to parents, and to the sabbath day, are also of vast importance to public morals: scarcely does any person come to an untimely end, but he attributes it to the neglect of one or other of these two important precepts.—Turn ye not unto idols: the term here used in the original, means "nonentities;" or, in the usual scriptural phrase, "vanities;" for an idol, as St. Paul says, "is nothing in the world:" (1 Cor. viii. 4.) and, therefore, did he exhort the populace, at Lystra, to turn from their vanities unto the living God. (Acts xvii. 15.) And when it is added, "Make you no molten gods," it must have been impossible for them not to have recollected "the golden calf!" The laws (ver. 9, 10.) relative to gleanings in the harvest and

Ver. 18. Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister.—That is, not marry two sisters, as Jacob was drawn in to marry Leah and Rachel, who continually vexed each other, as well as their husband. Some think that this verse contains an express prohibition of polygamy; but there is no other passage which favours the interpretation of this text as a direct law against it; and many things in the whole subsequent history, imply a connivance at it.—Scott.

Ver. 21. Molech.—[Molech signifies a king, or governor, of similar import with Baal, lord, or governor; and it is generally supposed that the sin was worshipped under this name; and more particularly as the fire appears to have been so much employed in his worship. It seems clear that children were not only consecrated to him, by passing through the fire, which appears to be alluded to here, but that they were actually made a burnt-offering to him.—That the several abominations afterwards mentioned were actually practised by many heathen nations is abundantly attested by their own writers.]—Bagster.

6 It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow : and if ought remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable ; it shall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD ; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

9 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.

10 And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard ; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger : I am the LORD your God.

11 Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither shall ye lie one to another.

12 And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God : I am the LORD.

13 Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him : the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

14 Thou shalt not curse the deaf, nor put a stumbling-block before the blind, but shalt thou fear thy God : I am the LORD.

15 Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment ; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty : but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

16 Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people ; neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour : I am the LORD.

17 Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart : thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.

18 Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself : I am the LORD.

19 Ye shall keep my statutes. * Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind : Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed : neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee.

20 And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bond-maid betrothed to a husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her ; she shall be scourged : they shall not be put to death, because she was not free.

21 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a trespass-offering.

22 And the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering before the LORD for his sin which he hath done ; and the sin which he hath done shall be forgiven him.

23 ¶ And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food ; then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised : three years shall it be as uncircumcised unto you : it shall not be eaten of.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy to praise the LORD withal.

25 And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof : I am the LORD your God.

26 ¶ Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood : neither shall ye use enchantment, nor observe times.

27 Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.

28 Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you : I am the LORD.

29 ¶ Do not prostitute thy daughter to cause her to be a whore : lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness.

30 ¶ Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary : I am the LORD.

31 ¶ Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them : I am the LORD your God.

32 ¶ Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God : I am the LORD.

33 And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him.

34 But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself ; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt : I am the LORD your God.

35 ¶ Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in measure the vintage, are full of mercy to the poor and to the stranger. The Jews are repeatedly reminded, that they were themselves strangers in the land of Egypt : what kindnesses they received from the Egyptians in the former part of that time, under Joseph, might teach them to show the same to others ; and the sufferings they endured in the latter, should teach them commiseration.—“Ye know the heart of a stranger.” (Exod. xxiii. 9.)—“Ye shall not curse the deaf, nor put a stumbling-block before the blind ;” because the one cannot hear to defend himself, nor the other see to avoid the danger. Such things, even in sport, are cowardly and disgraceful, and ought certainly not to be tolerated among Christians. “Thou shalt not

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 9. Reap the harvest.—[In what code of laws merely human, is a requisition to be found so counteracting to selfishness, so encouraging to liberality, and so beneficently considering to the poor and needy ? But the Mosiac dispensation, like the Christian, breathed with love to God, and benevolence to man.]—Basster.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind.—[These practices might have been considered as altering the original constitution of God in creation ; and this is the view which the Jews, and also Josephus and Philo, take of the subject. There were, probably, also both moral and political reasons for these prohibitions. With respect to heterogeneous mixtures among cattle, it was probably forbidden, to prevent excitements to the abominations condemned in the preceding chapter. As to seeds, in many cases, it would be highly improper to sow different kinds in the same plot of ground. If oats and wheat, for instance, were sown together, the latter would be injured, and the former ruined. This prohibition may, therefore, be regarded as a prudential agricultural maxim.]—Basster.—A garment mingled of linen and woollen—which is with us commonly called linsey-woolsey. It is difficult to conceive a moral reason for this, unless that it reproves an attempt at finery, like Joseph’s “coat of many colours.” The Heb. shaatnez, according to Dr. J. R. Forster, (the traveller), answers to the Egyptian shoutnes, which signifies a gaudy and costly vesture, of different coloured wool and cotton, such go up and down as a tale-bearer ;” the original word means a pedler, hawking about slanderous reports from house to house, as a pedler does his goods : such characters are in the highest degree detestable. It is added, “Neither shalt thou stand [up] against the blood of thy neighbour ;” that is, as a false witness, or accuser, whereby blood may be unjustly shed. On the other hand, if they knew of any evil done by their neighbour, they were to admonish him privately, and save him, if possible, from either disgrace or punishment. Thus the injunctions here given correspond with those of our Lord to his disciples ; (Matt. xviii. 15.) “If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault,” &c.—Only one other precept in this chapter

Ver. 27. Ye shall not round, &c.—Herodotus says, the Arabs cut their hair round, in honour of Bacchus, who wore it so.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 28. Cuttings in your flesh.—The ancients were very violent in their grief. Virgil describes Dido as tearing her face with her nails, and beating her breast with her fists.—Nor print any marks.—The Hindoos bear upon their foreheads, &c. certain sectarian marks, in honour of their idols.

Ver. 29. Do not prostitute, &c.—This was common among the heathen. The Cyprian women, according to Justin, gained by public prostitution that portion which their husbands received with them at marriage ; and the Phoenicians gave to Venus the gain acquired by the prostitution of their daughters.—Augustin.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head.—Among the few virtues of the Egyptians, according to Herodotus, this was one. “For if a young person meet his senior, he instantly turns aside to make way for him ; and if an aged person enter an apartment, the youth always rise from their seats.” An

CHAPTER XX.

1 Of him that giveth of his seed to Molech. 6 Of going to wizards. 9 Of him that curseth his parents. 10 Of adultery, &c. 22 Obedience is required with holiness. 27 Wizards must be put to death.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 ¶ Again thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever ° he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech, he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And I will ° set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to profane my holy name.

4 ¶ And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, and kill ° him not:

5 Then I will set my face against that man, and against his ° family, and will cut him off, and all that go a ° whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 ¶ And ° the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him ° off from among his people.

7 ¶ Sanctify ° yourselves therefore and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God.

8 And ° ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the LORD which sanctify you.

9 ¶ For every ° one that curseth his father or his mother, shall be surely put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother: his ° blood shall be upon him.

10 ¶ And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the ° adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

11 ¶ And the man that lieth with his father's ° wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness:

requires notice here, namely, verse 32, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man." A virtue always enjoined and practised among the ancients; and, in the east, even to the present day; though too much slighted among Europeans.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—27. Laws against idolatry, witchcraft, &c.—Molech is one of the earliest idols of which we read in Scripture, and his peculiar sacrifices were infant children. The name Molech signifies king, as that of Baal does lord, and both are supposed to have represented the solar fire, of which terrestrial fire was the representative: many think they were the same idol under different names. Rabbi Simeon (on

Savary remarks, the same reverence is yet paid to old age in Egypt. The same was practised among the Romans; and if we look into patriarchal times, we find Joseph, though the viceroy of Egypt, bowing himself to the ground before his aged father. See Dr. Clarke on Gen. xlviii. 12.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 2. That giveth any of his seed unto Molech—The way of "passing through the fire," (chap. xvii. 21.) is explained by the following account of this custom, as practised formerly among the Indians, at their grand annual festival, called "The feast of Fire;" in which, as in the ancient rites of Molech, "the devotees walk barefoot over a glowing fire." It lasts eighteen days, during which time, those who make a vow to keep it, must fast, abstain from women, lie on the bare ground, and walk on a brisk fire. The 18th day they assembled on the sound of instruments, their heads crowned with flowers, their ° body bedaubed with saffron, and follow in a dance the figures of Damnah, Raah, and of Dobree, who are carried there in procession. When they come to the fire, they stir it, to animate its activity, and take a little of the ashes, with which they rub their foreheads; and when the gods have been three times round it, they walk, either fast or slow, according to their zeal, over a very hot fire, extending to about forty feet in length. Some carry their children in their arms, and others lancets, sabres, and standards. The most fervent devotees walk several times over the fire. After the ceremony, the people press to collect some of the ashes to rub their foreheads with, and obtain from the devotees some of the flowers with which they were adorned, and which they carefully preserve.—Sonnerat's Trav.

Jer. vii.) describes the image of Molech as a statue of brass, (or copper,) with the head of an ox, and human hands, so extended that any object to be sacrificed might be lodged in them. This idol was erected in the valley of Hinnom, near Jerusalem; and the image is stated to have been hollow within, and capable of being heated red hot; when this was done, it is said the sacrifice, whether animal or child, was placed within its arms, and dropt into the fire beneath. In this case, at least, they beat the toph, or Syrian drum, to drown its cries, and hence the place of sacrifice was called Tophet—the image of hell itself. (See Jer. vii. 31, 32. xix. 11—13.) But this was not "passing through the fire;" (chap. xviii. 21.)

Ver. 9. Every one that curseth.—[The term yskallel, signifies not only to curse, but to speak contemptuously, disrespectfully, or to make light of a person: so that all speeches which have a tendency to lessen our parents in the eyes of others, or to render their judgment, piety, &c., suspected or contemptible, is here included; though the act of cursing, or of treating the parent with injurious or opprobrious language, is what is particularly intended. He who conscientiously keeps the fifth commandment, can be in no danger of the judgment here denounced.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. They shall be burnt.—It should seem, however, that they were first strangled, or stoned, as was the case with Achan, Josh. vii. 25. There seems to be no example of burning alive under the Mosaic law.

Ver. 16. If a woman, &c.—This might seem an unnecessary law; but we are assured by Herodotus that the abominations here referred to existed among the Egyptians, and even formed part of their superstitious religious system, and we have reason to believe that they were not uncommon among the Canaanites. (See ch. xviii. 24, 25.) Need we wonder then, that God should have made laws of this nature, and appointed the punishment of death for these crimes? This one observation will account for many of those strange prohibitions which we find in the Mosaic law.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. They shall die childless.—This was the punishment of heaven, not of the magistrates.

Ver. 23. Manners of the nation.—Some MSS. read this in the plural, "nations." So Boothroyd.

27 ¶ A man also or a woman that hath a familiar <sup>i</sup> spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones: their blood shall be upon them.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Of the priests' mourning: 6 of their holiness: 7, 13 of their marriages. 17 The priests that have blemishes must not minister in the sanctuary.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests, the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There <sup>a</sup> shall none be defiled for the dead among his people:

2 But for his kin, that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother,

3 And for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband: for her may he be defiled.

4 But <sup>b</sup> he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people, to profane himself.

5 They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh.

6 ¶ They shall be holy unto their God, and not <sup>c</sup> profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and the bread of their God they do offer: <sup>d</sup> therefore they shall be holy.

7 ¶ They shall <sup>e</sup> not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put <sup>f</sup> away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God.

8 Thou shalt sanctify him therefore, for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for <sup>g</sup> I the LORD, which sanctify you, am holy.

9 And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be <sup>h</sup> burnt with fire.

10 ¶ And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the <sup>i</sup> garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes;

11 Neither shall he go <sup>k</sup> in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother;

12 Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the LORD.

13 ¶ And he shall take a <sup>l</sup> wife in her virginity.

14 A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or a harlot, these shall he not take: but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife.

15 Neither shall he profane his <sup>m</sup> seed among his people: for I the LORD do sanctify him.

16 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, that seems to have been a different ceremony, common alike to Baal and Molech, but not always fatal. The children were by some means carried through the fire, by which they were probably scorched, if not burnt, in honour of the idol to whom they were devoted. (See note on ver. 2.) That the Jews should fall into such a practice may seem very extraordinary; but that traces of such idolatry should still be found in Ireland in the present day, is surely more extraordinary, but not less certain. (See Ev. Mag. 1812. also Hib. E. M. 1817.) Should any consider it incredible that parents could be guilty of such cruelties, let them turn to the thousands of children drowned annually in the Ganges, and the thousands of widows, until recently, annually burned in India.

"And the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them." Of the different kinds of pretenders to necromancy and witchcraft, we shall have a future occasion to speak more particularly. At present we shall only remark, that among the heathen (as at this day among the Indians and Negroes) they were all idolaters. From the expression, "Go a whoring after them," which means to go after idols as men follow lewd women, Scott infers, "that consulting with men or women, who practise, or pretend to, witchcraft (or divination) in any form, is a real act of idolatry, and of worshipping the devil!"—an idea at which professing Christians should surely tremble!

The number of capital punishments inflicted by the Jewish law, marks a strong distinction between the old and new dispensation; the former tending to death, the latter to life both temporal and eternal. It shows, also, the dreadful propensity to crimes, even of the worst character, which prevails in unenlightened nations, among which that generation of Israelites Ver. 24. Milk and honey.—[Milk and honey were the chief dainties of the ancients, as they are now among the Arabs, particularly the Bedouins. Hence not only the Hebrews, but also the Greeks and Romans, painted the highest pleasantness and fertility by an abundance of milk and honey. The image taphor, derived from a breast, producing copious streams of milk.]—Bastler.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. Speak unto the priests.—The ministers of religion, in all communions, should be careful to avoid every thing which unfits them for their public duty, or occasions scandal; and the families of such should consider, that any improper conduct in them, is not only offensive to God, but entails disgrace upon their father.—There shall none be defiled.—That is, ceremoniously, by touching the dead, &c. but the Hebrew idiom is very remarkable. The word nephesh, here used for dead, is the same translated soul, Gen. ii. 7. and means, properly, "the breathing frame;" i. e. a living person; but it is both here and elsewhere applied to a corpse, which has recently breathed; and in ver. 11. the word "dead" is connected with it. So we frequently speak of "dead animals;" and Virgil himself uses the Latin anima in the same manner.

Ver. 4. He shall not defile himself, (being,) &c.—This participle (being) is supplementary, and Ainsworth suggests, that the casual particle for, would be more correct. So Chazkuni, "He shall not defile himself for a chief man" in Hebrew, Baal, a lord, or master; perhaps the head of a tribe. But must certainly be reckoned which came up from Egypt; men whom nothing could deter from offending, but certain and immediate punishment. This, however, it is probable, had the desired effect, for, considering the number of capital offences, we read of few public executions.

The close of this chapter demands two observations: 1. That the Canaanites who were now about to be expelled, were a people whose "iniquities were full;" that is, who were ripe for destruction, "for (says the Lord) they committed ALL THESE THINGS"—referring to the black list of offences in this and the preceding chapter; "and therefore I ABHOR them." 2. We may remark, that Israel were introduced into their land, only on condition of renouncing their crimes, and keeping "all the statutes and judgments" of JEHOVAH: "that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein, spew you not out;" a loathsome image, it is true, but evidently intended to express, as well the effect as the disgusting nature of their iniquities. In fact, when they became guilty of the same offences as the devoted nations, the land vomited them out among all the nations of the earth, where we at present find them.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1–24. Law of mourning, &c.—As these priests were types of Christ, so all ministers especially must be followers of him; that their example may elucidate and corroborate their instructions, and teach the people in imitating them to imitate the Saviour. He was perfectly superior to all natural affections; and in the business of his heavenly Father, would not be interrupted or biased, even by his regard to his earthly parent. Absolutely dead to the world, and filled with zeal for the glory of the Father and compassion to the souls of men, he was unwearied in his labours, and persevering in his sufferings, till he could say, "It is finished." Without blemish, Baal also signifies a husband, and therefore our translators have placed in the margin, "Being a husband among his people, he shall not defile himself for his wife," &c. But we prefer the second sense; and so Scott.

Ver. 5. Baldness, &c.—[This custom is also called rounding the corners of the head, (ch. xiv. 27.) and seems to have been performed in honour of some idol. Herodotus observes that the Arabs shave or cut their hair round, in honour of Bacchus, who, they say, had his hair cut in this way. He also says that the Macians, a people of Libya, cut their hair round, so as to leave a tuft on the top of the head. In this way the Chinese still cut their hair. The hair was much used in divination among the ancients; and for purposes of religious superstition among the Greeks.]—Bastler.

Ver. 7. A wife that is a whore.—Or that has been such, or reputed such, though penitent or reformed: not a doubtful or suspicious character. See Ainsworth. Compare ver. 14.

Ver. 9. She shall be burnt.—This, it should seem, was not a new law; for when the daughter of Judah was found with child, he cried hypocritically and unfeelingly, "Bring her forth and let her be burnt." Gen. xxxviii. 24. It applied, probably, to the daughters of the chiefs, and therefore to the priests' daughters, who ranked with them. But we have no instance of the law being executed, nor, indeed, of the penalty being incurred; and when the sentence of burning was executed, it is agreed that it was preceded by strangling, or by stoning. Josh. vii. 25.

17 Speak unto Aaron, saying, Whosoever he be of thy seed in their generations that hath any <sup>a</sup> blemish, let him not <sup>b</sup> approach to offer the <sup>c</sup> bread of his God :

18 For whatsoever man he be that hath a blemish, he shall not approach : a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat nose, or any thing <sup>d</sup> superfluous,

19 Or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed,

20 Or crook-backed, or a <sup>e</sup> dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or be scurvy, or scabbed, or <sup>f</sup> hath his stones broken ;

21 No man that hath a blemish of the seed of Aaron the priest shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire ; he hath a blemish, he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God.

22 He shall eat the bread of his God, both of the most <sup>g</sup> holy, and of the <sup>h</sup> holy.

23 Only he shall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish ; that <sup>i</sup> he profane not my sanctuaries : for <sup>j</sup> I the LORD do sanctify them.

24 And Moses told it unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The priests in their uncleanness must abstain from the holy things. 17 The sacrifices must be without blemish.

AND THE LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they <sup>k</sup> separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that <sup>l</sup> they profane not my holy name in those things which they <sup>m</sup> hallow unto me : I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, Whosoever he be of all your seed among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, <sup>n</sup> having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from my presence : I am the LORD.

4 What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or <sup>o</sup> hath a running <sup>p</sup> issue ; he shall and separate from sinners, he executed his priestly office on earth : and being ascended into heaven, he is preparing his church of redeemed sinners, that "not having spot, or blemish, or any such thing," he may espouse it as a chaste virgin unto himself for ever : and he requires all his family to remember the relation in which they stand unto him, and to act consistently. What manner of persons then should his ministers be? Surely their characters should be free from scandal ; and their hearts from the dominion of sin, and from the love of filthy lucre, worldly honour, and sensual indulgence! They should be unwearied and cheerful in their work, "giving themselves wholly to it," and letting nothing divert them from it. They should be patient in tribulations, superior to the power of their passions, circumspect in their walk, cautious in their connexions, and exemplary in the government of their families. Nothing is of more importance to the interests of religion than the unblemished character, and the sober, decent, and respectable conduct and demeanour of the wives and children of ministers : for the people will always think themselves authorized to go farther in conformity to the world, and its vain fashions and customs, and in pursuit of its interests and pleasures, than the minister and his family do ; and will interpret

Ver. 17. That hath any blemish.—It was very needful that one who typified Him who was without blemish, should himself have none ; but we conceive moral or intellectual defects are the only blemishes which incapacitate for the Christian ministry. St. Paul himself had an infirmity which subjected him to the contempt of many, but by no means incapacitated him. 2 Cor. x. 10.

Ver. 20. Or a dwarf.—Margin, "Slender." Ainsworth, who follows the Rabbin, explains it of "a small spot" in the eye ; but this interferes with the next blemish. It is very evident, that neither a very short man, nor a weak man, could perform the duties of the priest's office. The heathen were equally particular, to avoid blemishes in their priests, as well as in their sacrifices. Orient. Lit. No. 268.

Ver. 21. That hath a blemish.—[In the above list of blemishes, we meet with some that might render the priest contemptible in the eyes of men ; and others that would be very great impediments in the discharge of his ministerial duties. Among the heathen, persons of the most respectable appearance were appointed to the priesthood ; and the emperor, both among the Greeks and Romans, was both king and priest. Among the Greeks "It was required, that whoever was admitted to this office should be sound and perfect in all his members, it being thought a dishonour to the gods to be served by any one that was lame, maimed, or any other way imperfect : and, therefore, at Athens, before their consecration, they were examined whether they were opheltes, that is, perfect and entire, neither having any defect, nor any thing superfluous." (Potter's Greek Ant.) Seneca says, "that Metellus, who had the misfortune to become blind when he saved the Palladium from the flames, on the not eat of the holy things, until he be <sup>q</sup> clean. And whoso <sup>r</sup> toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a <sup>s</sup> man whose seed goeth from him ;

5 Or whosoever <sup>t</sup> toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or <sup>u</sup> a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath :

6 The soul which hath <sup>v</sup> touched any such shall be unclean until even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he <sup>w</sup> wash his flesh with water.

7 And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things, <sup>x</sup> because it is his food.

8 That which <sup>y</sup> dieth of itself, or is torn with beasts, he shall not eat to defile himself therewith : I am the LORD.

9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it : I the LORD do sanctify them.

10 ¶ There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing : a sojourner of the priest, or a hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest buy any soul with his <sup>z</sup> money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house : they <sup>aa</sup> shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also be married <sup>ab</sup> unto a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is <sup>ac</sup> returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat ; but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 And if a man eat of the holy thing <sup>ad</sup> unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest, with the holy thing.

15 And they shall not profane the holy <sup>ae</sup> things of the children of Israel which they offer unto the LORD :

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—33. Rules for the priests, &c.—Whilst with gratitude we recollect, that our holy and glorious High-Priest is not liable to any incapacitating impediments to the discharge of his office, either habitual or incidental, but is perfectly such an one as became us ; and that his unblemished sacrifice is of perpetual efficacy for "all who come to God through him ;" let us also remember, that the LORD requires us likewise to reverence his Name, his truths, his ordinances, and his commandments. The man who enters into the ministry, and who handles the word of God, or administers his sacraments, out of covetousness or ambition, whilst he indulges in known, habitual sin, either openly or in secret ; and those professed Christians who make religion their pretence, but gain their object ; or who approach the Lord's table as a step to preferment, or with a heart full of covetousness, malice, or lust ;—such persons, I say, presume to eat of the holy things with their uncleanness upon them, and must answer for it to God. Let us then beware of hypocrisy ; and both examine ourselves, and seek to be purified from our sinful defilements, burning of the temple of Vesta, was obliged to lay down the priesthood ;" and he adds, "every priest whose body is not faultless is to be avoided like a thing of bad omen." M. Sergius, who lost his hand in the defence of his country, could not remain a priest for that reason. At Elis, in Greece, the judges chose the finest looking man to carry the sacred vessels of the deity ; he that was next in beauty and elegance led the ox ; and the third in personal beauty carried the garlands, ribands, wine, and other things used in sacrifice.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 2. That they separate themselves.—This seems obscure. Perhaps the meaning is, not to take to themselves what belonged to the people. So the LXX. "That they be cautious about." &c.—Profane not, &c.—[This is the very ground of the prohibition, that they might preserve in their minds a holy reverence for the Divine Majesty. Hence, when they approached unto him, they must be free from every legal impurity. If great men are to be approached with respect, much more must JEHOVAH be approached with holy reverence.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Cut off.—[That is, according to some, thrust out of the priest's office, or from officiating at the altar ; or, according to others, cut off by some immediate stroke of divine justice, like Nadab and Abihu.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. If the priest buy any soul.—[That is, a Canaanitish slave, who thereby becomes incorporated with his family. Ver. 13. She shall eat of her father's meat.—"A widow in Bengal not unfrequently returns to her father's house on the death of her husband. 16 Or <sup>w</sup> suffer them to <sup>s</sup> bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things: for <sup>l</sup> the LORD do sanctify them.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, Whatsoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the <sup>s</sup> strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering:

19 Ye shall offer at your own will a male without <sup>a</sup> blemish of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 But whatsoever <sup>a</sup> hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of <sup>b</sup> peace-offerings unto the LORD to accomplish his <sup>c</sup> vow, or a free-will-offering in beeves, or <sup>d</sup> sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted: there shall be no blemish therein.

22 Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock, or a <sup>e</sup> lamb that hath any thing <sup>f</sup> superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer for a free-will-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted.

24 Ye shall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut; neither shall ye make any offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither from a <sup>g</sup> stranger's hand shall ye offer the bread of your God of any of these; because their <sup>h</sup> corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them: they shall not be accepted for you.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 When a <sup>i</sup> bullock, or a sheep, or a goat is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day and thenceforth it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And whether it be cow, or <sup>j</sup> ewe, ye shall not kill it and her <sup>k</sup> young both in one day.

29 ¶ And when ye will offer a sacrifice of in the blood of Christ, and by his sanctifying Spirit: that we may not profane the Name of God in these hallowed things, but use them with acceptance, to his glory, and to our own benefit and comfort; and when, as his priests, we have feasted at his table, let us never more defile ourselves with the base pleasures of sin.—It is very proper, that we should carefully distinguish between those who ought, and those who ought not, to eat of these holy things: and we shall find, if we carefully consult the Scriptures, that the man who attempts to expiate his own sin, or to justify himself before God by his own supposed virtues, puts as great an affront on Christ, whose bleeding love to sinners he professes to commemorate, as he who comes to the Lord's table, from the indulgence of his passions by direct and gross immoralities. This is a sin which is often committed unwittingly: but must be repented of, if men

Ver. 16. Or suffer them.—Rather, Nor suffer them. Margin, Or “lade themselves with the iniquity of trespass in their eating.” That is, endeavour to preserve them against transgressing.

Ver. 21. Shall be perfect.—[This law is so founded on the nature of the thing itself, that it has been in force among all nations that sacrificed victims to their deities. Herodotus (l. ii. 33.) describes how accurately the Egyptian priests examined the animals destined for sacrifice; how they looked while standing or lying, what was the appearance of the tongue, and, in general, whether they were without defect. Plutarch, in his Life of Solon, states, that he made it law among the thesians, that they should sacrifice select victims; and that it was a general custom to select the best cattle from the herd, and to distinguish them by a mark, appears from Virgil. Pliny speaks of a solemn examination and inspection of the animals designed for sacrifice. He remarks, among other particulars, that a calf is not fit for a victim if its tail does not reach at least to the knee joint, or if the person offering it brings it on his shoulder, and does not drive it before him, as it is in such cases lean and feeble. The gods did not, besides, approve of any victim that was lame, or belonged to a stranger. (ver. 25.) or which went away from the altar.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. Seven days.—[It was necessary for the mother's health that the young one should suck so long; and prior to this time, the process of nutrition in a young animal can scarcely be considered as completely formed. Besides this, it may justly be asserted, that the flesh of very young animals is comparatively immutative. There is something brutish in eating the young of oast or fowl, before the hair and hoofs are perfect in the one, and the feathers 31 Therefore <sup>m</sup> shall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the LORD.

32 Neither shall ye <sup>n</sup> profane my holy name; but <sup>o</sup> I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: <sup>p</sup> I am the LORD which hallow you,

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, Concerning the <sup>a</sup> feast of the LORD, which ye shall <sup>b</sup> proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts.

3 ¶ Six <sup>c</sup> days shall work be done: but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, a holy convocation: ye shall do no work therein: it is the sabbath of the LORD in all your dwellings.

4 ¶ These are the feasts of the LORD, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

5 In <sup>d</sup> the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the LORD's passover.

6 And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread.

7 In the first day ye shall have a holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

8 But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD seven days: in the seventh day is a holy convocation, ye shall do no servile work therein.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1.—22. Weekly sabbath, &c.—We should not overlook the admonition of observing “the sabbath of the LORD,” not only in public, “but in all our dwellings;” both ourselves, and in our families: allowing our domestics to cease from labour, and teaching them, by precept and example, to improve their leisure; in order that their souls may now find rest in Christ, and at length enjoy “the rest reserved for the people of God.”—We should also learn to consider the time employed in the service of God as profitably spent; and to esteem his ordinances as holy feasts, relished more by the heaven-born soul than all other pleasures, which it willingly renounces for the sake of them. A day, thus set apart for the business of religion, will have so much and so important work and claws in the other; and before this period, their flesh is not good for food. Consequently they were not fit for sacrifice, which is termed the bread or food of God. (Ver. 25.) Other ancient nations observed nearly the same rules. Pliny says, “Young pigs are fit for sacrifice when they are five days old, kids and lambs when they are eight days old, and calves when they are thirty days old.”—Bagster.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 2. The feasts of the LORD.—The word Mandim, is rendered solemnities, Isa. xxxiii. 20., and includes all the days of holy convocation.—Scott.

Ver. 5. The LORD's passover.—See Exod. ch. xii. and xiii.

Ver. 10. Ye shall bring a sheaf.—The Hebrew is an omer, which the margin explains to be, “a handful.”—[This offering was a public acknowledgment of the bounty and goodness of God for the kindly fruits of the earth. From the practice of the people of God, the heathen borrowed a similar one, founded on the same reason. The following passage from Censorinus, is worth of the deepest attention. “Our ancestors, who held their food, their country, their light, and all that they possessed, from the bounty of the gods, consecrated to them a part of all their property, rather as a token of their gratitude, than from a conviction that the gods needed any thing. Therefore, as soon as the harvest was got in, before they had tasted of the fruits, they appointed libations to be made to the gods. And, as they held their fields and cities as gifts from their gods, they consecrated a certain part in the temples and shrines where 13 And the <sup>1</sup>meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour: and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of a hin.

14 And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

15 ¶ And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; <sup>1</sup>seven sabbaths shall be complete:

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye <sup>1</sup>number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth-deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baked with leaven; they are the <sup>1</sup>first-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without <sup>1</sup>blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meat-offering and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire of sweet savour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye shall sacrifice one <sup>m</sup>kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: <sup>2</sup>they shall be holy to the LORD for the priest.

21 And ye shall proclaim on the self-same day, that it may be a holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein. It shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 ¶ And when ye <sup>2</sup>reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest: thou shalt leave them unto the <sup>1</sup>poor, and to the stranger: I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the <sup>2</sup>seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of <sup>1</sup>trumpets, a holy convocation.

25 Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 27 Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of <sup>2</sup>atonement; it shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall <sup>1</sup>afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye shall do no work in that same day; for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

29 For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be <sup>2</sup>afflicted in that same day, he <sup>2</sup>shall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, the same soul will I <sup>2</sup>destroy from among his people.

31 Ye shall do no manner of work. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye <sup>2</sup>celebrate your sabbath.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the <sup>2</sup>feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the LORD.

35 On the first day shall be a holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the <sup>2</sup>eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD:

belonging to it, that all other employment must be postponed to make way for it.—Let us never forget “to honour the LORD with our substance, and with the first-fruits of all our increase; so shall our barns be filled with plenty, and our presses burst out with new wine.” And “when we give alms of such things as we have, behold all things are clean unto us.” Nor will the husbandman ever have cause to complain, that he has less profit or comfort from his crop; because, by leaving good gleanings, he hath made a little harvest for the poor widow, and the labouring man with a large family, who have no land or crop of their own.—In all these solemnities we should look unto Jesus, as the great Sacrifice for sin, the true Paschal Lamb, the First-fruits unto God, our Forerunner to glory, the provision for our souls, and the Fountain of grace; from whose fulness the Holy Spirit flows to all his people, as the Source of all joy, and heavenly hope, and victory over the world and every enemy.—T. Scott.

Ver. 23–24. The feast of trumpets—the day of atonement—and the feast of tabernacles. We may remark, that the term used for feasts in the original, is of more extensive import than the English word by which it is rendered, and includes all the public solemnities, whether feasts or fasts; the great day of atonement being decidedly of the latter class. Scott properly remarks another distinction in these days. “On the weekly sabbath, and on the great day of atonement, they were to do no manner of work,” (works of mercy and necessity excepted:) but they worshipped.” Pliny is express on the same point, and attests that the Romans never tasted either their new corn or wine, till the priests had offered the first-fruits to the gods. See Ex. xxii. 29, and xxiii. 18, 19.—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Seven sabbaths shall be complete.—This is the feast of Pentecost, already enjoined, Exod. xxiv. 22, and which was reckoned from the 16th of the first to the 6th of the third month, forty complete days, and the fiftieth was called Pentecost, which Greek word so means.

Ver. 24. Trumpets.—Horns, doubtless, of rams, or other animals.—[Zichron teruah, here rendered “a memorial of blowing the trumpets,” properly signifies a memorial of triumph or shouting for joy. This festival is generally called the feast of trumpets; and, though the Scriptures have not expressly declared the reason of its celebration, yet, as it fell in the seventh month of the sacred year, which was the first of the civil year, that is, the month Tisri, answering to our September, the opinion very generally embraced by both Jews and Christians is, that it was a memorial of the creation on the other solemnities it was only required that they should do no servile work. “Hence it is reasonably concluded, (says the same commentator,) that many things of a domestic nature might be performed on the other solemnities which must not be done on the weekly sabbath, or the day of atonement.”

The feast of trumpets is now first mentioned, and the design of it seems to have been to proclaim the commencement of what is called the Civil Year, which began about the middle of our September. This feast is called a sabbath, though not a weekly sabbath, because it was a day of rest, though not of the strictest kind; only from servile work, that is, from their usual daily labour.

Of the solemn services of the great day of atonement, we have had a full account in the 16th chapter of this book. This followed ten days after the feast of trumpets, and five days before the feast of tabernacles, so that these three solemnities all came within about half a month. The fast of the atonement was kept with very great strictness, and on penalty of death. The whole day was spent in religious worship and in sacrifices. They were to “afflict their souls,” and abstain from food during the whole of the time, that is, from evening to evening. All these services had, doubtless, (as already observed,) an especial view to Him who was to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and who “afflicted his soul” unto death on our account. (Isa. liii. throughout; Phil. ii. 7, 8.)

Five days after this (as above noted) followed the feast of

of the world, at which “the sons of God shouted for joy.” (Job xxxviii. 7.) and which is supposed, not altogether without reason, to have been at this season of the year. The month Tisri was not only anciently, but still is, reckoned by the Jews the first month of the year; and the feast of tabernacles, kept in this month, was said to be, as it is correctly rendered in the margin, “at the revolution of the year.” (Ex. xxiv. 22.) importing, that at this season the year had revolved, and was beginning anew. So that this feast was the new year’s day, on which the people rejoiced in a grateful remembrance of God’s benefits, and implored his blessing for the future year.—Bagster.

Ver. 34. Feast of Tabernacles.—[This feast was celebrated in commemoration of their dwelling in tents in the wilderness for forty years; and was kept with greater jollity than any of the other festivals. Hence, in the Talmud, it is often called chag, the feast, and by Philo, the greatest of the feasts; and hence also, it became more noticed by the heathen than any other. It is probable, that Cecrops borrowed from it the law which he made in Athens it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein.

37 These are the feasts of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Beside the sabbaths of the LORD, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath.

40 And ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days.

41 And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year. It shall be a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month.

42 Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths:

43 That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

44 And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the LORD.

tabernacles, when the grief was changed into joy, and the fast of atonement for the sacrifices of thanksgiving. This feast was enjoined, Exodus xxiii. 16, and is there called "the feast of ingathering, and of harvest." For seven days the Jews were ordered to dwell in tabernacles, tents, or bowers, in memory of their fathers, who lived in tents in the land of Canaan, and afterwards in the wilderness; and to remind them that they also were pilgrims and strangers in the earth, "as all their fathers were." (Heb. xi. 9-14.)

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1-23. The candlestick and shew-bread.—The blasphemer stoned.—The directions respecting the lamp and the cakes of the shew-bread were given to Moses, Exod. xxvii. 20, 21.; xxv. 30, 31.; and their spiritual meaning pointed out in our exposition of the chapter last quoted, namely, the perpetual light, and the living bread, with which God's temple is now furnished. The twelve loaves, or cakes, had doubtless a reference to the twelve tribes of Israel; and the Jews say that they were made square, each cake containing a peck of fine flour, and that golden reeds were placed between each to admit the air, that they might not moulder. But why are they called shew-bread? The Hebrew name is "Bread of the faces," or, "of the (divine) presence," because set before the presence of God in the holy place: in the Greek, "the bread of proposition;" (Mark ii. 26.; Heb. ix. 2.) and in both Testaments ren-

"that the master of every family should after harvest make a feast for his servants, and eat together with them who had taken pains with him in tilling his grounds,"—Bagster.

Ver. 40. Boughs of goodly trees.—Literally, "Of the fruit of the tree of beauty" meaning, the citron tree. So the Targum explains it, and it is said, that to this day the Jews in London send for citrons for this purpose.—Crit. Rev. See also Parkhurst's Heb. Lex.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 3. Shall Aaron order it.—Several MSS. Hebrew and Samaritan, insert after Aaron, "and his sons," which Dr. Boothroyd therefore inserts into his text.

Ver. 5. Twelve cakes.—By the quantity of flour used, it seems they were the size of peck loaves. According to Maimonides, they were unleavened cakes, baked in square moulds ten handbreadths long, and five broad, so that they extended on each side two handbreadths beyond the table. The Jews add, that they were separated by golden reeds, or half rods, which rested on a sort of fork; but of this we see no occasion. Being removed weekly, they became the food of the priests for the week following, which may account for their being made so large. The frankincense was placed on the loaves, in little golden cups, or spoons.—Ainsworth.

Ver. 11. Blasphemed the name.—[Houbigant and others think that the name which this man blasphemed was the name of his god; a crime which we learn from Porphyry, was common among the Egyptians, when they were disappointed in the object of their prayers. But that hushshem, the name, denotes Jehovah, appears from its being used in the latter part of verse 16 as equi-

3 Without the veil of the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning before the LORD continually: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations.

4 He shall order the lamps upon the pure candlestick before the LORD continually.

5 ¶ And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth-deals shall be in one cake.

6 And thou shalt set them in two rows, six on a row, upon the pure table before the LORD.

7 And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

8 Every sabbath he shall set it in order before the LORD continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant.

9 And it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the LORD made by fire by a perpetual statute.

10 ¶ And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp;

11 And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the LORD, and cursed: and they brought him unto Moses: (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan:)

12 And they put him in ward, that the mind of the LORD might be showed them.

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

14 Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak unto the children of dered by our translators shew-bread, as appearing before God in the holy place.

But the principal topic of this chapter relates to the case of a notorious blasphemer, the son of an Egyptian by an Israelitish woman, who "blasphemed the name"—even that of JEHOVAH, and was therefore ordered by the divine oracle to be stoned without the camp. "No doubt (says Scott) this man was one of the mixed multitude who accompanied Israel out of Egypt; (Exod. xii. 37, 38.) but it is uncertain whether he had ever professed the religion of Israel. It is supposed that, by reason of the dispute betwixt him and an Israelite, he was brought before the magistrates; and the cause being, according to the law of God, decided against him, he blasphemed, or cursed Him, 'before whose tremendous name all heaven adores, and all hell trembles.' By the express command of God himself, all who heard the blasphemy were required to lay their hands on the head of the blasphemer, as solemnly persevering in their testimony, and as devoting him to death, that the guilt of such a crime might not rest on Israel; and avowing that his blood was upon his own head, and that they were clear."

Some consider the phrase, "curseth his God," as applying to idols, equally as to the true God; but it was sinful to name an idol deity, and we believe there is no instance of a law made in protection of idolatry. It is clear that the culprit, in this case, valent to "the name of Jehovah," in the former part. The Jews also frequently use hushshem, for Jehovah; and that it was an ancient custom thus to allude to the deity without mentioning his name appears from inscriptions among the Palmyrenians, on whose marbles we find, "to the blessed name be fear for ever;"—"To the blessed name for ever good and merciful, be fear;"—"To the blessed name for ever be fear," &c. The custom among the Jews of not writing the name of Jehovah would then appear to have originated from some such ancient usage.—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Let all the congregation stone him.—Not in a riotous or tumultuous manner, as the Jews often did in later times; first the witnesses on whose evidence he had been convicted, and afterwards the rest of the congregation. See the instances of Achan, Josh. vii. 24-26.; and Naboth, 1 Kings xxi. 13.

Ver. 15. Curseth his God.—[As the Hebrew word nakav not only signifies to curse or blaspheme, but also to express, or distinguish by name, (Nu. i. 17. 1 Ch. xii. 31. Is. xlii. 2.) hence the Jews at a very early period, understood this law as prohibiting them from uttering the name, JEHOVAH, on any other than sacred occasions. The Septuagint, which was made at least 250 years before Christ, renders it, "Whosoever nameth the name of the Lord, let him die;" from which we see that the Jews at this time were accustomed to pronounce adonay, or Lord, instead of Jehovah; for in place of it the LXX. always put Kyrios. Philo, who lived in the time of Christ, explains the passage, connecting it with the preceding verse, in the following terms: "Strange gods are not to be blasphemed, lest men should be accustomed to Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin.

16 And ° he that blasphemeth the name of the LORD, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the LORD, shall be put to death.

17 ¶ And he that ° killeth any ° man shall surely be put to death.

18 ¶ And he that killeth a ° beast shall make it good; ° beast for beast.

19 And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; ° as he hath done, so shall it be done unto him;

20 Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.

21 And he that killeth a beast, he shall restore it: and he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death.

22 Ye shall have ° one manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for one of your own country: for I am the LORD your God.

23 ¶ And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should bring forth him that had cursed out of the camp, and stone him with stones. And the children of Israel did as the LORD commanded Moses.

was punished, not for blaspheming Molech, or any of the gods of Egypt, but the name of the God of Israel; and such is the law now put on record.

This punishment has often been objected to by the profane, as severe and unreasonable, on the ground that man cannot injure his Maker; but is he, therefore, with impunity to "curse him to his face?" The same plea might in many cases be urged with equal truth against treason and sedition; but are these no crimes, unless accompanied with an assault upon the person of the prince? Would any well-regulated government suffer the chief magistrate to be reviled or cursed, merely because the culprit has not the power to inflict personal injury? Certainly not: how, then, shall the Supreme Governor of the world suffer his name to be treated with contempt and execration? O ye angels! could ye endure the sight? Besides, the very thought supposes an enmity of heart in the blasphemer, who would assassinate his Creator if he had the power. The case has been tried: once Deity became incarnate, and no sooner did he submit himself to the power of men, than they nailed him to the accursed tree!

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—22. The sabbatic year, and year of jubilee.—Of so great importance was the devout rest of the sabbath day considered, that other laws were made in harmony with it, as the sabbatic year, and the year of jubilee. Not only was the seventh day to be a day of rest, but the seventh year was to be a year of rest; and at the end of seven sabbatic years was to be the grand period of the jubilee. As the sabbath was made for man, so was the sabbatic year, that the land should rest by the ground lying fallow; in order to which, an extraordinary fruitful season was ever to precede the year of rest: thus the whole Jewish system was founded upon miracles, and continually appealed to such displays of the divine power in its support. So the learned Dr. Graves remarks, that this law furnishes a strong argument in favour of the divine authority of Moses and his laws. "How incredible is it, that any legislator would have ventured to propose such a law as this, or any people have submitted to receive it, except in consequence of the fullest conviction, on both sides, that a divine authority had dictated this law, and that a peculiar providence would constantly facilitate its execution! . . . Nothing could have produced this conviction but the experience, or the belief, of some such miraculous interposition as the history of the Pentateuch details. The very existence of this law is a standing monument, that when it was given, the Mosaic miracles were fully believed. Now the law was coeval with the witnesses of the miracles themselves."

Some persons have supposed, that the 49th year (as being the seventh sabbatic year) was the year of jubilee; but the contrary is distinctly stated, (ver. 10.) from which it is evident, that both the jubilee and the year preceding were without any harvests, and, therefore, made a miraculous interference on the part of Providence the more necessary. It is not, however, to be inferred that either the year of jubilee, or the sabbatic year preceding, was absolutely unproductive; many things, especially the grapes, would grow spontaneously, and were to be for the support of the servant, and the stranger, and the cattle, who were to feast uncontrolled, while the Israelites themselves were to subsist on the abundance provided in the preceding years. The moral design of these laws was certainly to inculcate, in a certain sense, an equality of rights, and guard against oppression. "Ye shall not oppress one another; . . . for I am the Lord your God."

There is, however, a higher and more spiritual sense intimated in the prophetic writings, in reference to the year of jubilee, and we know to whom the prediction is applied by the evangelist. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, (said the Messiah,) because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound: to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning; the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." In harmony with this reference, it is to be remarked that the jubilee was to be proclaimed (ver. 9.) on the day of the great atonement, as plainly intimating the channel through which alone the liberty and salvation of the gospel is derived.

Parkhurst (Heb. Lex. p. 213.) farther considers it as "a most lively and animating prefiguration of that grand consummation of time, which is to be introduced in like manner by the trumpet of God; when the children and heirs of God shall be delivered from all their forfeitures, and restored to the eternal inheritance allotted to them by their Father, and thenceforth rest from think meanly of the Deity. But if any one, (I do not say blaspheme, for that is not here the question, but) even so much as utter unseasonably the name of the Lord of men and gods, he shall die." This explanation, whether it please us or not, cannot therefore be looked upon as a piece of superstition originating with the Jews, who lived after the destruction of Jerusalem. —BAGSTER.

Ver. 19. So shall it be done unto him.—This is the law called by the Romans Lex talionis, or the law of retaliation, very common among all uncivilized nations. See Exod. xxi. 23—25, and compare Matt. v. 38, 39.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 9. The trumpet of the jubilee.—The Hebrew Jobel is variously derived. Some think it derived from the Arabic word for a ram's horn, the species of trumpet here used. Josephus explains it to mean liberty, but on what authority, is not known; but it is called the "year of liberty," Ezek. xlvii. 17. Others from Yabal, (or Jabel), to bring back, or recover, because all estates now returned to the original owner. But the most general and approved derivation is from Jobel, (or Jubal), a stream, either of water or and approved derivation is from Jobel, (or Jubal), a stream, either of water or of air, and which is used for the lengthened or continued blast of a trumpet, Exod. xix. 13. The trumpets of the Jubilee were probably sounded in lengthened tones throughout all the land of Israel. Compare Josh. vi. 5, 13.

you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In <sup>the</sup> year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 ¶ And if thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye <sup>shall</sup> not oppress one another:

15 According to the number of years after the jubilee, thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt <sup>not</sup> fear thy God: for I am the Lord your God.

18 ¶ Wherefore ye shall <sup>not</sup> do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.

20 And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase:

21 Then I will <sup>not</sup> command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years.

22 And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

23 ¶ The land shall not be sold for ever; for the land is <sup>mine</sup>, for ye are <sup>strangers</sup> and sojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and <sup>he</sup> himself be able to redeem it;

their labours, and be supported in life and happiness by what the field of God should produce."

Ver. 23-55. The laws of redemption.—When the God of Israel delivers laws, he at the same time clearly states the authority on which they are founded. The expression generally is, "I am JEHOVAH," or, "I am the Lord thy God;" here it is more special and particular: "For the LAND is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me." (Ver. 23.) On this all the following laws rest. "The land is mine," therefore it shall not be sold for ever.—Our case is exactly similar to that of the Israelites, and this circumstance should be borne continually in our remembrance. He that said, "Is not this great Babylon which I have built?" heard a voice suddenly from heaven, which said, "O king Nebuchadnezzar, the kingdom is departed from thee," (Dan. iv. 30, 31.) And to the vain fool that boasted of having "gods laid up for many years," God said, "This night shall thy soul be required of thee." We are indeed, "tenants at will," and have not even a lease of our possessions; and this should teach us that we are "strangers and sojourners" upon earth; and to look to Him who is not ashamed to be called our God, because he hath prepared for us a city—"a city which hath foundations, and whose foundations rest on the rock of eternal ages," (Heb. xi. 16; Rev. xxi. 14, &c.)

Ver. 21. Command my blessing.—[As it is here graciously promised, that the sixth year was to bring forth fruits for three years, not merely for two, it is evident, that both the Sabbatical year and the year of Jubilee were distinctly provided for. They were not to sow from the sixth to the eighth year, omitting two seed times; nor reap from the sixth to the ninth, omitting two harvests.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. In a walled city.—[A very proper difference is here made between houses in a city and houses in the country. The former might be redeemed any time in the course of a year; but after that time could not be redeemed, or go out with the Jubilee; the latter might be redeemed at any time; and if not redeemed must go out with the Jubilee. The reason in both cases is sufficiently evident: the house in the city might be built merely for purposes of trade or traffic—the house in the country was built on, or attached to, the 31 But the houses of the villages which have no walls round about them, shall be counted as the fields of the country: they <sup>shall</sup> may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithstanding the <sup>cities</sup> of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if <sup>a</sup> man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the year of jubilee; for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But the <sup>a</sup> field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold, for it is their perpetual possession.

35 ¶ And if thy brother be <sup>b</sup> waxen poor, and <sup>c</sup> fallen in decay with thee; then thou <sup>d</sup> shalt <sup>e</sup> relieve him: yea, though he be a <sup>f</sup> stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no <sup>g</sup> usury of him, or increase; but <sup>h</sup> fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

38 I <sup>am</sup> the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 ¶ And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou

The uncertainty of the present state regards not only life itself, but all its enjoyments: while we are walking with God, as "strangers and sojourners," we are continually dropping some or other of our temporal enjoyments by the way: here an affectionate partner, a Rachel: and there a beloved child, a Joseph: here our possessions, and there our enjoyments; till at length our bodies drop into the grave, and our souls land upon the eternal shores.

"The dear delights we here enjoy,
And fondly call our own,
Are but short favours borrow'd now,
To be repaid anon." Watts.

With the rules and regulations here given, relative to the Jewish rites of redemption, we have no immediate concern. Our Redeemer founds his right to our obedience in the purchase of his blood, and on that ground claims us as his redeemed ones: "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price;" and that price is "the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." (1 Cor. vi. 20. vii. 23; 1 Pet. i. 19.)

We must not omit, however, to notice in this chapter, some very excellent moral precepts, in favour of a principle of benevolence and charity—all but Christian. First, in affording facility of redemption to "a brother waxen poor," who hath been com-inheritance which God had divided to the respective families. It was therefore necessary that the same law should apply to the house as to the inheritance; which necessity did not exist with regard to the house in the city. And, as the house in the city might be purchased for the purpose of trade, it would be very inconvenient for the purchaser, when his business was established, to be obliged to remove.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. The cities of the Levites.—The houses possessed by the Levites in the cities afterwards allotted to them, and the gardens and pastures in the suburbs, were, in fact, their only permanent estate in Israel; and they were therefore under the same law as the land of the other tribes.—Scott.

Ver. 33. If a man purchase, &c.—Margin, "If one of the Levites redeem them." It is hence inferred, that any Levite might redeem the house which another had sold, though not of the same family.

shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant:

40 But <sup>1</sup> as a hired servant, and as a sojourner he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubilee:

41 And then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return.

42 For they are <sup>1</sup> my servants which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; they shall not be <sup>m</sup> sold as bond-men.

43 Thou shalt not rule over him with <sup>n</sup> rigour, but shalt <sup>n</sup> fear thy God.

44 Both thy bond-men, and thy bond-maids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bond-men and bond-maids.

45 Moreover, of the children of the <sup>p</sup> strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession.

46 And ye shall take them as an <sup>q</sup> inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; <sup>r</sup> they shall be your bond-men for ever: but over your brethren the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with <sup>n</sup> rigour.

47 ¶ And if a sojourner or a <sup>t</sup> stranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and <sup>u</sup> sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family:

48 After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or if he be able, he may redeem himself.

50 And he shall reckon with him that bought him, from the year that he was sold to him, unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years, according to the <sup>v</sup> time of a hired servant shall it be with him.

pelled to "sell some (at least) of his possessions," or inheritance, to whom the whole shall revert in the year of jubilee. 2. In case of his needing temporary relief, "thou shalt relieve him," says the law, and take no usury or increase: but "fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee." 3. In case of his being sold by his creditors, (which in some cases was allowed, "Thou shalt not compel him to serve with thee as thy bond-servant; but as a hired servant, and a sojourner he shall be with thee; that is, as one of thine own family enjoying the same comforts; as such he shall serve <sup>u</sup> thee unto the day of jubilee;" and then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and the possession of his fathers. Moreover, if an Israelite be sold to a stranger, "one of his brethren may redeem him; and though it is not expressly said he shall redeem him, yet they held themselves bound to do so, if they were able; therefore, said Nehemiah, subsequent to the captivity, "We after our ability have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen." (Neh. v. 8.) Finally, to enforce these admonitions, in the most tender man-

Ver. 49. He may be redeemed again.—Ainsworth translates this verse so as to make it a command. "After that he is sold, a redemption shall be for him; one of his brethren shall redeem him." This must be allowed to be more literal; yet as the Hebrews, having no subjunctive mood, frequently use the future indicative in its stead, it is so rendered, not only in ours, but in most other versions.

Ver. 50. Price of his sale.—[This was a very equitable law, both to the sojourner to whom the man was sold, and to the Israelite who had been sold. The Israelite might redeem himself, or one of his kindred might redeem him; but this must not be done to the prejudice of his master. They were therefore to reckon the years <sup>1</sup> he must have served, from that time till the jubilee; and then taking the current wages of a servant, per year, at that time, multiply the remaining years by this sum, and the aggregate was to be given to his master for his redemption. The Jews hold, that the kindred of such a person were bound, if in their power, to redeem him, lest he should be swallowed up among the heathen; and we find (Neh. v. 8.) that this was done by the Jews on their return from the Babylonish captivity.]—Bagster.

Ver. 52. Year of jubilee.—[The jubilee was a wonderful institution, and of great service to the religion, freedom, and independence, of the Hebrews. It was calculated to prevent the rich from oppressing the poor, and reducing 51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he shall give again the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption.

53 And as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him: and the other shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight.

54 And if he be not <sup>w</sup> redeemed in these years, then he shall go out in the year of jubilee, both he, and his children with him.

12 And I will <sup>a</sup> walk among you, and <sup>a</sup> will be your God, and ye shall be my people.

13 I <sup>a</sup> am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bond-men, and I have <sup>a</sup> broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 ¶ But <sup>a</sup> if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments;

25 And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall <sup>a</sup> avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the <sup>a</sup> pestilence among you: and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when I have <sup>b</sup> broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye shall eat and <sup>a</sup> not be satisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me;

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

29 And ye shall <sup>a</sup> eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

30 And I will <sup>a</sup> destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall <sup>a</sup> abhor you.

31 And I will make your <sup>a</sup> cities waste, and bring your <sup>a</sup> sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not <sup>a</sup> smell the savour of your sweet odours.

32 And I will bring the <sup>a</sup> land into desolation: and your enemies which dwell therein shall be <sup>a</sup> astonished at it.

33 And I will <sup>a</sup> scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then shall the <sup>a</sup> land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you, I will send a <sup>a</sup> faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the <sup>a</sup> sound of a <sup>a</sup> shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall, when none pursueth.

38 And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

in this world." This judicious remark premised, we may now notice some of these promises, of which the chain before us is linked together in a manner very beautiful. "If ye walk in my statutes," &c. "then will I give you rain in due season." It is well known that in Judea the rains are periodical, the early and the latter rain: the former, about October, lasts but for a few days, though showers continue occasionally through the winter. The latter rains occur about our April, and the barley harvest immediately follows. It must be remembered, that the civil year, which begins in September, is here referred to; consequently, the autumnal rains are before those of spring; and these periodical rains were as important to Judea, as was the overflowing of the Nile to Egypt. When these rains were regular and moderate, the land yielded her increase, and the trees (especially the vines) their fruit. On the following verse, Dr.

Ver. 10. And ye shall eat old store.—"This promise intimated, that the people ought not, and would not, be disposed to build new barns, (like the fool in the Gospel,) to hoard their plenty; but that they would bring it forth to make room for the new; and so dispose of it at a low price, or freely, to the poor and needy, having a liberal heart, as well as an abundant provision."—Scott.

Ver. 26. Ten women. &c.—"An oven was designed only to serve a single family, and to bake for them no more than the bread of one day. This usage still continues in some places, and gives peculiar force to these words."—Harmer.

Ver. 29. Ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, &c.—This awful threatening was literally fulfilled in several melancholy instances; see 2 Kings vi. 28, 29; Lam. iv. 10. This was literally fulfilled at the siege of Jerusalem. Josephus gives a dreadful detail respecting a woman named Mary, who, in the extremity of the famine, during the siege, killed her sucking child, roasted, and had eaten part of it when discovered by the soldiers!—Bagster.

Ver. 30. High places.—See 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3.—Carcasses of your idols.—The word here used for idols, differs from that used ver. 1. and is still more

W. Dodd remarks, "This is a nervous and beautiful promise of such entire plenty of corn and wine, that before they could have reaped and threshed out their corn, the vintage should be ready; and before they could have pressed out their wine, it would be time to sow again." The prophet Amos (chap. ix. 13.) expresses the same blessing in much the same manner: "The ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed." This is followed by farther promises of peace and plenty, victory and independence, the greatest of all temporal blessings, in order to encourage their obedience.

Ver. 14—46. Threatenings against the disobedient.—On the other hand, disobedience, which is well defined as "walking contrary to God," is threatened with a host of evils, which form an awful reverse of the preceding. "I will appoint over you (says the Lord) Terror, Consumption, and the burning Ague, contemptible: it means literally, "gods of dung;" i. e. filthy, obscene idols—Parkyn's Heb. Lex.

Ver. 34. Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths.—This Houbigant observes to be an historical truth. "From Saul to the Babylonish captivity, were numbered about four hundred and ninety years, during which period, there were seventy sabbaths of years; for 7 multiplied by 70, make 490. Now, the Babylonish captivity lasted seventy years, and during that time the land of Israel rested. Therefore the land rested just as many years, in the Babylonish captivity, as it should have rested sabbaths, if the Jews had observed the law relative to the sabbaths of the land." This is a most remarkable fact, and deserves to be particularly noticed, as a most literal fulfilment of the promise.

Ver. 38. The land of your enemies shall eat you up.—Does this refer to the total loss of the ten tribes? These are so completely swallowed up in some enemies' land, that nothing concerning their existence, or place of residence remains, but mere conjecture.—Dr. Clarke.

10 ¶ And if his offering be of the flocks, namely, of the sheep, or of the goats, for a burnt-sacrifice; he shall bring it a male without blemish.

11 And he shall kill it on the side of the altar: northward before the LORD: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall sprinkle his blood round about upon the altar:

12 And he shall cut it into his pieces, with his head and his fat: and the priest shall lay them in order on the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar:

13 But he shall wash the inwards and the legs with water: and the priest shall bring it all, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 And if the burnt-sacrifice for his offering to the LORD be of fowls, then he shall bring his offering of <sup>1</sup> turtle-doves, or of young pigeons.

15 And the priest shall bring it unto the altar, and <sup>2</sup> wring off his head, and burn it on the altar: and the blood thereof shall be wrung out at the side of the altar:

with all the frankincense thereof, and the priest shall <sup>b</sup> burn the memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD:

3 And the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

4 ¶ And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baken in the oven, it shall be unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened <sup>c</sup> wafers anointed with oil.

5 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering <sup>d</sup> baken in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil.

6 Thou shalt part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon: it is a meat-offering.

7 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken in the frying-pan, it shall be made of fine flour with oil.

8 And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the LORD: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar.

9 And the priest shall take from the meat-offering a <sup>e</sup> memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

11 No meat-offering which ye shall bring unto the LORD shall be made with <sup>f</sup> leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the LORD made by fire.

12 ¶ As for the oblation of the <sup>g</sup> first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the LORD: but they shall <sup>h</sup> not be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour.

13 ¶ And every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with <sup>i</sup> salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

14 And if thou offer a meat-offering of thy first-fruits unto the LORD, thou shalt offer for as more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices." (Mark ch. 33.)

CHAP. II. Ver. 1-16. The various meat-offerings.—The changes in language which time produces affect even the sense of Scripture; for meat formerly signified food in general; and the meat-offering was usually, if not always, of meal, corn, or bread, as we find in this chapter, and generally mixed up with oil and salt; but not with leaven, nor honey. These offerings seem chiefly intended to acknowledge the goodness of divine providence, in favouring us with corn and oil, and other productions of the earth. In this view, even Cain brought his mincha, or meat-offering, to God, though he brought not, as Abel did, an animal sacrifice. (See on Gen. iv. 4.) The meat-offerings, (or oblations) under the law, however, pointed to Christ, as well as the burnt-offerings, though in a different point of view; namely, as "the bread of God which came down from heaven;" and the oil and frankincense joined with it, may well remind us, that "he offered himself through the Eternal Spirit," whereof oil is the acknowledged emblem, as is frankincense of the "prayers and supplications, which, with strong crying and tears," he offered unto God in the days of his flesh and passion. (Heb. v. 7; ix. 14.) The "salt of the covenant," added to these offerings, was a solemn pledge of friendship on the part of God, and fidelity on the part of man.

Henry considers these oblations as a kind of quit-rent, by which we testify our dependance upon God, who giveth to all life, and breath, and food convenient. They that would eat and drink to his glory, must consecrate some of their meat and drink

Ver. 10. Burnt-sacrifice.—Olah, a burnt-offering, from alah, to ascend, because this offering ascended, as it were, to God in flame and smoke, being wholly consumed; for which reason it is called in the Septuagint a whole burnt-offering. This was the most important of all the sacrifices; and no part of it was eaten either by the priest or the offerer, but the whole offered to God, as we see sufficiently shown by learned men, that almost every nation of the earth, in every age, had their burnt-offerings, from the persuasion that there was no other way to appease the incensed gods; and they even offered human sacrifices, because they imagined, as Cesar expresses it, that life was necessary to redeem life, and that the gods would be satisfied with nothing less.—Bugster.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. A meat-offering of fine flour.—"Meat" originally meant "food or viaticals." Gothic, Mate; Saxon, Methe. Johnson quotes Shakspeare as using the word in this general sense; and an old English author, (Tusser) as using the adjective, meated, in the sense of fed, or foddered. "Speaking of oxen and horses, he says, 'well meated and used.'" The same appears from the terms sweetmeats, and whitemeats, the latter meaning bread and milk, &c.—Minshew's Guide, &c. and Johnson's Dict. So, according to Minshew, and the best Lexicographers, the Hebrew Mincha, "a meat-offering," was properly of things without life, as flour, cakes, wafers, &c. and might be better called (he thinks) a wheat-offering. See note on Gen. iv. 4. The heathen copied these, and most of the Jewish forms of sacrifice. See Orient. Cust. No. 701, 702.

Ver. 2. A handful of flour only was to be burnt with the frankincense; the remainder was to be the priest's.

Ver. 4, 5. Baken in the oven . . . in a pan.—Margin, "On a flat plate." All these were probably heated by the fire of the altar. In the East, they have various contrivances for this purpose. Sometimes the cakes are spread on the outside of a pan, and fire put within at the bottom; sometimes the pan is placed on the fire, and the cake spread on the inside. The word used by the Arabs for this kind of oven is tenur, the very word here used. Flat stones, and plates of iron and copper, are likewise employed for the same purpose.—Oriental Customs, No. 49. Oriental Literature, No. 242. See also Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 13. The salt of the covenant.—Salt was as generally used in the sacrifices of the heathen as the Jews, and perhaps in the patriarchal times it was the established emblem of friendship and fidelity, as it still is in the East. Baron Du Tott, speaking of a native who was taking leave, and promised to return, he mentions, that when they were half way down stairs, he asked for a piece of bread and salt; which being immediately brought, putting the salt upon the bread, "he ate with a devout gravity," (says the Baron) assuring me that I might now rely on him."—Orient. Cust. No. 50.

Ver. 14. Green ears of corn dried.—Offerings of different kinds of grain, flour, bread, fruits, &c. are the most ancient among the heathen nations; probably borrowed from the practice of the true worshippers of God. Ovid intimates, that these gratitude-offerings originated with agriculture:—"In the most ancient times men lived by rapine and hunting; for the sword was con- quered more honourable than the plough; but when they sowed their fields, they dedicated the first-fruits of their harvest to Ceres, to whom the ancients attributed the art of agriculture, and to whom burnt-offerings of corn were made, according to immemorial usages." Pliny observes, that "Numa taught the Romans to offer fruits to the gods, and to make supplications before them, bringing salt cakes and parched corn; as grain in this state was deemed most wholesome." And it is worthy of remark, that he farther observes, the an- cient Romans considered "no grain as pure or proper for divine service that had not been previously parched."—Bugster. Parched corn, is a species of food still in use among the poor in Palestine and Egypt. The God of Israel is here represented as partaking with the poor, in the humblest of their repasts.

the meat-offering of thy first-fruits green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears.

15 And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering.

16 And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

CHAPTER III.

1 The peace-offering of the herd, 6 of the flock, 7 either a lamb, 12 or a goat.

AND if his oblation be a sacrifice of a peace-offering, if he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female, he shall offer it without blemish before the LORD.

2 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons the priests shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about.

3 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering an offering made by fire unto the LORD: the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

5 And Aaron's sons shall burn it on the altar, upon the burnt-sacrifice, which is upon the wood that is on the fire: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And if his offering for a sacrifice of peace-offering unto the LORD be of the flock, male or female, he shall offer it without blemish.

7 If he offer a lamb for his offering, then shall he offer it before the LORD.

8 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons shall sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar.

9 And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering an offering made by fire unto the LORD: the fat thereof, and the whole rump, it shall he take off hard by the backbone; and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

10 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away;

11 And the priest shall burn it upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire unto the LORD.

12 ¶ And if his offering be a goat, then he shall offer it before the LORD.

13 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of it, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and the sons of Aaron shall sprinkle the blood thereof upon the altar round about.

14 And he shall offer thereof his offering, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

15 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away;

16 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire for a sweet savour: all the fat is the LORD'S.

17 It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither fat nor blood.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The sin-offering of ignorance: 3 for the priest: 13 for the congregation: 22 for the ruler: 27 for any of the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them:

3 If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people; then let him bring for his sin which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto the LORD for a sin-offering.

to his service. "They that now, with a charitable heart, deal out their bread to the hungry, and provide for the necessities of those destitute of daily food," and that, when they "eat the fat and drink the sweet themselves, send portions for them for whom nothing is prepared; these, if accompanied with proper motives, offer unto God an acceptable meat-offering."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1-17. The law of peace-offerings.—These were voluntary oblations, either in return for blessings received, or in supplication of mercies desired. The offerer laid his hand upon the sacrifice, as in other cases, for all the forms of worship appointed by God begin with the confession of sins: we can approach God only as sinners, and, as sinners, only through faith in the great atonement. These peace-offerings (which for that reason did not include pigeons) were to be divided into three parts: the first, to implore peace with God; the second was to be eaten by the offerer, as implying peace derived in his own conscience; and the third given to the priest, as the mediator and peace-maker in this concern. "Christ is our peace, who, by his blood, hath made both one, (that is, reconciled God and man,) and broken down the wall of partition" erected by our sins. (Ephes. ii. 14, 15.)

The chapter concludes with a prohibition against eating fat, or blood; the latter has been already noticed, and is often repeated, and strictly enjoined; but it is thought the former is to be understood with some limitation, as the fat could not entirely be separated from the lean: but it was prohibited in masses, and the richest parts, as the fat of the kidneys and the tail, which, in the Eastern sheep, is so rich that it can only be eaten as mixed up with lean meat; and might be forbidden on the same principle as swine's flesh, which is confessedly unhealthy in hot countries, and to persons subject to cutaneous diseases, as the Jews notoriously were. The offering of these parts, the richest and the best, to God, might also be designed to inculcate this important moral lesson, that, as we owe every thing to God, we ought to render to him the first and best of our services or possessions. It was upon this principle that the law of the first-born and of the first-fruits was founded. So under the New Testament, St. Paul exhorts Christians—"I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." (Rom. xii. 1.)

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1-35. Sin-offering of ignorance.—"The sin-offering (says Scott) seem to have been appointed for such violations of express prohibitions, when ignorantly and heedlessly fallen into, (especially in those things which relate to the worship of God,) as if committed presumptuously, were punishable with death." So the Hebrew Doctors. It is a popular notion, that ignorance wholly excuses sin; but an important distinction

CHAP. III. Ver. 9. The whole rump.—On the tails of the Eastern sheep, see note on Exod. xxix. 22.—[To what has already been said on the tails of Eastern sheep, we may add the testimony of Ludolf, who states that they are so very large, some of them weighing from twelve to fourteen pounds, "that the owners are obliged to tie a little cart behind them, whereupon they put the tail of the sheep, as well for the convenience of carriage, and to ease the poor creatures, as to preserve the wool from dirt, and the tail from being torn among the bushes and stones." The same is testified by Dr. Russel, who says, "In some other places where they feed in the fields, the shepherds are obliged to fix a piece of thin board to the underpart of the tail, to prevent its being torn by bushes, thistles, &c., as it is not covered underneath with thick wool, like the upper part; and some have small wheels to facilitate the dragging of the board after them."—Bogster.

Ver. 11. It is the food of the offering.—That is, it fed the fire upon the altar.

Ver. 17. Neither fat nor blood.—On the latter, see Exposition of Gen. ix and note on ver. 4. In support of what is said in the Exposition respecting fat, see Michaelis' Commentaries on the Mosaic Laws, (by Smith.) [That is, neither the blood which is contained in the larger veins and arteries, nor the fat or suet which is within the animal, which exists in a separate or unmixed state, as the omentum or caul, the fat of the mesentery, or fatty part of the substance which connects the convolutions of the alimentary canal or small intestines, the fat of the kidneys, and whatever else of the internal fat was easily separable, together with the whole of the tail already described; for the blood which assumes the form of gravy, and the fat which is intermixed with the other flesh, might be eaten. This law not only related to the sacrifices, but to all the cattle which the Israelites slaughtered for food.]—Bogster.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. If a soul sin.—The word soul is here, as frequently, used for person. See ver. 27.

4 And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the LORD.

5 And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation:

6 And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before the LORD, before the vail of the sanctuary.

7 And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the LORD, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And he shall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the sin-offering; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards,

9 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away,

10 As it was taken off from the bullock of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of the burnt-offering.

11 And the skin of the bullock, and all his flesh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung;

12 Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn him on the wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall he be burnt.

13 ¶ And if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the LORD concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty;

14 When the sin which they have sinned against it is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the LORD: and the bullock shall be killed before the LORD.

16 And the priest that is anointed shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation:

17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, even before the vail.

18 And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the LORD, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

21 And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

22 ¶ When a ruler hath sinned, and done somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD his God, concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty;

24 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

25 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, should here be made between that ignorance which arises from the total want of means of information, and that which arises from the neglect of those means; the one is unavoidable, the other culpable. If we have the means of knowing the divine will, and neglect to employ them, we have no excuse. If the Bible be put into the hands of any man who cannot read, nor has any means of learning, he is an object of pity rather than blame; but if he can read, or has the means of learning, but neglects or despises them, then is his ignorance inexcusable. This distinction applies particularly to the case of the Israelites. At this early period few could read, and fewer still could have access to the tablets of the law: this, therefore, was a merciful provision in favour of those who wished to know and to do the will of God, but whose means of information were scanty and precarious.

The sins for which these sacrifices were appointed are all supposed to be overt acts, for it were endless to bring sacrifices for every sinful thought; and they included sins of omission and commission, both which are chargeable upon us all; for we have "done that which we ought not to have done, and left undone that which we ought to have done; and there is no health in us."

These offerings are also adapted to the different classes of offenders. The high priest (supposed to be meant by the priest that was anointed) was to offer a bullock, the same as for the whole congregation: for "the priest's life should keep (preserve) knowledge," (Malachi ii. 17.) and, therefore, his ignorance was more culpable than that of a ruler, or any other individual, from whom only a kid or lamb was required. This establishes the important fact, that our guilt is in proportion to our means of knowledge.

The inspired author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, in referring to this chapter, more than once directs us to the "Great Apostle and High Priest of our profession, who needed not daily," like the Jewish high priests, to "offer up first for his own sins, and then for the people's;" for as to himself, "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners;" and as to offering for others "daily," neither was that necessary, for he "offered up himself once for all," when "he suffered without the gate." (Heb. vii. 26, 27; xiii. 12.)

Ver. 6. Seven times.—[The number seven is what is called a number of perfection among the Hebrews; and is often used to denote the completion, fullness, or perfection of a thing. It was much esteemed even among the heathen, and deemed the most efficacious in religious actions. Thus Apuleius speaks of dipping the head seven times in the sea for purification; because the divine Pythagoras taught this to be above all others the most proper in religion.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. And the skin.—"The skin and the flesh of the sin-offerings in general, were the perquisites of the priests, (chap. vii. 7, 8, x. 16, 17, &c.) but when the high priest offered for himself, or for the congregation, the whole was burnt."—Scott.

Ver. 12. Without the camp.—[Heb. to without the camp.—This was intended, figuratively, to express the sinfulness of this sin, and the availability of the atonement. The sacrifice, as having the sin of the priest transferred from himself to it, by his confession and imposition of hands, was become unclean and abominable, and was carried, as it were, out of God's sight; and thus its own offensiveness was removed, with the sin of the person in whose behalf it was offered. ch. xiii. 46.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Whole congregation.—[This probably refers to some oversight in acts of religious worship, or to some transgression of the letter of the law, which arose out of the peculiar circumstances in which they were then found. as in the case mentioned in 1 Sam. xiv. 32. The sacrifices and rites in this case were the same as in the preceding; only here the elders laid their hands on the head of the victim, in the name of all the congregation.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Pour the blood.—[The reason for pouring out the blood, which is so constantly and strictly required by the law, was, according to Maimonides, in opposition to an idolatrous custom of the ancient Zabi, who "were accustomed to eat of the blood of their sacrifices, because they imagined this to be the food of their gods, with whom they thought they had such communion, by eating their meat, that they revealed to them future things.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Ruler hath sinned.—[Under the term nasi, that is, one preferred or elevated above others, from nasa, to exalt, it is probable that any person is meant who held any kind of political dignity among the people; and it evidently means the head of a tribe in Nu. i. 4, 16, vii. 2. But the Rabbins generally understand it of the prince of the great sanhedrin, whom, when they were under the regal form of government, was the king. A kid of the goats was the sacrifice in this case; and the rites were nearly the same as in the preceding, only the fat was burnt as that of the peace-offering. Ver. 26.]—Bagster.

and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as the fat of the <sup>a</sup> sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall make an <sup>y</sup> atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 ¶ And if <sup>z</sup> any one of the <sup>a</sup> common people <sup>b</sup> sin through ignorance, while he doeth somewhat against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be <sup>c</sup> done, and be guilty;

28 Or if his sin which he hath sinned <sup>d</sup> come to his knowledge: then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

29 And he shall lay his hand <sup>e</sup> upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay the sin-offering in the place of the burnt-offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

31 And he shall take away all the fat <sup>f</sup> thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar for a <sup>g</sup> sweet savour unto the Lord; and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring it a <sup>h</sup> female without blemish.

33 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay it for a sin-offering in the place where they kill the burnt-offering.

34 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar:

35 And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the sacrifice of the peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn them upon the altar, according to the <sup>i</sup> offerings made by fire unto the Lord: and the priest shall make an <sup>j</sup> atonement for his sin that he hath committed, and it shall be forgiven him.

CHAPTER V.

1 He that sinneth in concealing his knowledge, 2 in touching an unclean thing, 4 or in making an oath. 14 The trespass-offering in sacrilege, 17 and in sins of ignorance.

AND if a soul <sup>a</sup> sin, and hear the voice of <sup>b</sup> swearing, and <sup>c</sup> is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he shall <sup>d</sup> bear his iniquity.

2 ¶ Or if a soul touch any <sup>e</sup> unclean thing, whether it be a carcass of an unclean beast, or a carcass of unclean cattle, or the carcass of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he also shall be unclean, and <sup>f</sup> guilty.

3 Or if he <sup>g</sup> touch the uncleanness of man, whatsoever uncleanness it be that a man shall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; <sup>h</sup> when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty.

4 ¶ Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his <sup>i</sup> lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.

5 And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall <sup>j</sup> confess that he hath sinned in that thing:

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

7 ¶ And if he be not <sup>k</sup> able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the Lord; one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and <sup>l</sup> wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder:

9 And he shall <sup>m</sup> sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the <sup>n</sup> manner: and the CHAP. V. and VI. to Ver. 7. The law of the trespass-offering.—Scott, who appears to have considered these laws with great attention, and explains them with great judgment, thus distinguishes between the sin-offering and trespass-offering:—"In general, neither of them were voluntary oblations, as the peace-offerings, and many of the burnt-offerings, were: but some of the sin-offerings were appointed at stated seasons, and others were required in particular cases, while all the trespass-offerings were occasional. The sin-offering seems to have been (for the expiation of offences committed in matters of religion, from a mistake or inadvertency respecting the law. But the trespass-offerings were required for the casual deviations from the ritual law, when known, through inattention or surprise; or for crimes committed against the moral precepts, which implied injustice to men." The first case is of a moral nature; it is that of a witness, who being adjured to speak the truth, conceals or omits a part of it. Thus the high priest adjured our Saviour; and he, who had hitherto tenaciously held his peace, now spake out—"I am what thou hast said;" Matt. xxvi. 63, 64.) whereas to have continued silent, would have constituted the trespass here mentioned. The two next cases are of ceremonial uncleanness; but the following (ver. 5.) seems to relate to rash vows and inconsiderate oaths, which may be forgotten, and "are hidden from a man" by failure of his memory: "when he knoweth of it," that is, "when he recollects it, then he shall confess and bring his trespass-offering, a lamb; or if not able to do that, two pigeons; or if it be at a time when pigeons are scarce and dear, then an offering of fine flour, as specified."

This seems sufficient to explain the nature of the offences here meant, and to show from what a heavy yoke the Jews were delivered, who embraced the gospel. Let us "stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free; and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." (Gal. v. 1.)

We add to this the first seven verses of the sixth chapter, partly because they belong to the same subject, and partly because they are added to it in the best editions of the Hebrew Bible. They relate to two cases of fraud and falsehood. The one is, that of dishonestly withholding any article intrusted to our care; and the other, appropriating to our own use the lost goods of our neighbour, which we may have accidentally found. The former admits of no palliation; but the latter is by some considered justifiable, though not by the law of God. (Exod. xxiii. 4. Deut. xxii. 2.) Nor is it consistent with the practice of the wiser heathen. One of Solon's laws is, "Take not up what you laid not down;" and the Roman lawyers held, that he who found any property, and applied it to his own use, (at least without due inquiry,) was a thief.

Ver. 27. Common people.—[Heb. People of the land.—Am haaretz; that is, any individual who was not a priest, king, or ruler, among the people; an ordinary person; any of these having transgressed, was obliged to bring a lamb or kid, the ceremonies being nearly the same as in the preceding cases.]—Bagster.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Voice of swearing.—[Kol alah, rather, "the voice of adjuration," for this does not relate to the duty of informing against a common swearer, but to the case of a person who, being adjured by the civil magistrate to answer upon oath, refuses to declare what he knows upon the subject—such a one shall bear his iniquity—shall be considered as guilty in the sight of God of the transgression which he has endeavoured to conceal, and must expect to be punished for hiding the iniquity with which he was acquainted. A similar law anciently existed in other countries. Thus Plato says, that he who knew of a crime, and did not prosecute the person who committed it, let him be liable to the same punishment.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. If a soul swear.—[This relates to rash oaths or vows, which a man was afterwards unable, or which it would have been sinful, to perform.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Trespass-offering.—[It is remarkable, that in this and the following verse, the sacrifice offered is indifferently called asham, a trespass-offering and chattath, a sin-offering; yet these differ in several respects. Sin-offerings were sometimes offered for the whole congregation; trespass-offerings never, but only for particular persons. Bullocks were sometimes used for sin-offerings, never for trespass-offerings. The blood of the sin-offerings was put on the horns of the altar, that of the trespass-offerings was only sprinkled round the bottom of the altar. The sin-offering seems to have been for the expiation of offences committed in matters of religion, from a mistake or inadvertency respecting the law; but the trespass-offering was required for the casual deviations from the ritual law, when well known, or for crimes against moral precepts, implying injustice to man.]—Bagster.

for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it, unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be baken with leaven. I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire, it is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it. It shall be a statute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

22 And the priest of his sons that is anointed in his stead shall offer it: It is a statute for ever unto the LORD; it shall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

24 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is most holy.

26 The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

29 All the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy.

30 And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The law of the trespass-offering, 11 and of the peace-offerings: 22 of the fat, 26 and the blood, are forbidden.

LIKEWISE this is the law of the trespass offering: it is most holy.

2 In the place where they kill the burnt-offering shall they kill the trespass-offering: and the blood thereof shall he sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away:

5 And the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a trespass-offering.

6 Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy.

7 As the sin-offering is, so is the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the flying-pan, and in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 ¶ And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the LORD.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Beside the cakes, he shall offer for his offering leavened bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for a heave-offering unto the LORD, and it shall be the priest's that sprinkled the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten the ment, he would not have "spared" from his bosom "his only begotten Son." Man having sinned,

"He, with his whole posterity, must die; Die he, or justice must; unless for him Some other able, and as willing, pay The rigid satisfaction, death for death."—Milton.

The perpetual burning of the sacrificial fire, therefore, was to represent the perpetual anger of God against sin; and the daily burnt-offerings being consumed, as well as the fat, upon the altar, there could nothing fall to the share of the priest but the skin; which must have been very valuable, as they were used as mattresses (ch. xv. 17.) and probably as carpets to sit upon in the day, as they are still used by some of the inhabitants and dervishes of the East. (Harmer, Observat.) It seems probable, as Ep. Patrick remarks, that Adam himself offered the first sacrifice, and had the skin given him by God, to make garments for him and his wife, in conformity with which, the priests ever after had the skin of the whole burnt-offerings for their portion. The same custom prevailed in after times among the Gentiles, whose priests employed them to a superstitious purpose, by lying upon them in their temples, in hopes of having future things revealed to them in their dreams. The same superstition prevails to the present day in the Highlands of Scotland.—Bagster.

Ver. 16. With unleavened bread.—More literally, "Unleavened it shall be eaten." So the LXX.; i. e. no leaven shall be put to it.

Ver. 18. Every one that toucheth them shall be holy.—That is, no person must touch them that is not "holy;" meaning, pure from any ceremonial defilement. The LXX. here, and elsewhere, render it, "Whosoever toucheth them, shall be sanctified;" i. e. if defiled, says Chazakunt, "He shall purify himself before he touch them."—Ainsworth.

Ver. 20. Offering of Aaron.—This oblation, which the Jews call a mincha of initiation, seems to have been required of the high priest alone "on the day in which he was anointed," and from that time, every morning and evening, as long as he continued in office, and then in like manner of his successor; for, by "the sons of Aaron," may be understood his descendants and successors in the high priesthood, in their generations. —Bagster.

Ver. 23. Wholly burnt.—The meat-offering of the people was eaten by the sinner, who typically bore and expiated their sins; but as no priest, being a sinner, could make atonement for himself, his meat-offering must not be eaten, but wholly burnt on the altar, which was a typical transfer of his guilt to the great antitype who actually bore and expiated it. —Bagster.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 8 The priest shall have the skin.—[All the flesh of the sacrifices all pointed to that one atonement, which alone could "make an end of sin." (Dan. ix. 24.)

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—38. The law of the trespass-offering.—This being little more than a repetition of the directions in chap. v., and the directions respecting "the peace-offerings" a repetition of chap. iii., we refer to the exposition and notes of those chapters. These repetitions may serve to show how carefully and minutely the Jews preserved every fragment of the divine burnt-offerings being consumed, as well as the fat, upon the altar, there could nothing fall to the share of the priest but the skin; which must have been very valuable, as they were used as mattresses (ch. xv. 17.) and probably as carpets to sit upon in the day, as they are still used by some of the inhabitants and dervishes of the East. (Harmer, Observat.) It seems probable, as Ep. Patrick remarks, that Adam himself offered the first sacrifice, and had the skin given him by God, to make garments for him and his wife, in conformity with which, the priests ever after had the skin of the whole burnt-offerings for their portion. The same custom prevailed in after times among the Gentiles, whose priests employed them to a superstitious purpose, by lying upon them in their temples, in hopes of having future things revealed to them in their dreams. The same superstition prevails to the present day in the Highlands of Scotland.—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Until morning.—[Because, in such a hot country, it was apt to putrify; and, as it was considered as holy, it would have been very improper to expose it to putrefaction. Harmer supposes, that this law rather refers to the custom of drying flesh, that had been devoted to a religious purpose, which is practised among the Mohammedans at the present day, on their pilgrimages to Mecca. "It would not have suited," he observes, "the genius of the Mosaic dispensation, to have allowed them to have dried the flesh of their peace-offerings, whether in thanksgiving, in consequence of a vow, or merely voluntary, and have afterwards eaten the flesh very commonly in a same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten:

17 But the remainder of the <sup>m</sup> flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an <sup>a</sup> abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the LORD, <sup>o</sup> having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the soul that shall <sup>p</sup> touch any unclean thing, as the <sup>q</sup> uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any <sup>r</sup> abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that soul shall be <sup>s</sup> cut off from his people.

22 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the <sup>t</sup> beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in no <sup>u</sup> wise eat of it.

25 For <sup>v</sup> whosever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, ye shall eat no manner of <sup>w</sup> blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying,

He that offereth the sacrifice of his <sup>w</sup> peace-offerings unto the LORD, shall bring his oblation unto the LORD of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands <sup>x</sup> shall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a <sup>y</sup> wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.

32 And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the <sup>z</sup> priest for a heave-offering of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 ¶ This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office;

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he <sup>a</sup> anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations.

37 This is the <sup>b</sup> law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the <sup>c</sup> trespass-offering, and of the consecrations, and of <sup>d</sup> the sacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the LORD commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Moses consecrated Aaron and his sons: 14 their sin-offering: 18 their burnt-offering: 22 the ram of consecration: 31 the place and time of their consecration.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Take <sup>a</sup> Aaron and his sons with him, and <sup>b</sup> the garments, and <sup>c</sup> the anointing oil, and a bullock for the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread;

3 And gather thou all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And Moses did as the LORD commanded law, in which many things might be important to them, of which we cannot see the use, nor, perhaps, the meaning. What is said of the wave-offering, and the heave-offering, will be found anticipated in Exod. xxix. 27.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—36. Consecration of Aaron.—Surely this was intended to lead the people to expect a nobler priesthood, better sacrifices, and a more effectual atonement and intercession: and we must be blind indeed, yea, willingly ignorant, if it do not teach us, that nothing can atone for sin, or render a sinner accepted of God, but the righteousness, blood, and intercession of the holy Jesus, our great High-Priest; which are always accompanied with his sanctifying grace poured into every believer's heart.—Doubtless, when Aaron offered his sin-offering, he would remember, with mixed humiliation, admiration, and gratitude, his recent transgression in making the golden calf, and the Lord's forgiveness of it; and would acknowledge that he deserved himself to be made a sacrifice to offended justice with those who perished, instead of being appointed to so honourable an office. This would teach him lowliness of mind, and compassion and tenderness to other poor sinners, seeing "he himself was so compassed with infirmity." Thus was "boasting excluded;" the whole glory given to God, and a preparation made for Aaron's properly bearing the honour of the priesthood, and performing its duties. In like manner, our God prepares his true ministers for their office: he teaches them the knowledge of him and of themselves; he convinces them of their guilt and sinfulness, and brings them to a simple dependence on Christ for every thing sparing manner, or communicated only some small portion of it to their particular friends: their offerings were to be eaten, on the contrary, with festivity, communicated to their friends with liberality, and bestowed on the poor with great generosity, that they might partake with them on these sacred repasts with joy before the Lord."—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Uncleanness of man, is here put for "man of uncleanness."—Atinworth.—Unclean beast.—Perhaps the meaning is, any man or beast with unclean sores, as leprosy, &c.

Ver. 25. Fat of ox, &c.—[Any other fat they might eat; but the fat of these was sacred, because they were the only animals which were offered in sacrifice, though many others ranked among the clean animals as well as these. But it is probable, that this prohibition is to be understood of these animals when offered in sacrifice, and then only in reference to the inward fat, described in v. 4. Of the fat in any other circumstances, it cannot be intended, as it was one of the special blessings which God gave to his people.—] But, as fat, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, was the provision which he graciously bestowed on his followers. (See De. xxxiii. 12—14.)

Ver. 28. Eat no manner of blood.—[The prohibition of the fat or suet, which was restricted to animals offered in sacrifice, taught reverence to the altar and ordinances of God; but that of blood, which was extended to all land animals, had especial respect to the atoning blood of the sacrifice, and of the great antetype which the sacrifice prefigured.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. Shall cut off, &c.—[Shall be excommunicated or cut off from the people of God, and so deprived of any part of their inheritance or of their blessings.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 2. Take Aaron and his sons.—The directions for this consecration were given Exod. xviii. and xxix. and are there commented on. This chapter relates the fulfilment of what was there enjoined. Carmet remarks, that the high priest among the Romans was consecrated with many of the same ceremonies; only, instead of touching various parts of his body with blood, he was placed under a floor of planks, and the blood ran through, until he was completely covered with it; and then, ascending to the people, he was hailed as the Pontifex Maximus, or great high priest. The whole was poetically described by Aurelius Prudentius, in the fourth century. See Dr. Clarke.

him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

5 And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the LORD commanded to be done.

6 And Moses brought Aaron and his <sup>a</sup> sons, and washed them with water.

7 And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith.

8 And he put the breast-plate upon him: also he <sup>e</sup> put in the breast-plate the Urim and the Thummim.

9 And he put the <sup>f</sup> mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even upon his fore-front, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the <sup>g</sup> LORD commanded Moses.

10 And Moses took the <sup>h</sup> anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them.

11 And he <sup>i</sup> sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.

12 And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and <sup>j</sup> anointed him, to sanctify him.

13 And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and put <sup>k</sup> coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put <sup>l</sup> bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moses.

14 ¶ And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.

15 And he slew it; and <sup>m</sup> Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make <sup>n</sup> reconciliation upon it.

16 And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock, and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with <sup>o</sup> fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moses.

18 ¶ And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces; and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a <sup>p</sup> sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he brought the <sup>q</sup> other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it; and Moses took of the <sup>r</sup> blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the <sup>s</sup> blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he <sup>t</sup> took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder:

26 And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the LORD, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder:

27 And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

28 And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt-offering: they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

29 And Moses took the <sup>u</sup> breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the LORD: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' part; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and <sup>v</sup> sanctified Aaron and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

31 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron and to his sons, <sup>w</sup> Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire.

needful for their own salvation. Thus they learn to consider themselves as no better than the vilest sinners; except as the Lord hath made them to differ, by interesting them in the Redeemer's sacrifice, washing them in his blood, arraying their souls in his righteousness, and anointing them with his grace. Whilst they feed upon his spiritual provision, and are happy in communion with him; and whilst their hearts are fraught with love to Christ, and compassion for their fellow-sinners: they are prepared and qualified for the work, and disposed to "give themselves wholly to it;" and to be constant, persevering, tender, and affectionate in it: and they are made willing to forego all personal considerations, that they may point out the Saviour to perishing sinners, and assist the spiritual sacrifices of believers, to the glory of God and to the salvation of souls.—But, indeed, all true Christians are consecrated to be spiritual priests: and we should seriously ask ourselves, whether we are conscious of such a consecration, as "bought with a price, to glorify God, in body and spirit, which are his?" whether we are partakers of this washing, anointing, and arraying in the robes of righteousness and salvation? whether in our daily walk we study to maintain the honour of the priestly character? and whether we abound in "spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ?" If so, let us not despise, disdain, or despair of our fellow-sinners; but, remembering what we have done, and how

Ver. 7. Ephod.—[The Ephod seems to have been a garment worn by persons of distinction of various characters (2 Sa. vi. 4.) the description of which in the book of Exodus (ch. xxviii. 6, &c.) relates only to its materials. As to its shape, the LXX. calls it epomis, which signifies that it was worn on the shoulders. So also Josephus says it was a cubit long. Jerome compares it with the Roman caracalla, which was a sort of short cloak, only that it had a head or hood, which the ephod had not. Maimonides says, it reached down to the feet; which some suppose to be true of the back, though not of the forepart. It consisted, they imagine, of two parts, the one an oblong, rectangular piece, hanging down behind, from the shoulders to the feet; the other, a short, rectangular piece, which hung down before, the length of a cubit. These two pieces were joined together, upon the shoulder, by some proper fastening. Apparatus Templi, c. ix. § 9.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Coats.—[The kethoneth, or coat, was made of linen; but the form of it is no where described in Scripture, except in the visionary appearance of Christ to St. John, in the form and habit of a priest. (Re. i. 13.) where he is said to be "clothed with a garment down to the feet," which perfectly agrees with the description the Jewish writers give of it; who also say, that it had sleeves which came down to the wrist, and was tied about the neck. So that it was not unlike a long shirt. It was common to all the priests; but the tunic of the high priest was made of finer linen, or bonnets, are described by Josephus as being like helmets of linen, one wreath being plaited and folded over another, and a thin cap, suited to its shape, put over all, to prevent its unfolding.]—Bagster.

Ver. 31. (At) the door.—The word at is supplementary, and the LXX. explain it to mean, "in the Court;" probably near the door—certainly not within it.—Ainsworth.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days * shall he consecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, so the LORD hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night seven days, and <sup>v</sup> keep the charge of the LORD, that ye die not: for so I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his sons did all things which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The first offerings of Aaron, for himself and the people. 23 Moses and Aaron bless the people. 24 Fire cometh from the Lord, upon the altar.

AND it came to pass on the * eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a <sup>b</sup> sin-offering, and a ram for a <sup>c</sup> burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take <sup>d</sup> ye a kid of the goats for a <sup>e</sup> sin-offering; and a calf and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; and a <sup>f</sup> meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you.

5 And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near and stood before the LORD.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the <sup>g</sup> LORD shall appear unto you.

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy <sup>h</sup> sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for <sup>i</sup> thyself, and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an <sup>j</sup> atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 ¶ Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and <sup>k</sup> put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar:

we are saved, let us seek and pray for their salvation too. Yet at last, our whole life, after our conversion, is only a week of consecration, as God's priests, to offer up spiritual sacrifices in his courts above, throughout an eternal sabbath. Let us then improve our present opportunity, wait with patience and perseverance, and cheerfully expect this high and everlasting honour.

—T. Scott.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—24. Aaron enters upon his office with tokens of the divine approbation.—Here it may be proper to observe, that when Aaron and his sons were consecrated, according to the forms prescribed, they abode seven days in the tabernacle, till that consecration was completed; on the eighth day Aaron enters fully upon his office, by offering up the various kinds of sacrifices enjoined:—sin-offerings, burnt-offerings, peace-offerings; a meat-offering, and a wave-offering. He then blessed the people, himself first, and afterwards jointly with Moses. Now, we are told, the "glory of the Lord appeared

Ver. 36. Did all things.—[This was necessary to be added to show the exact fulfilment of the commands delivered to Moses, and which are recorded in Exodus, ch. xxix.; and consequently the complete consecration and preparation of Aaron and his sons to fill the awfully important office of priests and mediators between God and the children of Israel, to offer sacrifices and make atonement for the sins of the people.]—Bagster.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. Eighth day.—[Not on the eighth day of the month, but on the first day after their consecration, which occupied seven days, and before which they were deemed unfit to minister in holy things, being considered in a state of imperfection. All creatures, for the most part, were considered as in a state of uncleanness and imperfection seven days, and perfected on the eighth: see chap. xii. 2, 3. xiv. 8, 10. xv. 13, 14. xxii. 27. Numb. vi. 9, 10.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Kid of the goats.—[As the offering here is a kid, which was the sa-

The fire from heaven was the well known token that their sacrifices were approved, their atonement accepted, and themselves pardoned. (Gen. iv. 4. Judges vi. 21. xiii. 19, 20. 1 Kings xviii. 38. 2 Chron. vii. 1, &c.) Well might the people then shout; and it was, doubtless, a shout of religious joy, like that of their posterity, at the founding of the second temple; when the priests and the Levites sung together, "praising and giving thanks unto the Lord; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord." (Ezra iii. 11.) The prostration which immediately followed was, doubtless, an act of worship. The more we see of the glory of God in his Church, the louder will be our praises, and the humbler our adorations.

Ver. 24. There came a fire out, &c.—Some of the Jewish writers say, that Abel's offering was, in like manner, consumed by a stream of fire from the Shekinah. See the texts referred to in the Exposition. [These victims were consumed by a fire of no human kindling. Josephus says, that "a fire proceeded from the victims themselves, of its own accord, which had the appearance of a flash of lightning, and consumed all that was upon the altar." It is not unlikely, that by the agency of the electric spark, sent immediately from the Divine Presence, the victims were consumed. The heathens, in order to give credit to their worship, imitated this miracle, and pretended that Jupiter testi-

Israel all the statutes which the LORD hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

12 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: for it is most holy:

13 And ye shall eat it in the <sup>a</sup> holy place, because it is thy due, and thy sons' due, of the sacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for so I am commanded.

14 And the wave-breast and heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Israel.

15 The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 ¶ And Moses diligently sought the goat of the sin-offering, and behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying,

17 Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy <sup>a</sup> place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the LORD; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, should it have been <sup>a</sup> accepted in the sight of the LORD?

20 And when Moses heard that, he was content.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—20. The crime and death of Nadab and Abihu.—How soon do Death and Misery tread upon the steps of Joy! Whether it were the same day, or the following, it was probably not longer before this unhappy circumstance occurred. The first time, as it should seem, that these sons of Aaron went to offer incense before JEHOVAH, they committed a crime that cost them their lives. Whether their spirits were elated with wine, (as seems implied in the caution, ver. 9.) and they rushed thoughtlessly into the divine presence; or whether their hearts were tainted with infidelity, and they despised the holy commandment, certain it is, that instead of taking fire from the sacred altar, which had been so recently received from heaven, they took "sparks of their own kindling," like those spoken of by Isaiah, (ch. i. 11. who probably alludes to this history,) and they "lied down in sorrow." It has been objected, that they violated no express law; but this can hardly be admitted: for they were plainly commanded to "offer no strange incense, nor burnt sacrifice," (Exod. xxx. 9.) which naturally enough implied no "strange fire;" but what aggravated their offence was, that the LORD had just sent fire from heaven, to be kept perpetually burning upon the altar; and their conduct either called this fact in question, or treated the favour with contempt. Men may labour to palliate their fault, but He who read their motives in their hearts, considered it as an insult to his divine Majesty, and visited it accordingly; and that sacred fire which, by consuming their incense, would have marked the acceptance of their offering, carried the sentence of death into their bosoms. "Then said Moses unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh unto me; and before all the people I will be glorified."

And Aaron held his peace.—Literally, "He was dumb," or silent; as if struck so by the flash of lightning, or celestial fire, which had killed his sons. It is the natural effect of sudden calamity to stupify the mind and seal up the lips. Seneca has remarked, that "Light sorrows are loquacious, more weighty griefs silent." Both Aaron and his sons were forbidden to mourn "for the sufferers, lest wrath should come upon all the people." The high-priest was, indeed, in no case to mourn, even for his father or his mother, (Chap. xxi. 10—12.) But the people were to mourn; not for the deceased, but to bewail the awful judgment—"the burning" which they had witnessed.

This event, it may well be supposed, threw both priests and people into great confusion; and Aaron omitted to eat of the sin-offering, or to sprinkle the blood in the holy place. Moses reproves this neglect; but when Aaron alleges the state of his mind on this occasion, Moses says no more, nor does the LORD visit for the omission. "Such things have befallen me!" said he; "and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, should it have been accepted in the sight of the LORD?" In the first place, his grief left him no disposition to eat; and his perturbation of mind was such, that he was unable to perform the duties of his office.

This melancholy incident has been very properly improved, by way of caution against that "strange fire"—intemperate and unhalloved zeal, which kindles on earth a flame that "the LORD hath commanded not," to destroy those whom we suppose in error; or calls down fire from heaven in curses and anathemas. To all such it may be said, as to the sanguine disciples of our Lord, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." (Luke ix. 55.) fed his approbation of the sacrifice by thunder and lightning.]—Bagster. The Persians, in Darius' army, carried the sacred fire before them on silver altars, followed by a procession of magi, singing hymns.—Oriental Lit. No. 19.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Strange fire.—That is, fire that did not come from God's altar. The prohibition of this was implied by chap. vi. 12. (also by Exod. xxx. 9.) but the thing became far more criminal, after the fire upon the altar was kindled from the holy place.

Ver. 9. Wine nor strong drink.—[Shecher, in Arabic, sakar, or suker, from hachar, to inebriate, signifies any kind of fermented and inebriating liquor besides wine. So Jerome informs us, that Sicera in Hebrew denotes any inebriating liquor, whether made of corn, the juice of apples, honey, dates, or any other fruit. These different kinds of liquors are described by Pliny, who calls them vina facilia. One of the four prohibited drinks among the Mohammedans in India is called sakar, which denotes inebriating liquor in general, but especially date wine. Similar prohibitions existed among various heathen nations, as Plato informs us; with which Esseebius compares this law.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XI.

What beasts may, 4 and what may not, be eaten: 9 what fishes: 13 what fowls. 29 The creeping things which are unclean.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying unto them,

2 ¶ Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, These are the beasts which ye shall <sup>a</sup>eat among all the beasts that are on the earth.

3 Whatsoever parteth the hoof, and is <sup>b</sup>cloven-footed, and cheweth the cud, among the beasts, that shall ye eat.

6 And the hare, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.

7 And the swine, though he divide the hoof, and be cloven-footed, yet he cheweth not the cud; he is unclean to you.

8 Of their flesh shall ye not eat, and their carcass shall ye not <sup>c</sup>touch; they are unclean to you.

9 ¶ These shall ye eat, of all that are in the waters: <sup>d</sup>whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat.

10 And all that have not fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, they shall be an <sup>e</sup>abomination unto you:

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcasses in abomination.

28 And he that beareth the carcass of them shall <sup>i</sup>wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—47. Clean and unclean provision.—At this time, very particular laws were enacted respecting the people's diet, and the ceremonial uncleanness contracted by touching the carcasses of unclean animals. These laws seem to have been enacted, in the first place, as a test of obedience, like the prohibition to Adam of "the tree of knowledge;" and to teach the Israelites habits of self-denial, and the government of their appetites. Secondly, to keep them distinct from other CHAP. XI. Ver. 3. Parteth the hoof and is cloven-footed.—Both words mean the same thing; but to admit an animal among their clean beasts, it must also chew the cud.

Ver. 4. The camel divideth not the hoof.—This has been much disputed; but Professor Michaelis has at length ascertained, that the cleft is not quite through.—Comment on the laws of Moses, translated by Dr. A. Smith.
Ver. 5. The coney—[Shaphan, most probably an animal resembling the rabbit, called by Dr. Shaw, "Israel's lamb," and by Bruce, Ashkoko, which name he imagines is "derived from the singularity of those long herenacious hairs, which like small thorns grow about his back, and which in Amhara are called ashoko."] This curious animal abounds in Judea, Palestine, Arabia, and Ethiopia; and is described as being about seventeen inches when sitting. It has no tail; and at first sight gives the idea of a rat. Its colour is gray, mixed with reddish brown; the belly white; the body covered with strong polished hairs, for the most part about two inches in length; the ears round and not pointed; the feet round, of a soft, pulpy, tender substance; the toes projecting beyond the nails, which are rather broader than sharp; the upper jaw longer than the other; it lives upon grain, fruit, and roots, and certainly chews the cud; and it does not burrow like the hare and rabbit, but lives in clefts of the rocks.—Bagster.

Ver. 7. The swine.—There is no doubt but the reason of prohibiting the Jews from this food, was in part dietary. Michaelis says, "Whoever is afflicted with any cutaneous disease, if he wishes to be cured, must abstain from swine's flesh."

Now throughout the whole climate under which Palestine is situated, and to a certain extent, both north and south, the leprosy is an endemic disease; and with this disease, which is pre-eminently an Egyptian one, the Israelites left Egypt so terribly over-run, that Moses found it necessary to enact a variety of laws respecting it; and that the contagion might be weakened, and the people tolerably guarded against its influence, it became necessary to prohibit them from eating swine's flesh altogether." The same learned writer adds, that the Arabs hold swine's flesh to be unclean, and that Mahomet has forbidden it in his Koran.

Ver. 13. Among the fowls.—There seems much more uncertainty here than in either of the other classes of natural history; and notwithstanding the great number of travellers since the date of our translation, who have attended to this object, a few only can be ascertained with certainty; the others rest chiefly on etymology, (a very precarious guide,) and on the translation of the LXX. Those in which it appears most probable that our translators were mistaken, and which have since been better ascertained, we shall very briefly notice, with our authorities.

The eagle.—[Nesher, Chaldee neshar, Syriac neshro, and Arabic nshar, the eagle, one of the largest, strongest, swiftest, fiercest, and most rapacious of the nations, both by throwing hinderances in the way of their social intercourse with them, and by establishing the distinction between clean and unclean, which was applicable to persons as well as things: when therefore this distinction was no longer to be observed, Peter was instructed by a vision, which had relation to the distinction of meats, "not to call any man common or unclean." (Acts x. 9—16.) Many also of these forbidden animals were occasions of superstition and idolatry to the hea-feathered race. His eye is large, dark, and piercing; his beak powerful and hooked; his legs strong and feathered; his feet yellow and armed with four very long and terrific claws; his wings very large and powerful; his body compact and robust; his bones hard; his flesh firm; his feathers coarse; his attitude fierce and erect; his motions lively; his flight extremely rapid and towering; and his cry the terror of every wing.—Bagster. There are probably three species of eagles. The second is called the ossifrage, or bone-breaker, from its habit of breaking the bones of animals, to extract the marrow. "The ospray is supposed to be the strong black eagle."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 15. Every raven.—Including the crow, rook, jackdaw, &c.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 16. The owl.—Hebrew, "The daughter of vociferation," which Dr. Shaw interprets of the female ostrich, which in the night makes a terrible noise, sometimes groaning, and at others, roaring like the lion or the bull. "The night hawk."—The same traveller thinks this is the true oriental owl, which is so ravenous, that if not watched it will sometimes fly in at the window, and destroy children.—The cuckoo.—Rather, "the sea-gull;" named shacaph, from its extreme leanness.—Bochart.

Ver. 17. The little owl.—The bittern, "or night-raven.—Bochart.—The cormorant.—Rather, "the plunging;" a sea-fowl, which darts down a cubit into the water for its prey.—The great owl.—LXX. and Vulgate, "The ibis," (the sacred bird of Egypt,) which fed on serpents; but others, with our translators, take it for a night bird, from its supposed derivation.

Ver. 18. The gier-eagle.—According to Bochart, "The vulture;" perhaps the golden vulture.

Ver. 19. The lapwing.—Rather, "The upupa," or hoopoe; a beautiful, but very unclean bird.

Ver. 21. Which have legs above their feet.—That is, benders or crouching joints, which enable them to leap, like the grasshopper and locust.

Ver. 22. The locust.—Niebuhr remarks, "Europeans do not comprehend how the Arabs can eat locusts with pleasure; and those Arabs, who have no intercourse with Christians, will not believe, in their turn, that the latter reckon on oysters, crabs, shrimps, cray-fish, &c. for dainties. These two facts, however, are equally certain." Fried with salt, according to Dr. Shaw, they taste like river crabs.—The bald locust and the beetle.—These are doubtless other species of locust. What we call "the beetle," says Dr. Clarke, "was perhaps never eaten by man, in any country." The word (chagab) seems, by its etymology, to mean an animal that shakes the foot.—Parshurast.

From the great difficulty of ascertaining many creatures here mentioned, Dr. Clarke forbids the abrogation of the Jewish law, since no person can be secure from defilement, nor have they now purifying sacrifices.

29 ¶ These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and the <sup>h</sup> mouse, and the tortoise after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole.

31 These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they be dead, shall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed.

33 And every earthen vessel, whereinto any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and ye shall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel, shall be unclean.

35 And every thing whereupon any part of their carcass falleth, shall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they shall be broken down: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheless, a fountain or pit, <sup>o</sup> wherein there is plenty of water, shall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcass shall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcass fall upon any sowing-seed which is to be sown, it shall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the seed, and any part of their carcass fall thereon, it shall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beast, of which ye may eat, die; he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcass of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even; he also that beareth the carcass of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or <sup>a</sup> whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination.

nable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the LORD your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye shall therefore be holy, for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth;

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten and the beast that may not be eaten.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The purification of a woman after child-birth: 6 her offerings for her purifying.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman have conceived seed, and borne a man-child: then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity shall she be unclean.

3 And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.

4 And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

5 But if she bear a maid-child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.

6 ¶ And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle-dove, for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest:

7 Who shall offer it before the LORD, and make an atonement for her; and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath borne a male or a female.

8 And if she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

then. Thirdly, to teach them to make distinctions between holy and unholy, in the choice of companions, and in forming intimate connexions. And fourthly, the propensities of these animals taught them what manner of persons they ought to be: for if the pure, useful, gentle, patient nature of the animals appointed for sacrifice, was emblematical of the Saviour's character, it is obvious to conclude, that the exclusive prescription of some animals for the diet of the Lord's people was also significant. Some have even thought that the allowance of the slaughter of innocent animals, for the food of sinful man, forms a continued type of the purchase and application of the salvation of Christ, and of our transformation into his image, while we spiritually "eat his flesh and drink his blood."—T. Scott.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—8. Personal uncleanness.—For one week the mother of a male child, and for a fortnight the mother of a female, was ceremonially unclean herself, and rendered all CHAP. XII. Ver. 2. If a woman, &c.—A distinction, in the last respect, is made, according to the sexes of the children. A male child, at eight days old, was to be circumcised; at that period, therefore, the mother ceased to defile any by her touch, for now her offspring was received into the Abrahamic covenant. Under the Christian dispensation, this distinction is done away, for we are all one in Christ Jesus. Gal. iii. 28.

The sorrows of conception and child-birth were the peculiar penalty on wo-who touched her unclean: during the remainder of the terms here prescribed, the mother was secluded from sacred ordinances, but communicated no pollution to others.—The time appointed for the female child was double; for by that sex sin first entered: but in Christ this stigma is removed. When the seven days were expired, and the touch of the mother no longer caused pollution, the male child was to be circumcised. This was enjoined to Abraham, as the seal of the covenant made with him; and it was also incorporated with the law, as distinguishing the worshippers of JEHOVAH from idolaters.

The sacrifices, appointed on this occasion, were not peace offerings, as expressing gratitude and joy, which might have been expected; but a burnt-offering, implying a solemn dedication of both mother and infant unto God; and a sin-offering to make atonement, and to bring sin to remembrance, that it might be repented of and expiated.—T. Scott.

man's sin, (Gen. iii. 16.) nevertheless there is a peculiar promise to support under this extremity, 1 Tim. ii. 15. Now in the sacrifice offered for her purifying, the poor are particularly considered; and even the mother of our Lord was constrained to avail herself of this privilege. See Luke ii. 21—24.

Ver. 4. Purifying three and thirty days.—That is, in addition to the first time, making the whole time of seclusion from the temple, on bearing a male child, forty days; for a female, eighty.

39 And they that are left of you shall <sup>a</sup> pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 ¶ If <sup>a</sup> they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their <sup>a</sup> uncircumcised hearts be <sup>c</sup> humbled, and they then <sup>a</sup> accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

42 Then will I <sup>b</sup> remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the <sup>c</sup> land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her <sup>c</sup> sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall <sup>a</sup> accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they <sup>c</sup> despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I <sup>m</sup> will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to <sup>a</sup> break my covenant with them: for I <sup>am</sup> the LORD their God.

45 But I will for their <sup>a</sup> sakes remember the covenant of their <sup>p</sup> ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I <sup>am</sup> the LORD.

46 These <sup>are</sup> the statutes, and judgments, and laws, which the LORD made between him and the children of Israel in mount Sinai by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER XXVII.

He that maketh a singular vow must be the Lord's. <sup>2</sup> The estimation of the person. <sup>3</sup> No devoted thing may be redeemed. <sup>32</sup> The title may not be changed.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, <sup>a</sup> When a man shall make a <sup>b</sup> singular vow, the persons <sup>shall be</sup> for the LORD, by thy estimation.

3 ¶ And thy <sup>c</sup> estimation shall be, of the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old, even thy estimation shall be fifty shekels of silver, <sup>a</sup> after the shekel of the sanctuary.

4 And if it <sup>be</sup> a female, then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels.

that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart." Here seems to be an allusion to the state of Israel in Egypt, when they were placed under taskmasters, instead of whom, they are now to be placed under the dominion of Terror, Consumption, and the burning Ague; and every person conversant with the Scriptures must recollect, with how direful punctuality these threatenings were fulfilled, whenever the Jews rebelled against God, and especially since they crucified his Son. (See Matt. xxiv.) That awful verse, (ver. 33.) "Ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up;" has been supposed to refer to the loss of the ten tribes, of which nothing certain is known, though it is probable there may be some remains of them in Pagan India, and in the adjacent countries; for this destruction was by no means to be final. "Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God." (Rom. xi. 26-33.)

Ver. 45. I will for their sakes.—"The word (lahem) may more literally and justly be rendered, for them, or in their behalf."—Scott.

Ver. 46. These are the statutes.—[As this verse appears to be the proper concluding verse of the whole book, Dr. A. Clarke thinks, that the 27th chapter originally followed the 25th. Others endeavour to solve the difficulty, by supposing that the 27th chapter was added after the book was finished; and, therefore, there is apparently a double conclusion, one at the end of this, and another at the end of the 27th chapter. However it may have been, all the ancient versions agree in concluding both chapters in nearly the same way.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 2. Make a singular vow.—Ainsworth renders it, "Shall separate a vow." Perhaps "an especial vow" is the best English version. The difference between this singular vow and ordinary, seems to have been this: the ordinary vow was made, when in quest of some blessing, or when some special mercy was received: the person who vowed engaged to 5 And if it <sup>be</sup> from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

6 And if it <sup>be</sup> from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation <sup>shall be</sup> three shekels of silver.

7 And if it <sup>be</sup> from sixty years old and above; if it <sup>be</sup> a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

8 But if he <sup>be</sup> poorer than thy estimation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him: according to his <sup>a</sup> ability that vowed shall the priest value him.

9 ¶ And if it <sup>be</sup> a beast whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD, all that <sup>any man</sup> giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy.

10 He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy.

11 And if it <sup>be</sup> any unclean beast, of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the LORD, then he shall present the beast before the priest:

12 And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad: <sup>a</sup> as thou valuest it <sup>who art</sup> the priest, so shall it be.

13 But <sup>a</sup> if he will at all redeem it, then he shall add a fifth <sup>part</sup> thereof unto thy estimation.

14 ¶ And when a man shall sanctify his <sup>b</sup> house to be holy unto the LORD, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad: <sup>a</sup> as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand.

15 And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, then he shall add the <sup>b</sup> fifth <sup>part</sup> of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his.

16 ¶ And if a man shall sanctify unto the LORD <sup>some part</sup> of a field of his possession, then thy estimation shall be according to the seed thereof: <sup>a</sup> a homer of barley seed <sup>shall be valued</sup> at fifty shekels of silver.

17 If he sanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy estimation it shall stand.

18 But if he sanctify his field after the jubilee, voted.—The laws concerning vows, in the former part of this chapter, are peculiarly Jewish. The substance of the whole may be reduced to a few words. He who has vowed or consecrated a soul (i. e. a living creature) to the Lord, if he wish to ransom or redeem it, he shall redeem it according to the estimation of the priest, and the money shall be applied to the use of the sanctuary. But in this latter part of the chapter, we have an instance of what could not be thus devoted; namely, the first-born, (and of course the first-fruits,) because they were already claimed by the Lord as his own, by a perpetual law. We have also instances of some things that could not be redeemed, because they were devoted by an anathema, or solemn curse. "None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death;" that is, as we conceive, none who are condemned capitally, or devoted to certain death, as were murderers, Sodomites, idolaters, and the devoted Canaanites, can on any terms be redeemed, but shall "surely be put to death."

On the subject of tithes, the excellent Ainsworth very properly offer certain sacrifices—and it included nothing else. But "a singular vow," was the solemn dedication of a man's person, or child, or some part of his property, to the immediate use of the sanctuary, or of the priests.—Scott.

Ver. 4. Thirty shekels.—[i. e. $19 98, a little more than one half the value of a man; for this obvious reason, that a woman if employed would not be of so much use in the sanctuary as the man.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Fifteen shekels.—[The old man and the old woman, being almost past labour, were nearly of an equal value; the former being estimated at fifteen shekels, or $9 99, and the latter at ten, or $6 66.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. A homer of barley.—Margin, "The land of a homer," that is, as much land as requires a homer of barley (about five Winchester bushels) to sow it.—Scott. The same commentator observes, "A man was not allowed to alienate, in this manner, his whole patrimony, but only some part of a field; he might show his good will for the house of God, but not impoverish his own family."

then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it shall be abated from thy estimation.

19 And if he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be assured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more.

21 But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, shall be holy unto the LORD, as a field devoted: the possession thereof shall be the priest's.

22 And if a man sanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his possession;

23 Then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of thy estimation, even unto the year of the jubilee: and he shall give thine estimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD.

24 In the year of the jubilee the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the possession of the land did belong.

25 And all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

26 Only the firstling of the beast, which should be the LORD's firstling, no man shall sanctify it; whether it be ox, or sheep: it is the LORD's.

27 And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall redeem it according to thine estimation and shall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28 Notwithstanding, no devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the LORD of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the LORD.

29 None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed: but shall surely be put to death.

30 And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the LORD's: it is holy unto the LORD.

31 And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof.

32 And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the LORD.

33 He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed.

34 These are the commandments which the LORD commanded Moses for the children of Israel in mount Sinai.

observes, "The tithes in Israel being sanctified by the commandment of God, to his honour, the maintenance of his ministers, and the relief of his poor people, it taught them, and teacheth us, to honour the Lord with our substance; acknowledging him to be the author of all our increase and store. (Prov. iii. 9. Deut. viii. 13-18. Hos. ii. 8.) To honour his ministers, and to communicate unto them in all good things; that they who sow unto us spiritual things, should reap our carnal things." (1 Tim. v. 17, 18. Gal. vi. 6. 1 Cor. ix. 11.) And to give alms of Ver. 30. No devoted thing.—The Geneva translators, for "devoted," read "separated," throughout this passage; but the original term cherem, seems to imply, separated by a curse, or anathema, which is the word used by the LXX. In Joshua vi. 17, this word is rendered "accursed" in the text, and "devoted, or burned," in the margin. The sense given in the Exposition appears to be that of the ablest Jewish doctors. Maimonides explains it of offenders under sentence of death for capital offences. "Of those it is said, None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed; as if he should say, 'There is no redemption for him, but he is a dead man.' The like exposition is given by Sol. Jarchi, Chazkuni, and others."—Ainsworth. Farther to illustrate this, it may be remarked, that in almost all barbarous countries, murder, and other capital offences, may be commuted for money; but not so among the Jews. There was "no redemption" in such cases.

such things as we have, that all things may be clean unto us. Yea, even to sell that which we have, and give alms, to provide ourselves bags that wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not." (Luke xi. 41; xii. 33.) And as we believe that the purpose of God toward us in his election of grace standeth firm and unchangeable; and he loveth us unto the end; (Rom. ix. 11. John xii. 1.) so ought our love again unto him and his, be constant for ever; and with purpose of heart we should cleave unto the Lord." (Acts xi. 23.)

Ver. 32. The tithe of the land.—The origin of tithes may certainly be traced back to patriarchal times. Abraham gave tithes to Melchisedek, Gen. xiv. 20. And Jacob consecrated to God the tenth of all he should acquire in Mesopotamia, Gen. xxvii. 22. But they appear not to have been compulsory till established by the Mosaic law; afterwards they were adopted among the Romans, Cartaginians, Arabs, Persians, Greeks, &c.

Ver. 32. Whatsoever passeth under the rod.—This expresses the manner of tithing, which, according to the Jews, was thus performed. The cattle were all brought into a sheep-cote, in which there was but one gate, and that so narrow as to suffer but one sheep to come out at a time. . . . As they passed by, one by one, a man who stood at the gate, with a rod coloured with (red) ochre, told them in order; and when the tenth came out, he marked it with his rod, and said, 'Let this be holy, in the name of the tenth.'—Bp. Patrick.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON LEVITICUS.

[Thus terminates this most interesting and important book; a book containing a code of sacrificial, ceremonial, civil and judicial laws, which, for the purity of their morality, wisdom, justice, and beneficence of their enactments, and the simplicity, dignity, and impressive nature of their rites, are perfectly unrivalled, and altogether worthy of their Divine Author. Sacrificing was a mode more ancient than idolatry or the institutions of Moses; but among the heathen various superstitious customs were introduced, which were wholly excluded from the religion of the Hebrews. In these laws, in which we find the most minute circumstances of the act of sacrificing prescribed, there is no mention of any thing preceding the slaying of the animal, except its being sound and of a proper age. It was not brought with any garlands. No cakes of barley and salt were put upon its back. No wine was poured upon its horns. No hair was taken from its forehead to be cast into the fire on the altar. And nothing is said about inspecting the entrails, with a view to divination, which was a principal object in all the heathen sacrifices. . . . All the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law are at once dignified and expressive. They point out the holiness of their Author, the sinfulness of man, the necessity of an atonement, and the state of moral excellence to which the grace and mercy of the Creator have destined to raise the human soul. They include, as well as point out, the gospel of the Son of God: from which they receive their consummation and perfection. The sacrifices and oblations were significant of the atonement of Christ; the requisite qualities of these sacrifices were emblematical of his immaculate character; and the prescribed mode in the form of these offerings, and the mystical rites ordained, were allusive institutions, calculated to enlighten the apprehensions of the Jews, and to prepare them for the reception of the gospel. . . . The institution of the high priesthood typified Jesus the Great High Priest, called and prepared of God, who hath an unchangeable priesthood, and is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him. The prohibition of meats as unclean taught the avoidance of what God prohibits; and the various kinds of uncleanness, with their correspondent expiations, illustrated the necessity and importance of internal purity and true holiness. The very best comment on this book is furnished by the inspired Apostle Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews; and, of the other hand, that epistle, as well as numerous passages of the New Testament, would be absolutely unintelligible without this portion of the Sacred Volume.]—Bagster.

As in this book and the preceding one we have had occasion to treat of several fasts and festivals of the ancient Hebrews, and shall have occasion again to refer to them in the two following books, we here subjoin (from Calmet's Dictionary, and Horne's Introduction) the outline of a HEBREW CALENDAR, with Hints on the Seasons in Palestine:

I. TIZRI, or Ethanim, the first month of the Civil Year, (which was the only year before the Exodus,) began about the middle of our September, and ended about the middle of October, nearly answering to our September, Old Style; and so the other months. 1st. The feast of Trumpets (New Year's Day) Levit. xxiii. 24, 25. 10th. The great day of atonement, Levit. xxiii. 27, &c. 15th. The feast of tabernacles, which lasted seven days, and the eighth was a holy convocation. Levit. xxiii. 34, &c. 23d. The dedication of Solomon's Temple. 2 Chron. vii. 10. On the same day the Jews commemorated the giving of the law by Moses. The early or former rains, in Palestine, began about the end of this month, but last only a few days, when the ploughing season follows. The days very hot; the nights cold.

II. MARCHESVAN, (October and November.) In this month grapes were gathered, and wheat and barley sown.

III. CHISLEV, or Caslev. (November and December.) 25th. The feast of dedication, which lasted eight days. This was instituted by Judas Maccabeus, in memory of cleansing the second Temple, 1 Macc. iv. 52-59; and sanctioned by the presence of Christ, John x. 22. The heats abate by day, and the nights grow still colder.

IV. TEBETH, (December and January.) Weather very cold, with rain or snow.

V. SEBAT, (January and February.)

VI. ADAR, (February and March.) 14th and 15th. The feast of Purim, (or lots) in memory of the nation's deliverance from destruction, in the time of Esther. Esther. ix. 17-22. Much rain and snow.

VII. ABIB, or NISAN, the first month of the Ecclesiastical Year, (March and April.) 14th. The Passover commences, and lasts seven days. Exod. xii. and xiii. 15th. The feast of unleavened bread. Levit. xxiii. 6. 16th. The sheaf of the new barley harvest offered. Levit. xxiii. 10. In this month the weather is temperate; toward the end, usually, the spring or latter rains fall, and swell the Jordan. Barley ripe at Jericho, though wheat is not yet in ear. rains cease. Barley cut down, and wheat begins to ripen.

IX. SIVAN, (May and June.) 6th. The feast of Pentecost, which lasted a week. This is sometimes called the feast of weeks, being seven (or a week of) weeks after the Passover; the feast of harvest, &c. Exod. xxiii. 32. Levit. xxiii. 14. Summer commences this month with the wheat harvest.

X. TAMMUZ, (June and July.) Weather intensely hot. Early figs and apples ripen.

XI. AB, (July and August.) The heat at its height. Dates ripen at Jericho. XII. ELUL, (August and September.) 7th. Dedication of the walls of the Temple by Nehemiah. Neh. xii. 27, &c. Sky serene and fair. Figs, olives, and grapes ripen. The original Jewish Year was Solar, like ours; as was also that of the Egyptians. It contained 11 months of 30 days, according to Calmet; and the 12th contained 35. It is also thought that they had occasionally an intercalary month, which followed Adar, and was called Ve-Adar or the 2d Adar; but we have no account of this in Scripture.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED NUMBERS.

THE name of this Book is derived from the title it bears in the Vulgate, NUMERI, which is a literal translation of the Greek ARITHMOI, its title in the Septuagint; so called from its containing an account of the numbering and marshalling of the Israelites. Like the preceding books, it takes its Hebrew name from a distinguishing word in the commencement: being frequently called WYDABBER, and he spake, from its initial word; but, in most Hebrew Bibles its title is BEMIDBAR, in the wilderness, which is the fifth word. There can be no doubt that Moses was the author of this book; and from ch. xxvi. 13. it would seem that he penned it in the plains of Moab. It is divided by the Jews into ten parashe, and thirty-two sederim; and in our Bibles consists of thirty-six chapters. It comprehends the history of between thirty-eight and thirty-nine years; containing an account of the enumeration of the people, their formation into a regular camp; the census of the Levites, and their separation for the service of the tabernacle; the purification of the camp; the law of the Nazarites and form of blessing the people; the offerings of the princes; the consecration of the Levites; the celebration of the passover; regulations for fixing and removing the camp; the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness to the land of Moab; the transactions in the plains of Moab.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

1 God commandeth Moses to number the people. 5 The princes of the tribes. 17 The number of every tribe. 47 The Levites are exempted for the service of the Lord.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of <sup>a</sup> Sinai, in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their polls:

3 From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel; thou and Aaron shall number them by their armies.

4 And with you there shall be a man of every tribe; every one <sup>c</sup> head of the house of his fathers.

5 ¶ And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: Of the tribe of Reuben; <sup>d</sup> Elizur the son of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

7 Of Judah; <sup>e</sup> Nahshon <sup>f</sup> the son of Amminadab.

8 Of Issachar; Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

9 Of Zebulun; Eliab the son of Helon.

10 Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim; Elishama the son of Ammihud: of Manasseh; Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin; Abidan the son of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan; Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

13 Of Asher; Pagiel the son of Ocran.

14 Of Gad; Eliasaph the son of <sup>g</sup> Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali; Ahira the son of Enan.

16 These <sup>h</sup> were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, <sup>i</sup> heads of thousands in Israel.

17 ¶ And Moses and Aaron took these men which are <sup>j</sup> expressed by their <sup>k</sup> names:

18 And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, <sup>l</sup> according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls.

19 As <sup>m</sup> the LORD commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

CHAP. I. VER. 1—54. The tribes numbered, Levi excepted.—The mere enumeration of names and numbers, however interesting to the Jews themselves, can afford but little interest or instruction to us as Christians; there are, however, a few circumstances herewith connected that may be remarked.

1. Long and often had it been foretold, that Abraham's seed should be multiplied like the stars of heaven, or the sands on the sea shore, and here we see the fulfilment of the promise.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. First day.—[As the tabernacle was erected on the first day of the first month in the second year of their departure from Egypt, (Ex. xl. 17.) and this happened on the first day of the second month, in the same year, it is evident, that the transactions related in the preceding book must all have taken place in the space of one month, and during the time the Israelites were encamped at mount Sinai.]—Bagster.

VER. 2. Take ye the sum.—[This numbering was probably intended to illustrate the Divine faithfulness in thus increasing the seed of Abraham; to prepare them to preserve due order in their march; and to distinguish the tribes and families.]—Bagster.

VER. 14. Deuel.—Reuel. says the margin, for so the name is spelt, chap. vii. 42, 47. x. 20. The fact is, the R and D in Hebrew, are as similar as the small Roman c and e, and often hardly to be distinguished.

VER. 18. Twenty years, &c.—[In this census no women were reckoned, nor children nor minors, nor strangers, nor Levites, nor old men: which, col-

Jacob went down into Egypt with only seventy souls, and in four generations, come up with 600,000 men. When this was promised as a miraculous increase, it is in vain to look for examples in the ordinary course of nature, or to cavil at its impracticability, when the power of God is pledged to effect it.

2. The rapid increase of Abraham's seed is continued in the wilderness. From comparing the totals here and in chap. xii. 37., it should seem that the increase was 3550 in one year: but lectively, must have formed an immense multitude; the Levites alone amounted to 22,300 men.]—Bagster.

VER. 21. Tribe of Reuben, &c.—[By the table in the margin we find Judah the most populous tribe, and Manasseh the least; so, the difference between them being so great as 42,000. Jacob had given Judah the pre-eminence in his prophetic blessing; and that tribe was to have the precedence in the encampments of Israel; accordingly God had increased them more than any of their brethren. Ephraim and Manasseh, according to the same prophecy, were numbered as distinct tribes, Ephraim having the superiority as it was foretold: and Joseph, indeed, appears "a fruitful bough." ]—Bagster.

VER. 24. Children of Gad.—[The tribe of Gad marched, along with that of Simeon, under the standard of Reuben; and it seems, on that account, to have been introduced in this order. The other tribes also, are here classed together according to their encampments, and the order of their subsequent march.]—Bagster.

of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 Of the children of ° Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Those that were numbered of them, even of ° the tribe of Ephraim, were <sup>a</sup> forty thousand and five hundred.

34 Of the children of Manasseh, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

35 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Manasseh, were <sup>a</sup> thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

36 Of the children of ° Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

37 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Benjamin, were <sup>a</sup> thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

38 Of the children of ° Dan, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

39 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were <sup>a</sup> three score and two thousand and seven hundred.

40 Of the children of ° Asher, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

41 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Asher, were <sup>a</sup> forty and one thousand and five hundred.

of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

43 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were <sup>a</sup> fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

44 These <sup>a</sup> are those that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men: each one was for the house of his fathers.

45 So were all those that were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Israel;

46 Even all they that were <sup>b</sup> numbered, were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

47 ¶ But ° the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were not numbered among them.

48 For the LORD had spoken unto Moses saying,

49 Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel:

50 But <sup>d</sup> thou shalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of testimony, and over all the vessels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they shall bear the tabernacle, and all the vessels thereof, and they shall minister unto it, and shall <sup>e</sup> encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And <sup>f</sup> when the tabernacle setteth forward, the Levites shall take it down; and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up: and the <sup>g</sup> stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

52 And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents every <sup>h</sup> man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, throughout their hosts.

53 But the <sup>i</sup> Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony; that there be no <sup>j</sup> wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the <sup>k</sup> Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony.

54 And the children of Israel did <sup>l</sup> according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

if we suppose that the Levites were reckoned in the former number, wherein no exception is stated, and knowing that they were not reckoned in this number, it will vastly alter the estimate; for we find by chap. iii. 39. of this book, that the Levites were 22,000: but as this number includes all the males from a month old, and the other, adults only, this will again alter our calculation. Suppose, therefore, of this last number, 11,000 were adults; these, added to the 3550 already stated, will make an increase of more than 14,000 in one year, or about one in 43, and this would double their number in less than half a century; which is, perhaps, not more than the present increase of population in England. In the present instance, however, a large allowance must be made for the numbers slain in war, and by divine judgments.

3. From the total number being the same here as in Exod.

Ver. 46. All they that were numbered.—[What an astonishing increase from seventy persons who went down into Egypt about 215 years before, where they had lately endured the greatest hardships! Such was the effect of God's promise, which cannot fail.]—Bagster.

xxxviii. 26. it should seem that that statement formed the basis of this; and the alteration in one month could hardly be such as to require a fresh enumeration. In examining the different tribes, we are struck with the vast increase of Judah, which, indeed, exceeded the two tribes of Joseph, (Ephraim and Manasseh,) and eventually swallowed up all the rest.

4. In estimating the males as above, that is, at 603,550, beside 11,000 adult Levites, making in the whole, 614,550 males, beside women and children, the question arises, what must be the whole mass of the people? Dr. Clarke, the editor of Calmet, and others, estimate them at about three millions—a vast multitude, no doubt, to traverse the wilderness, a multitude which no human hand could feed; but they were fed with bread from heaven, and with water from the rock.

In 1771, all the Tartars under the Russian government, on the banks of the Wolga and the Iaik, marched in a vast body of 50,000 families, during eight months, in which they suffered innumerable difficulties and dangers, to the plains on the frontiers of Casapen, not far from the Ily, and offered themselves as subjects to Kien-long, emperor of China. He received them graciously, furnished them with provisions, clothes, and money, and allotted to each a portion of land for agriculture and pasturage. The year following there was a second emigration of about 30,000 other Tartar families, who also submitted to the Chinese sceptre.

The emperor caused the history of these emigrations to be engraven on stone, in four different languages. At the usual computation of five persons to a family, here was a modern exodus of 400,000 persons. See Vint's Geog. raphy. See chap. xxvi. 51.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER II.

The order of the tribes in their tents.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 Every <sup>a</sup> man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of their father's <sup>b</sup> house: far <sup>c</sup> off about the tabernacle of the congregation shall they pitch.

3 And on the east side toward the rising of the sun shall they of the standard of the camp of Judah pitch throughout their armies: and <sup>d</sup> Nahshon the son of Amminadab shall be captain of the children of Judah.

4 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>e</sup> were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

5 And those that do pitch next unto him, shall be the tribe of Issachar: and Nethaneel the son of Zuar shall be captain of the children of Issachar.

6 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, <sup>f</sup> were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

7 Then the tribe of Zebulun: and Eliab the son of Helon shall be captain of the children of Zebulun.

8 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, <sup>g</sup> were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

9 All that were numbered in the camp of Judah <sup>h</sup> were a hundred thousand and fourscore thousand and six thousand and four hundred throughout their armies. These shall first <sup>i</sup> set forth.

10 On the south side shall be the standard of the camp of Reuben according to their armies: and the captain of the children of Reuben shall be Elizur the son of Shedeur.

11 And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, <sup>j</sup> were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

12 And those which pitch by him shall be the tribe of Simeon: and the captain of the children of Simeon shall be Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

13 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>k</sup> were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

14 Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the sons of Gad shall be Eliasaph the son of Reuel.

21 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>d</sup> were <sup>e</sup> thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

22 Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the sons of Benjamin shall be <sup>f</sup> Abidan the son of Gideon.

23 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>g</sup> were <sup>h</sup> thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

24 All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim <sup>i</sup> were a <sup>j</sup> hundred thousand and eight thousand and a hundred, throughout their armies. And they shall go forward in the <sup>k</sup> third rank.

25 The standard of the camp of Dan shall be on the north side by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan shall be <sup>l</sup> Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

26 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>m</sup> were <sup>n</sup> three score and two thousand and seven hundred.

27 And those that encamp by him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the captain of the children of Asher shall be <sup>o</sup> Pagiel the son of Ocran.

28 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, <sup>p</sup> were <sup>q</sup> forty and one thousand and five hundred.

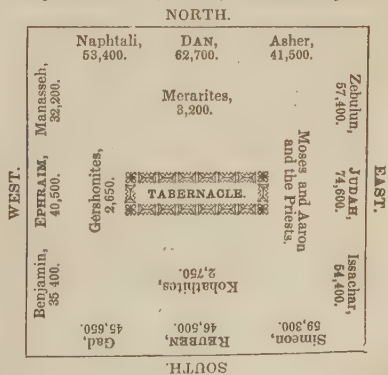

29 Then the tribe of Naphtali: and the cap-

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—34. As to an exposition of this chapter, our readers will find, in the Diagram, but particularly in the plate at the commencement of the volume, a much better idea of the arrangement of the camp, than we can give in words. To each tribe we have added the number recorded in the text.

"The Israelites, it appears, encamped in four grand divisions, with the tabernacle in the centre; though at some distance from it. The form of the camp was quadrangular, containing, according to Scheuchzer, a little more than twelve square miles. Under each of the four divisions, three tribes were placed, under one general standard. Between these four great camps, and the tabernacle, were pitched four smaller camps of the priests and Levites, who were in immediate attendance upon it; the camp of Moses, and of Aaron and his sons being on the east side of the tabernacle, where the entrance was. Judah was placed on the east, and under him he had Issachar and Zebulun; on the south was Reuben, and under him Simeon and Gad; on the west was Ephraim, and under him Manasseh and Benjamin; and Dan was on the north, and under him Asher and Naphtali.—Every tribe had its particular standard, probably with the name of the tribe embroidered with large letters. It seems highly improbable that the figures of animals should have been painted on them, as the Jewish writers assert; for even in after ages, when Vitellius wished to march through Judea, their great men besought him to march another way, as the law of the land did not permit images (such as were on the Roman standard) to be brought into it.—Josephus, Ant.

Plan of the Encampment of the Tribes of Israel.

H.L.O.S.

CHAP. II. Ver. 2. With the ensign of their father's house.—These ensigns are variously explained by Jewish writers, some supposing them to be of various colours, according to those of the jewels in the high priest's breastplate. Others suppose them to be emblems taken from the blessings of the tribes by Jacob, Ge. xlix. But it is remarkable only four standards are mentioned; namely, those of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan; on which Aben Ezra (a learned Rabbi of the 13th century) remarks, "Our ancestors have said, that in Reuben's standard was the figure of a man; in Judah's, a lion; in Ephraim's, a bullock; and in Dan's, an eagle; so they were like the cherubim which Ezekiel saw." Ezek. i. 10. But of this we have no Scriptural evidence.

Ver. 28. Forty and one thousand.—(Reyher, who is followed by Scheuchzer, assigns the following space to the soldiers of each of the tribes, whilst re- tain of the children of Naphtali shall be Ahira the son of Enan.

30 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

31 All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan were a hundred thousand and fifty and seven thousand and six hundred. They shall go <sup>v</sup> hindmost with their standards.

32 These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel by the house of their fathers. All <sup>w</sup> those that were numbered of the camps throughout their hosts, were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

33 But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did according to <sup>x</sup> all that the Lord commanded Moses: so <sup>y</sup> they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

CHAPTER III.

1 The sons of Aaron. 5 The Levites are given to the priests for the service of the tabernacle, 11 instead of the first-born. 14 The Levites are numbered by their families. 40 The first-born are freed by the Levites. 44 The overplus are redeemed.

THESE also are the generations of Aaron and Moses, in the day that the Lord spake with Moses in mount Sinai.

2 And these are the names of the sons of Aaron; <sup>a</sup> Nadab the first-born, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

3 These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the <sup>b</sup> priests which were anointed, <sup>c</sup> whom he consecrated to minister in the priest's office.

4 And Nadab and Abihu <sup>d</sup> died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office in the sight of Aaron their father.

5 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 6 Bring <sup>e</sup> the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him.

7 And <sup>f</sup> they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to <sup>g</sup> do the service of the tabernacle.

9 And thou shalt <sup>h</sup> give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10 And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 12 And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel, instead of all the first-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites shall be mine;

13 Because all the <sup>k</sup> first-born are mine; for on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the first-born in Israel, both man and beast: mine they shall be: I am the Lord.

14 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15 Number the children of Levi after the house of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them.

16 And Moses numbered them according to the <sup>m</sup> word of the Lord, as he was commanded.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them, were seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the <sup>p</sup> Gershonites shall pitch behind the tabernacle westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—51. Levites appointed.—The sons of Moses are not particularly mentioned on this occasion, having no distinction conferred on them above their brethren. This was a singular instance of his disinterested moderation, and submission to the appointment of God; who, in proof of the divine legation of his servant, willed him to act in a manner so contrary to all other eminent men: for they almost universally seek the advancement of their posterity.—Aaron is here first mentioned, because the honour of the priesthood was conferred upon him and his sons; while those of Moses were only common Levites, and therefore classed among them.

There was at this time much work to be done, and only maining close to each other in their ranks, allowing one square cubit to each; but if we take in the arrangement, not only the soldiers, but the tents, the families, &c. a much larger extent of ground is requisite:

Tribes of	Breadth.	Length.	Total.
Judah, . . .	298 3-5 cubits.	250 cubits.	74,600 cubits.
Issachar, . .	217 3-5 cubits.	250 cubits.	54,400 cubits.
Gad, . . .	140 5-11 cubits.	325 cubits.	45,650 cubits.
Zebulun, . . .	229 3-4 cubits.	250 cubits.	57,400 cubits.
Ephraim, . . .	202 1-2 cubits.	200 cubits.	40,500 cubits.
Reuben, . . .	143 1-5 cubits.	325 cubits.	46,500 cubits.
Manasseh, . .	161 cubits.	200 cubits.	32,200 cubits.
Simeon, . . .	192 6-13 cubits.	325 cubits.	59,300 cubits.
Benjamin, . .	177 cubits.	200 cubits.	35,400 cubits.
Dan, . . .	156 3-4 cubits.	400 cubits.	62,700 cubits.
Asher, . . .	108 3-4 cubits.	400 cubits.	41,500 cubits.
Naphtali, . . .	133 1-2 cubits.	400 cubits.	53,400 cubits.

If we make the ichnography, or even the scenography, of the camp on this plan, in following it, we must first, in the centre form a parallelogram of 100 cubits long, and 50 cubits broad, for the court of the tabernacle, with an empty space all round of 50 cubits broad. We must then place the camp of the Levites towards the west, viz.

	Breadth.	Length.	Total.
The Gershonites, . .	30 cubits.	250 cubits.	7500 cubits.
South, the Kohathites, . .	86 cubits.	100 cubits.	8600 cubits.
North, the Merarites, . .	62 cubits.	100 cubits.	6200 cubits.

On the east, we must place the tents for Moses and Aaron and his sons; and at the place where the camp of the Levites ends, a space must be left of 2000 square cubits, after which we must take the dimensions of the camp of the twelve tribes. In order to represent the whole camp of the Israelites in that order which appears most proper, we must extract the square roots of the preceding spaces, in order to assign to each tribe square are as or rectangular parallelograms. We find therefore for Judah, 3049; Issa-char, 2298; Gad, 3019; Zebulun, 3388; Ephraim, 2946; Reuben, 3049; Manasseh, 2537; Simeon, 3443; Benjamin, 2660; Dan, 3541; Asher, 2880; Naphtali, 3268; Gershonites, 1224; Kohathites, 1311; Merarites, 1113.

The tabernacle, which was 100 cubits long and 50 broad, being placed in the centre of the camp, 340 feet from the camp of the Levites, the whole space of the camp was therefore 259,500,000 feet. Now, according to the above division of the camp, the sum total being 135,210,000, it follows that the space between the tents contained 134,390,000. Now, if we reckon 21,141,604 square feet to the Roman mile, the Israelitish camp will contain a little more than twelve such square miles;—Bagster.

CHAP. III. Ver. 6. Tribe of Levi.—[Hakrato, here rendered, bring near, is properly a sacrificial word, and signifies the presenting of a sacrifice or offering to the Lord.] an offering, the tribe of Levi was entirely given up to the service of the sanctuary, to be no longer their own, but the Lord's.—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Instead of all the first-born.—In Exod. xiii. 1, &c. we find all the first-born of Israel claimed by the Lord, as having been spared when the first-born of Egypt were destroyed. Here, however, the tribe of Levi (the smallest of the tribes) is taken, instead of the first-born, for the service of the tabernacle, and that they may bear a proportion to them, they are numbered from the year old, instead of from twenty, as the other tribes. It may be here observed, that in all the numbering of the people, they are reckoned decimally, (or by tens), and no odd numbers are inserted. So they were offered, according to the advice of Jethro, Exod. xviii. 21. "Rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens."

Ver. 22. Month old, &c.—[The males of all the other tribes were numbered from twenty years old and upwards; but, had the Levites been numbered in this way would not have been nearly equal in number to the first-born of the twelve tribes. Add to this, that as there must have been first-born of all ages in the other tribes, it was necessary that the Levites, who were to be their substitutes, should also be of all ages: and it appears to have been partly on this ground, that the Levites were numbered from a month old and upwards.]—Bagster.

of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And the charge of the sons of <sup>a</sup>Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation shall be the <sup>a</sup>tabernacle, and the <sup>a</sup>tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, 26 And the <sup>a</sup>hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the <sup>a</sup>cords of it, for all the service thereof.

27 ¶ And of <sup>a</sup>Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28 In the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary.

29 The families of the sons of <sup>a</sup>Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle southward.

30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites shall be Eliazaphan the son of Uzziel.

31 And their <sup>a</sup>charge shall be the <sup>a</sup>ark, and the <sup>a</sup>table, and the candlestick, and the <sup>a</sup>altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and the <sup>a</sup>hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 ¶ Of <sup>a</sup>Merari was the family of the Mahites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihail: these <sup>a</sup>shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward.

36 And <sup>a</sup>under the custody and <sup>a</sup>charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, 37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ But those that encamp before the taber-

39 All <sup>a</sup>that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

40 ¶ And the Lord said unto Moses, <sup>a</sup>Number all the first-born of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And <sup>a</sup>thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the Lord) instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbered, as the Lord commanded him, all the first-born among the children of Israel.

43 And all the first-born males by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take <sup>a</sup>the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine: I am the Lord.

46 And for those that are to be <sup>a</sup>redeemed of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen, of the first-born of the children of Israel which are <sup>a</sup>more than the Levites:

47 Thou shalt even take <sup>a</sup>five shekels apiece by the poll, after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them: (the shekel is <sup>a</sup>twenty gerahs.)

48 And thou shalt give the money, wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons.

49 And Moses took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites:

50 Of the first-born of the children of Israel took he the money; a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, <sup>a</sup>after the shekel of the sanctuary:

51 And Moses <sup>a</sup>gave the money of them that were redeemed unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to the word of the Lord, <sup>a</sup>as the Lord commanded Moses.

three priests to perform it: some assistants were therefore necessary to attend on the more ordinary services, whilst they sprinkled the blood, burned the fat, and offered incense, especially when the tabernacle was to be taken down, and carried with them in their marches. That no improper persons, none "who were not called of God," might be employed, the tribe of Levi was on this occasion set apart for these services.

Ver. 25. Sons of Gershon.—[From this and the following chapter, we see the very severe labour which the Levites were obliged to perform, while the numbers of the Israelites lasted. When we consider, that there was not less than 14 tone, 366 lbs. of metal employed in the tabernacle (see note on Ex. xxxviii. 24.) besides the immense weight of the skins, hangings, cords, boards, and posts, we shall find it was no easy matter to transport this moveable temple from place to place. The Gershonites, who were 7500 in number, had to carry the tent, coverings, veil, hangings of the court, cords, &c. (v. 25. 26.) the Kohathites, who were 8600, the ark, table, candlestick, altars, and instruments of the sanctuary, (ver. 31.) and the Merarites, who were 6200, the boards, bars, sockets, and all matters connected with these belonging to the tabernacle with the pillars of the court, their sockets, pins, and cords, ver. 36, 37.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. Twenty and two thousand.—[This total does not agree with the particulars: for the Gershonites were 7500, the Kohathites, 8600, and the Merarites, 6200, which make a total of 22,300. Several methods of solving this difficulty have been proposed by learned men. Houbigant supposes there is an error in the enumeration of the Kohathites in ver. 29: the numeral shekels, "six," being written instead of shekels, "three," before "hundred." Dr. Kennicott's mode of reconciling the discrepancy, however, is the most simple. He supposes that an error has crept into the number of the Gershonites in ver. 22, where instead of 7500 we should read 7200, as caph final, which

To this tribe Moses and Aaron belonged: it had been signalized by its zeal against idolatry in the matter of the golden calf. It was by far the smallest tribe of all: and, in short, it seemed good in the sight of God to choose the Levites to approach to him, in preference to the other Israelites. Several intimations had before been given of this purpose of God, but it was now more fully and expressly declared.—The services allotted to the stands for 500, might have been easily mistaken for resh, 200. Either of these modes will equally reconcile the difference.]—Bagster.

Ver. 46. Two hundred, &c.—[As the number of the Levites was 22,000, and the first-born males of the Israelites were 22,373, there were therefore 273 more of the latter than of the former, which are here ordered to be redeemed. The price of redemption is fixed at five shekels, or about $3 32 each, in ver. 47. This money, amounting to 1365 shekels, equal to $953 48 was taken of the first-born. There is some difficulty, however, in determining which of the first-born should be redeemed by paying this sum, and which should be exchanged for the Levites; for every Israelite, no doubt, would rather have his first-born redeemed by a Levite, than pay five shekels; and yet some of them must have incurred this expense. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi says, to prevent contention, Moses took 22,000 slips of parchment, and wrote on each a son of Levi, and 273 more, on which he wrote five shekels; then putting them in an urn, and shaking them together, he ordered every one of the first-born to draw out a slip. If he drew out one with the first inscription, he said to him, a Levite price. This is pronounced by Dr. A. Clarke to be a stupid, silly tale; but when we know that the determination by lot was used among the Israelites, it does not seem improbable that it was now resorted to, though we cannot vouch for the accuracy of the detail. This species of redeeming men is referred to by St. Peter in his first epistle, ch. i. 18, 19.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The Levites' service. 17 The office of the priests. 34 The number of the Kohathites, 38 of the Gershonites, 42 and of the Merarites.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers:

3 From <sup>a</sup>thirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 ¶ This <sup>b</sup>shall be the service of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the <sup>c</sup>most holy things.

5 And when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall come, and his sons, and they shall take down the covering <sup>d</sup>vail, and cover the <sup>e</sup>ark of testimony with it:

6 And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it a cloth wholly of blue, and shall put in the <sup>f</sup>staves thereof.

7 And upon the <sup>g</sup>table of <sup>h</sup>shew-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to <sup>i</sup>cover withal: and the continual bread shall be thereon:

8 And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

9 And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the <sup>j</sup>candlestick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his snuff-dishes, and all the oil-vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it:

10 And they shall put it, and all the vessels thereof, within a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon the golden <sup>k</sup>altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put to the staves thereof:

12 And they shall take all the <sup>l</sup>instruments of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put <sup>m</sup>them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put <sup>n</sup>them on a bar.

13 And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon:

14 And they shall put upon it all the <sup>o</sup>vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, <sup>p</sup>even the censers, the flesh-hooks, and the shovels, and the <sup>q</sup>basins, all the vessels of the altar; and they shall spread upon it a covering of badgers' skins, and put to the staves of it.

forward; after that, the sons of <sup>a</sup>Kohath shall come to bear it: but they shall not <sup>b</sup>touch any holy thing, lest they <sup>c</sup>die. These <sup>d</sup>things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 ¶ And to the office of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest <sup>e</sup>pertaineth the <sup>f</sup>oil for the light, and the <sup>g</sup>sweet incense, and the daily <sup>h</sup>meat-offering, and the anointing <sup>i</sup>oil, and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein <sup>j</sup>is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

18 Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live. and not die, when they approach unto the <sup>k</sup>most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden:

20 But they shall not go in to <sup>l</sup>see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

21 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

22 Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families;

23 From <sup>m</sup>thirty years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all that enter in to <sup>n</sup>perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This <sup>o</sup>is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for <sup>p</sup>burdens:

25 And <sup>q</sup>they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' <sup>r</sup>skins that <sup>s</sup>is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the <sup>t</sup>hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which <sup>u</sup>is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their <sup>v</sup>cords, and all the instruments of their service, and all that is made for them: so shall they serve.

27 At the <sup>w</sup>appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

28 This <sup>x</sup>is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge <sup>y</sup>shall be under the hand of <sup>z</sup>Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

29 ¶ As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers;

30 From <sup>a</sup>thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them,

Levites, at this time and in subsequent ages, may be most exactly known by carefully consulting the Scriptures referred to, and the notes made on them.—T. Scott.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—49. Arrangements to carry the holy things.—The people were numbered for war from twenty years of age; but the Levites were not numbered for the service of the sanctuary till thirty. This, however, had special reference to the charge and burden of removing the tabernacle: for they CHAP. IV. Ver. 5. Aaron and his sons . . . shall cover the ark of testimony.—The sacred utensils of the tabernacle were to be thus covered, not merely to preserve them from injury, but also from the public gaze, which always begets irreverence. Every thing under the law was veiled also, as signifying that it was typical and mysterious. See 2 Cor. iii. 13, 14.

Ver. 6. Badgers' skins.—[This was not the covering of badgers' skins made for the tabernacle, which was carried by the Gershonites, (ver. 24, 25.) out one made for the purpose of concealing and sheltering the ark when it was to be carried.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Ashes, &c.—[The embers of the sacred fire seem to have been removed in the grate, which was carried apart from the brazen altar; both being covered from view by purple cloths.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Office of Eleazar.—[Eleazar himself, perhaps, with the other priests, was required to carry the oil for the light, the incense, and the flour entered as probationers at twenty-five; and in David's time, when the work was more extensive, but not so heavy, they were admitted at twenty years old.—Jesus Christ deferred entering on his public work till he was thirty years of age: John the Baptist seems to have begun his ministry rather earlier in life.—The Levites also had an honourable discharge from the most laborious parts of their employment, after twenty years service, though they were still to be occupied in one way or for the daily meat-offering, and the holy ointment; besides superintending the Levites. It may be supposed, that he himself carried no more of the oil than for present use. See ver. 9.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Cut ye not off.—[Eleazar and the priests would be chargeable with the death of the Kohathites, if they failed to give them proper cautions and directions; or permitted them to gaze with irreverence or curiosity upon the holy things, which they might carry, but not see. Ver. 20.]—Bagster.

Ver. 23. To perform the service.—Hebrew, "To war the warfare." So the Christian's life, and especially the Christian minister's, is compared to a warfare by St. Paul, 1 Tim. i. 18.

Ver. 27. Appointment, &c.—[The Levites were under the command of the priests. Eleazar exercised this authority in general, as next in succession to Aaron: and he in particular was placed over the Kohathites; while Ithamar, his younger brother, commanded the Gershonites and Merarites. Ver. 33.]—B.

33 This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

34 ¶ And Moses and Aaron and the chief of the congregation numbered the sons of the Kohathites after their families, and after the house of their fathers,

CHAPTER V.

1 The unclean are removed out of the camp. 5 Restitution is to be made in trespasses. 11 The trial of jealousy.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the Lord spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

5 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, other.—These laws are not binding in the letter of them upon the ministers of the gospel; but they may afford them much useful practical instruction.

The law prohibiting any person except the high-priest on one day in the year, to enter into the most holy place, must have admitted of an exception, while the Israelites were continually removing in the wilderness: that exception therefore was expressly made; and the directions given relating to it must be religiously observed, or the service could not be safely performed.—While the cloud rested on the tabernacle, the general rule was in force; but when it was removed, then the priests might enter to prepare the sacred vessels for removal.

These coverings were intended not so much for security and decent respect, as for concealment; and they marked not only the reverence due to holy things, but the mysteriousness of the things signified by those types, and the darkness of that dispensation.—Some suppose that the cloth of blue represented the azure firmament, which interposes between us and the majesty of heaven.—The covering of badgers' skins, made for the tabernacle, was carried by the Gershonites; (ver. 24, 25.) but this was one made to conceal and shelter the ark, when it was to be carried.—T. Scott.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—31. Lepers—and law of restitution.—The camps of Israel being now formed, with the sanctuary of God in the centre; orders were given, that, in honour of him who thus condescended to dwell among them, the lepers and unclean persons should be excluded from the camp, according to laws at different times given on these subjects.

If the person injured were dead, restitution would of course be made to his heir; but if he had left no near relation, to whom the restitution might properly be made, the priest was appointed to receive it, when the criminal offered the trespass-offering.—Doubtless real poverty would excuse a man; yet this exception is not made; for men are ready enough to find out excuses for themselves, where their own interest is concerned. They, therefore, who establish general scriptural rules of duty, should not be censured, though they do not mention every particular exception.—This law conclusively shows the absolute necessity

Ver. 36. Those that were numbered.—[In the third chapter we have an account of the whole number of the Levites; and here of those only who were able to serve the Lord in the sanctuary. By comparing the two places, we find the number of effective and ineffective males to stand thus:

KOHATHITES.		GERSHONITES.		MERARITES.
Effective men	2750	Effective men	2630	Effective men	3200
Ineffective	5850	Ineffective	4870	Ineffective	3000
Total	8600	Total	7500	Total	6200

Thus we find that the whole number of the Levites amounted to 22,300, of whom 5580 were fit for service, and 13,720 unfit, being either too old or too young. What an astonishing number of men, all properly ecclesiastics! all performing some service by which God was glorified, and the congregation at large benefited!—Bastger.

CHAP. V. Ver. 2. Put out of the camp every leper, &c.—According to the preceding plan, (see Diagram and Plate,) it is sufficiently evident, that each camp had a space behind it, and on one side, whither the infected might be removed, and where, probably, convenient places were erected for (their) accommodation; for we cannot suppose that they were driven out into the naked wilderness. But the expulsion mentioned here was founded, 1st, on a purely physical reason, viz. the diseases were contagious, and therefore there was a necessity of putting those afflicted by them apart. 2. There was also a spiritual reason; the camp was the habitation of God, and nothing impure should be permitted to remain where he dwelt.—Dr. Clarke. The Jews, however, make a distinction. Those who were defiled by the dead, were only excluded a certain time from the tabernacle; those with impure issues, &c. from the camp of the Levites surrounding the tabernacle; but the lepers being more infectious, were wholly excluded from the camp of Israel, and afterwards from Jerusalem. See Amosviii.

The fear of pollution from the dead, was not confined to the Hebrews. Among the Egyptians, according to Lucian, any one who had seen a dead body, must not visit the temple of Hierapolis till the next day; and the idea of pollution from the dead, lasted thirty days. In India, Japan, and even the South Seas, the like notions prevail, and in some cases to a degree that is ridiculous. See Orient. Lit.

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, ' When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the LORD, and that person be guilty;

7 Then they shall ' confess their sin which they have done: and he shall <sup>b</sup> recompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the LORD, even to the priest; besides the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every <sup>i</sup> offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, <sup>i</sup> shall be his.

10 And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a <sup>k</sup> man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And the spirit of <sup>i</sup> jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her <sup>m</sup> offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal: he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing <sup>n</sup> iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the LORD:

17 And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water:

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the <sup>n</sup> LORD, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse:

19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to <sup>u</sup> uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse:

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee beside thy husband:

21 Then the priest shall <sup>r</sup> charge the woman with an oath of cursing, and the priest shall say unto the woman, The LORD make thee a <sup>s</sup> curse and an oath among thy people, when the LORD doth make thy thigh to <sup>t</sup> rot, and thy belly to swell;

22 And this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy <sup>v</sup> bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot. And the <sup>w</sup> woman shall say, Amen, amen.

23 And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out with the bitter water:

24 And he shall cause the woman to drink the bitter water that causeth the curse: and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the priest shall take the jealousy-offering out of the woman's hand, and shall <sup>x</sup> wave the offering before the LORD, and offer it upon the altar:

26 And the priest shall take a handful of the offering, even the <sup>y</sup> memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it shall come to pass, that, if she be defiled, and have done trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot: and the woman shall be a <sup>z</sup> curse among her people.

28 And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall <sup>a</sup> conceive seed.

29 This is the law of jealousies, when a wife goeth <sup>a</sup> aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled;

30 Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the LORD, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law.

31 Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall <sup>b</sup> bear her iniquity.

of restitution, in one form or other, where actual poverty does not hinder, either to the injured person, to his relations, to the poor, or to pious uses: for, as Henry observes, "it is certain, while that which is got by injustice, is knowingly retained in the hands, the guilt of the injustice remains upon the conscience, and is not purged by sacrifice or offering, prayers or tears; for it is one and the same continued act of sin persisted in." Some say, that this doctrine tends to embarrass tender consciences: but it is the doctrine of right reason, and of the word of God;

Ver. 15. Her offering.—[This coarse offering, without oil or frankincense, implied the baseness of the crime of which the woman was suspected, and the mournful state of her family. It was not an atoning sacrifice, but an oblation for a memorial, as solemnly referring the decision to God, and calling upon him either to acquit or punish.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. And the priest shall take holy water.—[That is, water from the laver: called holy because separated from common to sacred uses. This is the most ancient account of the trial by ordeal, which obtained so generally among various nations; and it was calculated to fortify the minds of the Israelitish women in the hour of temptation; and to render them watchful against all occasions of exciting suspicion in the breasts of their husbands.]—Bagster.

Trial by Casha (among the Hindoos) is as follows: The accused is made to drink three draughts of the water in which the images of the sun, of Devi, and other deities, have been washed for that purpose; and if, within 14 days, he has any sickness, or indisposition, his crime is considered as proved.]—Asiatic Researches.

Ver. 23. The priest shall write these curses in a book.—The Rabbins say, that these curses were written on a scroll of parchment; for the word rendered "book," is used for a bill of divorce, Deut. xxiv. 1; and for an epistle, 2 Sam. xi. 14, and elsewhere.—And he shall blot them out.—Wipe, or "crape them out," (says Metimoides), so that no mark shall remain on the

and it is rather calculated to detect hypocrites, and to direct such as have tender consciences to a proper conduct, which, springing from faith in Christ, will make way for inward peace.

The remarkable law which follows, was no doubt intended to fortify the minds of the Israelitish women in the hour of temptation, when opportunity, importunity, and secrecy, were combined: and to render them watchful against all occasions of exciting suspicion in the breasts of their husbands. On the other hand, it was calculated to prevent the cruel treatment scroll;" but the ink (which, in the East, is frequently such as will easily wash off) is washed, or scraped into the water which he drinks, (and this, perhaps, made "bitter" the water, ver. 24.) which was probably taken from the sacred laver.

Ver. 29. This is the law of jealousy.—"This (says Dr. Clarke) is the most singular law in the whole Pentateuch; a law that seems to have been copied by almost all nations, whether civilized or barbarian; by whom we find that similar modes of trial for suspected offences were used, when complete evidence was wanting to convict; and where it was expected that the object of their worship would interfere, for the sake of justice, in order that the guilty should be brought to punishment, and the innocent cleared." See Dr. C's remarks in his Comment, at the end of this chapter.

There is no instance in Scripture of this ordeal being recurred to; and it should seem that the awful process would be enough to deter a guilty woman from venturing upon it in an age of miracles, when the immediate interference of Deity was almost daily witnessed; especially, as the Jewish writers say, every means was used to induce confession, where there appeared just reason of suspicion. On the other part, as with us, the character of the man was always considered; he must go into court, as our lawyers express it, "with clean hands;" for if he lay under any suspicion of a like offence, this mode of trial would not be granted.—Attnsworth.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The law of the Nazarites. 22 The form of blessing the people.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall <sup>a</sup> separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the LORD:

3 He shall separate himself from <sup>e</sup> wine and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his <sup>d</sup> separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the <sup>e</sup> vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his separation there shall no <sup>f</sup> razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall come at no dead <sup>g</sup> body.

7 He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die: because the <sup>h</sup> consecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his <sup>i</sup> separation he is holy unto the LORD.

9 And if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration; then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it.

10 And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

11 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he was defiled by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day.

12 And he shall consecrate unto the LORD the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year for a trespass-offering: but the days that were before <sup>m</sup> shall be lost, because his separation was defiled.

13 ¶ And this is the law of the Nazarite:

When the days of his separation are <sup>a</sup> fulfilled, he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

14 And he shall offer his offering unto the LORD, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without <sup>a</sup> blemish for a sin-offering, and one ram without blemish for <sup>p</sup> peace-offerings, 15 And a basket of unleavened bread, <sup>q</sup> cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened <sup>r</sup> bread anointed with oil, and their meat-offering and their <sup>s</sup> drink-offerings.

16 And the priest shall bring them before the LORD, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering:

17 And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

18 And the Nazarite shall <sup>t</sup> shave the head of his separation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put it in the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace-offerings.

19 And the priest shall take the <sup>u</sup> sodden shoulder of the ram, and <sup>v</sup> one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his separation is shaven:

20 And the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD: this is holy for the priest, with the wave-breast, and heave-shoulder: and after that, the Nazarite may drink wine.

21 This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the LORD for his separation, besides that that his hand shall get: according to the vow which he vowed, so he must do after the law of his separation.

22 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall <sup>w</sup> bless the children of Israel, saying unto them, from husbands, which such suspicions might produce, "through the hardness of their hearts," when the crime could not be proved, or the rage of jealousy allayed: and it would also lessen the number of hasty divorces. If properly regarded, the guilty could hardly escape, or the innocent remain under injurious suspicions; and in many ways it would subvert the interests of purity and of domestic peace, both by constantly holding out a salutary warning, and by the alarm which would be raised whenever it was carried into execution.—T. Scott.

24 The LORD <sup>x</sup> bless thee, and <sup>y</sup> keep thee:

25 The LORD make his face <sup>z</sup> shine upon thee, and be <sup>a</sup> gracious unto thee:

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—27. The vow of the Nazarite, and the blessing of the people.—Vows were of course voluntary, but when once made, were to be religiously observed, except only when plainly contrary to the divine law, in which case they were null and void. Parents might dedicate their children by vow unto the Lord, that is, to serve him; but not to sacrifice them, because human sacrifices were prohibited, as we shall CHAP. VI. Ver. 2. To separate themselves.—Or, to make themselves Nazarites.—Nazarite, from nazar, to be separate; hence nazir, a Nazarite, i. e. a person separated—one peculiarly devoted to the service of God by being separated from all servile employments. The Nazarites were of two kinds; such who were devoted to God by their parents in their infancy, or even sometimes before they were born; and such as devoted themselves. The former were Nazarites for life; the latter commonly bound themselves to observe the laws of the Nazarites for a limited time. The Nazarites for life were not bound to the same strictness as the others; concerning whose laws relate. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 3. From wine, &c.—[Besides the religious nature of this institution, it seems to have been partly of a civil and prudential use. The sobriety and temperance which the Nazarites were obliged to observe were very conducive to health. Accordingly, they were celebrated for their fair and ruddy complexion; being said to be both whiter than milk, and more ruddy than rubies, (Job. iv. 7.) the sure signs of a sound and healthy constitution. It may here be observed, that when God intended to raise up Samson, by his strength of body, to scourge the enemies of Israel, he ordered, that from his infancy, he should drink no wine, but live by the rule of the Nazarites, because that would greatly contribute to make him strong and healthy; intending, after nature had done her utmost to form this extraordinary instrument of his providence, to have farther occasion to observe. The vow of the Nazarite was of the former class. Thus Samuel's mother devoted him to the service of the tabernacle, and the Lord himself demanded the dedication to his service of Sampson and of John the Baptist under this vow. The term Nazarite means "one who is separated," whether for life, as in the above instances, or for a season only, as in the case of Paul, Acts xviii. 18; xxi. 24—27.

The vow of the Nazarite comprehended, 1. Refraining from wine and strong drink, and from every production of the vine, in whatever form. 2. Nazarites were prohibited from shaving their beards or cutting their hair, and from having either done for them. 3. They were not allowed to attend the funerals of their nearest relatives, nor to mourn for them. Without seeking out a distinct moral design in each particular, we may fairly conclude that the whole was intended to signify that the Nazarite, while his vow was upon him, was to separate himself supply her defect by his own supernatural power. See Jennings's Jewish Antiquities. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Made of the vine tree.—Margin "Vine of the wine;" but the text is most accurate. Wine is sometimes made even of the branches; but every thing produced from the vine, even vinegar, is here forbidden.

Ver. 7. The consecration of his God.—[Separation.—This expression, "the consecration, or separation, of God is on his head," denotes his hair, which was the proof and emblem of his separation, and of his subjection to God through all the peculiarities of his Nazarite. St. Paul probably relates this circumstance in 1 Co. xi. 19; by considering a married woman as a Nazarite for life, i. e. separated from all others, and united to her husband, to whom she is subject. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Shave the head.—[The hair, which was permitted to grow for this purpose, was shaven off as a token that the vow was accomplished. It was probably from this practice of the Jewish Nazarites that the Gentiles learned the practice of consecrating their hair to their gods, of which Suetonius relates an instance in his life of Nero, informing us, that he cut off his first beard, and put it into a golden box set with jewels, and consecrated it to Jupiter Capitolinus. Homer relates that Achilles, at the funeral of Patroclus, cut off his golden locks, which his father had dedicated to the river-god Sperchius, and threw them into the flood. From Virgil we learn that the topmost lock of hair

CHAPTER VII.

1 The offering of the princes at the dedication of the tabernacle; 10 their several offerings at the dedication of the altar. 89 God speaketh to Moses from the mercy-seat.

AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set<sup>a</sup> up the tabernacle, and had anointed<sup>b</sup> it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them;

2 That the<sup>c</sup> princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the<sup>d</sup> tribes, and were over them that were numbered, offered:

3 And they brought their offering before the LORD, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle.

4 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 5 Take<sup>e</sup> it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites:

7 Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their<sup>f</sup> service:

8 And four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of<sup>g</sup> Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none: <sup>h</sup> because the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them was that they should bear upon their shoulders.

10 ¶ And the princes offered for<sup>i</sup> dedicating of the altar in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

11 And the LORD said unto Moses, They shall offer their offering, each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 ¶ And he that offered his offering the first day was<sup>a</sup> Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah:

13 And his offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the<sup>b</sup> shekel of the sanctuary; both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil for a<sup>c</sup> meat-offering:

14 One spoon of ten shekels of gold, full of<sup>d</sup> incense:

17 And for a sacrifice of<sup>g</sup> peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18 ¶ On the second day<sup>h</sup> Nethaneel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer:

19 He<sup>i</sup> offered for his offering one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering:

20 One spoon of gold of ten shekels, full of incense:

21 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

22 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

23 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year: this was the offering of Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

24 ¶ On the third day<sup>j</sup> Eliab the son of Helon, prince of the children of Zebulun, did offer:

25 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering:

26 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

from the world, to live a mortified life, and devote much of his time (if not the whole) to religious services; and when the time of his vow, if temporary, was ended, then was his hair to be cut off and burnt upon the altar, at the same time as he brought his offerings to the Lord.

The Nazarite is generally considered as a type of Christ, as eminently "separated from sinners" and devoted unto God. But our Saviour took no vow upon him, and we must be careful to distinguish this term from that of the Nazarene, which meant an inhabitant of Nazareth, and which was applied both to Jesus and his followers. (See Matt. ii. 23. Acts xxiv. 5.)

The close of this chapter contains the form of benediction to be used by the high priest in blessing Israel, in the conclusion of their morning sacrifices, and which was always pronounced standing, and with uplifted hands. (Levit. ix. 22.) From the word JEHOVAH being three times repeated, the Jews themselves suspect some mystery; and some Christian commentators explain it as equivalent to the threefold apostolical benediction. (2 Cor. xiii. 14. Rev. i. 4, 5.) But others consider the words as three different forms, which might be used separately or together, as was convenient. The light of God's countenance, which image is repeatedly employed by David, may be an allusion to the cheerful beaming of the sun; or perhaps to the glory of the Shekinah in the most holy place, which some think was discernible even through the veil. (See Expos. of 2 Chron. iii. 14.)

This is called putting (imposing) the LORD's name upon the children of Israel, claiming them as his servants, and guaranteeing to them his protection and support, "I will bless them."

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—89. The offerings of the different tribes and their total.—We have here the offerings of the twelve tribes by their princes, or chiefs, as the word is better rendered by Dr. Boothroyd and others; for the term "princes" seems improper where in fact there was no king. They were undoubtedly the heads of the several tribes, and are so called both here, and in chap. i. 4. The wagons, or covered carts, were given to such of the Levites as had to carry the heaviest and most bulky articles belonging to the tabernacle.

In the summary of these offerings, it appears that they were valuable as well as numerous: those who possessed riches were willing to "make themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness." (Luke xvi. 9.) Dr. Clarke calculates the gold and silver at above 3125 dollars. The cattle for burnt offerings amounted to twelve bullocks and twenty-four small cattle. Be-was dedicated to the infernal gods. See his account of the death of Dido.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. This transaction is calculated to have taken place on the second day of the second month of the second year after leaving Egypt.

Ver. 2. Who were (Heb. "who stood") over them.—That is, probably, to see them correctly numbered. So the LXX.

Ver. 7. Sons of Gershon.—[The Gershonites being fewest in number of able men, had the less burdensome things to carry; for they carried only the curtains, coverings, and hangings. (ch. iv. 25, 46.) And although this was a cumbersome carriage, and they needed wagons, yet it was not a heavy one, and they needed few.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Four wagons.—[Though the Merarites were the most numerous, yet they had the greatest burden, namely, the boards, bars, pillars, and sockets, to carry. (ch. iv. 31, 32, 48.) Therefore they had double the number of wagons, so what the Gershonites had, assigned them.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Princes.—[Every prince, or chief, offered in the behalf, and doubtless at the expense, of his whole tribe.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Offering.—[It is worthy of remark, that the different tribes are represented here as bringing their offerings precisely in the same order in which they encamped about the tabernacle, (see ch. xi. 10.) beginning at the East then proceeding to the South, then to the West, and ending with the North, according to the course of the sun. Their order may be thus viewed:

EAST.			WEST.
1. Judah: Nahshon.			7. Ephraim: Elishama.
2. Issachar: Nethaneel.			8. Manasseh: Gamaliel.
3. Zebulun: Eliab.			9. Benjamin: Abidan.

SOUTH.			NORTH.
4. Reuben: Elizur.			10. Dan: Ahiezer.
5. Simeon: Shelumiel.			11. Asher: Pagiel.
6. Gad: Eliasaph.			12. Naphtali: Ahira.

Thus God evinces that he "is not the author of confusion, but of peace." (1 Co. xiv. 33.) It is also worthy of remark, that every tribe offers the same kind of offering, and in the same quantity, to show, that as every tribe was equally indebted to God for its support, so each should testify an equal sense of sides that, for the peace-offering there were twenty-four bullocks, sixty rams, sixty he-goats, and sixty lambs, on which the priests and people together kept a feast unto the Lord. From the number of cattle continually offered in sacrifice, it may justly be inferred that the wilderness through which they travelled, though uncultivated and destitute of human habitations, was not devoid of pasturage.

The offerings here named must be distinguished from those obligation. Besides, the vessels were all sacrificial vessels, and the animals were all clean animals, such as were proper for sacrifices; and, therefore, every thing was intended to point out, that the people were to be a holy people, fully dedicated to God, and that God was to dwell among them. Thus, as the priests, altar, &c. were anointed, and the tabernacle dedicated, so the people, by this offering, became consecrated to God. Therefore, every act here was a religious act. — Baxter.

Ver. 31. Charger. — [Karrah, in Arabic, karan, from kaara, to be deep, a large deep dish or bowl. It appears, by the metal of which this charger and bowl were made, that they were for the use of the altar of burnt-offerings in the outer court; for all the vessels of the sanctuary were of gold. It was probably used for receiving the flesh of the sacrifices upon which the priests feasted, or the fine flour for the meat-offerings. — Bonol. — Mizrak, from zurak, to sprinkle, a bowl or basin, used in sprinkling the blood of the sacrifice. (Ex. xvi. 23.) — Baxter.

Ver. 35. Peace-offering. — [These sacrifices were more numerous than the burnt-offering or the sin-offering; because the priests, the princes, and as many of the people as they invited, had a share of them, and feasted, with great rejoicing, before the Lord. This custom, as Selden observes, seems to of individuals among the people, which are mentioned in the 35th and 36th chapters of Exodus.

But to us the most interesting part of this chapter is the conclusion, relative to the manner in which Moses conversed with the Lord in the tabernacle, which merits our particular attention. Levit. i. 1. we read that the Lord spake unto Moses out of the tabernacle of the congregation; here it appears that Moses went into the tabernacle, and the voice came from the most have been imitated by the heathen, who dedicated their altars, temples, statues, &c. with much ceremony; and the ancient Greeks with more sumptuous sacrifices. Among the Romans, they were dedicated with plays, feasting, and public donations; and at last their feasts became anniversaries, as the feast of dedication also was among the Jews, after the time of Antiochus. In this feast, there were illuminations, as expressive of the public joy.] — Baxter.

Ver. 45. On the seventh day. — Not of the week, but of the offerings; the sabbath was most probably passed over.

Ver. 66. Tenth day. — [When the twelve days of the dedication commenced cannot be easily determined; but the computation of F. Scacchius seems highly probable. He supposes that the tabernacle being erected the first day of the first month of the second year after the departure from Egypt, seven days were spent in the consecration of it, and the altar, &c.; and that, on the eighth day, Moses began to consecrate Aaron and his sons, which lasted seven days more. Then, on the fourteenth day of that month, was the feast day of unleavened bread; which God commanded to be observed in the first month, (ch. ix.) and which lasted till the 23d. The rest of the month, we may well suppose, was spent in giving, receiving, and delivering the laws the day when it was anointed) by the princes of Israel: twelve chargers of silver, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons of gold:

85 Each charger of silver weighing a hundred and thirty shekels, each bowl seventy: all the silver vessels weighed two thousand and four hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary:

86 The golden spoons were twelve, full of incense, weighing ten shekels apiece, after the shekel of the sanctuary: all the gold of the spoons was a hundred and twenty shekels.

87 All the oxen for the burnt-offering were twelve bullocks, the rams twelve, the lambs of the first year twelve, with their meat-offering: and the kids of the goats for sin-offering, twelve.

88 And all the oxen for the sacrifice of the peace-offerings were twenty and four bullocks, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the lambs of the first year sixty. This was the dedication of the altar, after that it was anointed.

89 ¶ And when Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to speak with Him, then he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubims: and he spake unto him.

1 How the lamps are to be lighted. 5 The consecration of the Levites. 23 The age and time of their service.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick.

3 And Aaron did so; he lighted the lamps thereof over against the candlestick, as the LORD commanded Moses.

4 And this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold, unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had showed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them.

7 And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: Sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean.

holy place. These passages have been supposed to contradict each other; but it is possible that the sacred oracles were not always delivered in the same way. The instance before us admits of an easy exposition. The former passage has a reference to the time when Moses (Exod. xxxiii. 7—10.) "took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp; and the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moses," who could not enter because the cloud filled the place, and therefore the Lord talked with Moses "out of the tabernacle;" but here Moses entered into the tabernacle, and the voice came from the cloud which resided between the cherubim in the holy place, and this was no doubt the usual means by which the divine oracles were delivered, and hence the most holy place was called the Oracle. But it is to be noted also, that the cloud resided without and above the oracle as well as between the cherubim, (as we shall see hereafter;) and hence the voice appeared to come from heaven itself; not in thunder, as at Sinai, but in that still small voice, which was known to be the voice of God. (1 Kings xix. 12, 13.)

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—26. Times of service.—The Levites were not distinguished from the other Israelites, by any prescribed garments; nor were they washed or anointed, after the contained in the book of Leviticus; after which, on the first day of the second month, Moses began to number the people, according to the command in the beginning of this book; which may be supposed to have lasted three days. On the fourth, the Levites were numbered; on the next day, we may suppose they were offered to God, and given to the priests, and on the sixth, they were expiated and consecrated, as we read in the following chapter. On the seventh day, their several charges were assigned them, (ch. iv.) after which, he supposes, the princes began to offer, on the eighth day of the second month, for the dedication of the altar, which lasted till the nineteenth day inclusively; and on the twentieth day of this month, they removed from Sinai to the wilderness of Paran, ch. x. 11, 12.—Bagster.

Ver. 84. The dedication.—[By these oblations and sacrifices, which were simple and plain, though costly and magnificent; with which the heathen were not content, but sometimes used barbarous and disgusting rites in their dedications, as appears by their taurabolia and cribologia in honour of the mother of the gods, &c. (See Selden.) On this occasion we find there were offered 12 silver chargers, each weighing 130 shekels, 12 silver bowls, each 70 shekels, and 12 golden spoons, each 10 shekels; making the total amount of silver vessels 2400 shekels, and that of golden vessels 120 shekels. A silver charger, at 130 shekels, reduced to Troy weight, makes, 750z. 9dwts. 16.8-31gr.; and a silver bowl, at 70 shekels, amounts to 400z. 12dwts. 21.21-31gr. The total weight of the 12 chargers is therefore 9050z. 16dwts. 3.3-31gr., and that of the 12 bowls, 4870z. 14dwts. 20.4-31gr.; making the total weight of silver vessels, 13930z. 10dwts. 23.7-31gr.; which at $112 per oz. is equal to $1700 90. The 12 golden spoons, allowing each to be 50z. 16dwts. 3.3-31gr.; amount to 690z. 3dwts. 13

5-31gr. which at $17 75 per oz. is equal to $1424 10, and added to the amount of the silver, makes a total of $3125 00. Besides these, there were for sacrifice, 12 bullocks, 12 rams, 12 lambs, 34 goats, 60 rams, 60 he-goats, and 60 lambs; making a total of 240. By this we may at once see, that though the place in which they now sojourn was a wilderness as to cities, villages, and regular inhabitants, yet there was plenty of pasturage, else the Israelites could not have furnished these cattle, with all the sacrifices necessary for different occasions, and especially for the passover, which must of itself have required an immense number of lambs, when each family of 600,000 males was obliged to provide one.—ch. ix.—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. The Lord spake, &c.—[When this was spoken, says Bp. Patrick, is not certain. If Moses went into the tabernacle immediately after the princes had offered (ch. vii. 89.) it may be thought he then spake these things unto him; but, both this, and what follows concerning the Levites, seem rather to have been delivered after the order for giving them to the priests, and appointing their several charges; (ch. iii. iv.) But some other things intervening, depended upon what had been ordered respecting their camp, and that of the Israelites, Moses omits this till he had stated them, and some other matters which he had received from God. See ch. vii. 11.—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Over against the candlestick.—The shaft of the candlestick (or chandelier) was an upright pillar, with a lamp at top; but the six other lamps were inserted into this, three on each side. The Jews have a tradition, that the centre lamp was lighted from the sacred fire on the altar, and the others from that. But how the lamps should give light over against the candlestick 8 Then let them take a young bullock with his <sup>a</sup> meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil; and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering.

9 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together:

10 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the LORD: and the children of Israel shall <sup>a</sup> put their hands upon the Levites:

11 And Aaron shall <sup>m</sup> offer the Levites before the LORD for an <sup>n</sup> offering of the children of Israel, that they may <sup>e</sup> execute the service of the LORD.

12 And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the LORD, to make an atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the LORD.

14 Thus shalt thou <sup>a</sup> separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be <sup>a</sup> mine.

15 And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, and <sup>r</sup> offer them for an offering.

17 For all the first-born of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote every first-born in the land of Egypt I sanctified them for myself.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the first-born of the children of Israel.

19 And I have <sup>a</sup> given the Levites as <sup>v</sup> a gift to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children

CHAPTER IX.

1 The passover is commanded again. 6 A second passover allowed for them that were unclean or absent. 15 The cloud guideth the Israelites.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at his appointed <sup>a</sup> season.

3 In the <sup>b</sup> fourteenth day of this month, at <sup>c</sup> even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according manner in which the priests had been; but though they were set apart with less solemnity, to mark the inferiority of their office, and because they were not so expressly typical of Christ as the priests were; yet there was equally a remembrance of sin, both in its guilt and defilement, and of the need of atonement and sanctification, in the separation of them to their office. Their clothes were washed; they were sprinkled with the water of purifying; a sin-offering and a burnt-offering were sacrificed in their behalf: and they shaved all their flesh, according to the ceremony of the leper's purification. This might denote "the laying apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness;" the mortification of natural depravity, and the renouncing of unnecessary worldly avocations and employments, that they might more entirely devote their time and attention to the services assigned them.

At the age of twenty-five the Levites began to attend upon the ordinary services of the tabernacle; but they were neither required, nor allowed, to assist in its removal, till they were thirty years old. Probably, at the age of twenty-five the Levites were, in after ages, solemnly admitted to their office, according to the prescribed order of this chapter.

The Levites, above fifty years of age, might superintend and assist their junior brethren in the ordinary offices: and give them and the people counsel and instruction: but they were exempted from carrying the tabernacle, and from other laborious services.—It is remarkable, that no law was made concerning the age at which the priests should begin to officiate; and though various blemishes disqualified them for the service of the sanctuary, yet they continued their ministrations till death, if capable. On the other hand, nothing is said concerning any bodily defects or blemishes disqualifying the Levites; but the time of their service is expressly settled. Their work was far more laborious than that of the priests; it is probable that, without necessity, the priests would not begin very early to officiate; and the wisdom and experience of age would increase, rather than diminish, their fitness for the sacred duties of their office.—T. Scott.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1–23. The passover again commanded.—The pillar of cloud and fire.—In order of time, this chapter evidently takes place of all the preceding; for this passover was in the first month of their second year; whereas we are expressly told, that the numbering of the people was not ordered till the first day of the second month. (Chap. i. 1.) As the sacred historians profess not to be exact in the order of time, it is inconceivable; probably it means "parallel to," as we think the Hebrew will admit, and which agrees to the form represented on the arch of Titus. Compare LXX: "shall burn along the face of the candlestick."

Ver. 9. Whole assembly.—[The words kol adath, which are rendered "the whole assembly," often signify all the elders, or principal persons in the several tribes, (ch. xv. 4; xxv. 7; xxxv. 12.) And they cannot well have any other sense here; for it would be impossible for all the children of Israel to put their hands on the Levites, as stated in the next verse.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Offer, &c.—[Wahainapha othom tenophah, literally, as in verse 1, "and thou shalt wave them for a wave-offering;" manifestly in allusion to the ancient sacrificial rite of waving the sacrifices before the Lord; and it is probable that some significant action, analogous to the waving of the sacrifice, was employed on this occasion; for the Levites were considered as an offering to the Lord, to whose service they were wholly dedicated. To "his the Apostle Paul manifestly alludes, when in writing to the Romans, he says, (ch. xii. 1.) "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service."—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Wholly given.—[Nethunim, nethunim, "given, given;" the word being repeated, "because," says Bp. Patrick, "the children of Israel had devoted them to him, by laying their hands upon them, (ver. 10.) and Aaron had waved them as a wave-offering to the Lord." (Ver. 11.) Houbigant, on the authority of the Samaritan, reads, "instead of every first-born of the children of Israel, who openeth the womb."—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Twenty-five years.—[In ch. iv. 3. the Levites are appointed to the service of the tabernacle at the age of thirty years; and in ch. xxiii. 24. they are ordered to commence their work at twenty years of age. In order to reconcile this apparent discrepancy, it is to be observed, 1. At the time of which Moses speaks in ch. iv. 3. the Levitical service was exceedingly severe, and consequently required full grown, robust men to perform it: the age of thirty was therefore appointed as the period for commencing this service, the weightier part of which was probably there intended. 2. In this place God seems to speak of the service in a general way: hence the age of twenty-five is fixed. 3. In David's time and afterwards, when the age of twenty years was the age appointed.]—Bagster.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. In the first month.—[The fourteen first verses of this chapter evidently refer to a time previous to the commencement of this book; but as there is no evidence of a transposition, it is better to conclude with Houbigant, that "it is enough to know, that these books contain an account of things transacted in the days of Moses, though not in their regular or chronological order."—Bagster.

to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it.

4 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover.

5 And <sup>4</sup>they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month at even in the wilderness of Sinai: according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

6 ¶ And there were certain men, who were <sup>e</sup> defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day: and <sup>f</sup> they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day:

7 And those men said unto him. We are defiled by the dead body of a man: wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the LORD in his appointed season among the children of Israel?

8 And Moses said unto them, Stand still, and I will hear what the LORD will command concerning you.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the LORD.

11 The <sup>14</sup>fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it, and eat it with unleavened <sup>b</sup> bread and bitter herbs.

12 They shall leave <sup>1</sup> none of it unto the morning, nor <sup>1</sup> break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbearth to keep the passover, even the same <sup>a</sup> soul shall be cut off from among his people: because he brought not the offering of the LORD in his <sup>1</sup> appointed season, that man shall <sup>m</sup> bear his sin.

14 And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the LORD; according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have <sup>a</sup> one ordinance both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

15 ¶ And on the day that the tabernacle was is a folly to cavil with them on that account. There might be a reason for placing the accounts in this order, of which we are now ignorant.

On this occasion, a case of conscience occurred, which, indeed, does not concern us, any otherwise than to remark, that scruples really conscientious should always be respected. On this occasion, it is allowed that, in future, any person ceremonially unclean at the time, might keep the passover in the second month instead of the first. The excellent Scott takes occasion to observe here, that moral uncleanness no less unfits us for celebrating the Christian passover; hence the sad dilemma of many professing Christians, who are "habitually unclean," so that they dare not approach the Lord's table (the Christian passover); and yet, by staying away, act in direct opposition to a divine command.

But our attention is more particularly arrested by the economy of the miraculous pillar, in which resided the Shekinah, or divine presence. We have already remarked, that a part of this cloud and glory resided in the most holy place; but a part of it also resided immediately above it, as a dense cloud by day, but like a flame of fire at night. Now, when this cloud was removed upward into the air, it was the signal for them to journey, and it journeyed with them; but when it became stationary, then were they to stop and pitch their tents.

This narrative of the pillar and the cloud, affords a beautiful emblem of the leadings of Divine Providence; sometimes dark

Ver. 12. Leave none of it.—[From the Jewish passover, the heathens borrowed their sacrifice, termed Propter Viam. It was their custom, previously to their undertaking a journey, to offer a sacrifice to their gods, and to eat the whole, if possible; but if any part was left, they burned it with fire: this was called propter viam, because it was made to procure a prosperous journey. It was in reference to this, that Cato is said to have rallied a person called Q. Albidus, who, having eaten up all his goods, set fire to his house. "He has offered his sacrifice propter viam," said Cato, "because he has burned what he could not eat."—Break any bone.—We have already ad-reared up, the cloud <sup>a</sup> covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony: and at <sup>v</sup> even: there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning.

16 So it was always: the <sup>a</sup> cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And <sup>v</sup> when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents.

23 At the commandment of the LORD they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the LORD they journeyed: they <sup>a</sup> kept the charge of the LORD, at the <sup>v</sup> commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

CHAPTER X.

1 The use of the silver trumpets. 11 The Israelites remove from Sinai to Paran: 14 <sup>the</sup> order of their march.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Make thee two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them: that thou mayest use them for the <sup>a</sup> calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps.

3 And when they shall <sup>b</sup> blow with them, all as the densest cloud, and at other times illumined with the divine glory, still leading us safely through the wilderness to the heavenly Canaan. On this analogy Henry has some very pithy and pertinent observations.—The cloud stopped, and they rested. "There is no time lost," says he, "while we are waiting God's time. It is as acceptable a piece of submission to the will of God, to sit still contentedly when our lot requires it, as to work for him when we are called to it."

"When the cloud was taken up, they removed, how comfortably soever they were encamped. The people being thus kept at a constant uncertainty, and having no time fixed for their stays and their removes, were obliged to hold themselves in constant readiness to march at a moment's warning. For the same reason we are kept uncertain as to the time of 'putting off our earthly tabernacle,' that we may be always ready to remove. As long and as far as the cloud moved, so long and so far they marched; and where it abode, they pitched their tents about it, and God's tent under it. It is uncomfortable staying when God is departed; but very safe and pleasant going, when we see God before us, and resting where he appoints to rest."

We have now, indeed, no such sensible tokens of the divine presence to guide us; but we have "a more sure word of prophecy"—his word is promised to be "a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our paths." (Ps. cxix. 105.) Thus will he guide us by his counsel till he brings us to his rest.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—36. The silver trumpets—Israel removes verted to the practice of roasting sheep whole in the East, to which we add, that Bezon says, he "met with shepherds who were roasting sheep whole, which they sold to travellers, stuck upon sticks of willow tree. The entrails were taken out, and the body again sewed up."—Basster.

Ver. 23. They kept the charge of the Lord.—Hebrew, "The watch of the Lord." Some of the Levites were, no doubt, always placed to watch the cloud, and to give the earliest notice of its rising.

CHAP. X. Ver. 2. Two trumpets.—[The necessity of such instruments will at once appear, when the amazing extent of this army is considered.—

the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes, which are <sup>c</sup> heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.

5 When ye blow an <sup>d</sup> alarm, then the camps that lie on the <sup>e</sup> east parts shall go forward.

6 When ye blow an alarm the second time, then the camps that lie on the <sup>f</sup> south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys.

7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.

8 And the sons of Aaron, the <sup>g</sup> priests, shall blow with the trumpets; and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

9 And if ye go to <sup>h</sup> war in your land against the enemy that <sup>i</sup> oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be <sup>j</sup> remembered before the LORD your God, and ye shall be <sup>k</sup> saved from your enemies.

10 Also <sup>l</sup> in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for a <sup>m</sup> memorial before your God: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ And it came to pass on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that the <sup>n</sup> cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel took their journeys out of the wilderness of <sup>o</sup> Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of <sup>p</sup> Paran.

29 ¶ And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of <sup>j</sup> Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD said, <sup>k</sup> I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for three days' journey.—The first part of this chapter relates to the form and use of the trumpets. The form was, doubtless, that of a simple pipe, enlarged into a bell at the end, like the flowers of the convolvulus. Such are the trumpets represented on the celebrated arch of Titus. These trumpets (as St. Paul says) "gave a certain sound," (1 Cor. xiv. 8.) which the people understood. As for instance, when they were both blown, all the people assembled at the door of the tabernacle; when they blew with one only, then the princes (or chiefs) alone assembled; and when they blew an alarm, then were they to begin their journey, in the manner and order here prescribed. They were also to blow over the sacrifices, as a notice to the people, to accompany their offerings with prayer.

When the people had remained nearly a year at Sinai, and received the law and erected the tabernacle, they removed forward three days' journey, from the wilderness of Sinai to the wilderness of Paran; thus all our journeys in the present life, as good Matthew Henry observes, are but from one wilderness to another. At Paran, the cloud rested, as a signal for encampment. It appears, however, from other scriptures, that in this march they had two intermediate stations not here men-

There were various kinds of trumpets among the ancients, of different forms and materials, as Eustathius shows on Homer, where he mentions six; the second of which was turned up round, like a ram's horn; which he says the Egyptians used (from being invented by Osiris) when they assembled the people to their sacrifices. But in opposition to that form, Moses commands them to be made long, in the shape of those used at present. So Josephus informs us, who says, they were near a cubit long; the tube of the thickness of a common pipe or flute; the mouth no wider than just to admit blowing into them; and their ends wide like those of the modern trumpet.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. When ye blow an alarm.—A single alarm was a signal for the eastward division to march; two such alarms the signal for the south; and probably three for the west, and four for the north. There appears, therefore, a deficiency in the Hebrew Text, which is thus supplied by the LXX.

And when ye blow a third alarm, or signal, the camps on the west shall march; and when ye blow a fourth alarm, the camps on the north shall march. This addition, however, is not acknowledged by the Samaritan, nor any other version than the Coptic, nor any MS. yet collated.]—Bagster. The Persians began their march at sun-rising, a signal being given by a trumpet from the king's tent.—Oriental Lit.

tioned. Both when they advanced and when they stopped, Moses implored the divine blessing and presence: "Rise up!" or, "Return, O Lord!" this, however, did not make him indifferent to the use of proper means for his guidance and protection. He, therefore, entreats Hobab to go with him as a guide through the wilderness; or, in the language of the East, to be to him "instead of eyes;" for though the pillar of cloud and fire was to be their leader, there were many points in which a man like Hobab, who was well acquainted with the wilderness, might be of use; particularly in pointing out the springs of water, their different qualities, the times and course of the Samiel, (or pestilential wind,) and the place of the moving sands.

Whether or not Hobab was the same person with Jethro, (See note on Ex. ii. 18.; iii. 1.) he appears to have been a man in whom Moses could place great confidence; and though he proposed to go back to his kindred, (and possibly did so at the present time,) yet he afterwards returned to Israel, as we read of his inheritance in the promised land. (Judges i. 16.; iv. 11.) Perhaps he was like the son in the gospel, who said, "I will not; and afterwards repented and went;" and whom Jesus himself

Ver. 11. Twentieth day.—[The Israelites had lain encamped in the wilderness of Sinai about eleven months and twenty days, (comp. Ex. xix. 1.) and they now received the order of God to decamp, and proceed to the promised land: the Samaritan, therefore, introduces, at this place, nearly the words of Deut. i. 6–8: "And Jehovah spake unto Moses, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount, turn, and take your journey." &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. In the wilderness of Paran.—This journey was in fact divided into three stations, Kibroth, Hazeroth, and Paran. See ch. xi. 35.; xii. 16.

Ver. 14. Went the standard.—[The following is the order in which this vast company marched: Judah, Issachar, Zebulun; Gershonites, and Merarites, bearing the tabernacle.—Reuben, Simeon, Gad; Kohathites, with the sanctuary.—Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin.—Dan, Asher, Naphtali. Among other things, it should be remarked, that, according to a well known rule of military tactics, the advanced and rear-guards were stronger than the centre: see ch. xi.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Raguel.—[This person is also called Reuel in Ex. ii. 18.; but the Hebrew is the same in both places. The reason of this difference is, that the letter ayin, is sometimes pronounced according to the vowel which is attached to it, and sometimes as a strong guttural, which scarcely any European 30 And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.

31 And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee: forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes.

32 And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what goodness the LORD shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.

33 ¶ And they departed from the mount of the LORD three days' journey: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD went before them in the three days' journey, to search out a resting-place for them.

34 And the cloud of the LORD was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp.

35 And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, LORD, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee.

36 And when it rested, he said, Return, O LORD, unto the many thousands of Israel.

CHAPTER XI.

¶ The people lust for flesh, and loathe manna. 10 Moses complaineth of his charge. 16 God divideth his burden unto seventy elders. 31 Quails are given.

AND when the people complained, it displeased the LORD: and the LORD heard it: and his anger was kindled; and the fire of the LORD burnt among them, and consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the camp.

2 And the people cried unto Moses; and when Moses prayed unto the LORD, the fire was quenched.

3 And he called the name of the place Taberah: because the fire of the LORD burnt among them.

4 ¶ And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting: and the children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat?

Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic.

6 But now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes.

7 And the manna was as coriander-seed, and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium.

8 And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil.

9 And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 ¶ Then Moses heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; Moses also was displeased.

11 And Moses said unto the LORD, Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me?

12 Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing-father beareth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers?

13 Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh, that we may eat.

14 I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me.

15 And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and let me not see my wretchedness.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee.

17 And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and commended, as far before the hypocritical son, who said, "Sir, I go: and went not." (Matt. xxi. 28-31.) It is certain, at least, that Hobab did not return to idolatry, but remained a worshipper of the God of Israel.

Those that are bound for the heavenly Canaan, (says Henry,) should invite and encourage their friends to go with them; and what argument can be more powerful, than that God hath spoken good concerning Israel? . . . Those that are willing to take their lot with God's Israel in a wilderness, shall have also their lot with them in Canaan: "If we suffer with them, we shall also reign with them." (Luke xxii. 28, 29.)

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1-17. The people complain, and are punished.—Moses complains, and has help.—The complaint of the people was not in a way of prayer, as was that of Moses, nor was it open and avowed, but a secret murmuring among themselves; so the margin expresses it, "they were, as it were, complainers."

organs can envenomate; and therefore as an approach to its sound, represented by g. g. or ng. Most probably Reuel was the same person as Jethro, and that Hobab was his son.)—Bagster.

Ver. 31. Thou knowest.—[As the Israelites were under the immediate direction of God himself, and were guided by the pillar of cloud and fire, it might be supposed, that they had no need of Hobab. But it should be remembered, that the cloud directed only their general journeys, not their particular excursions. Parties took several journeys while the grand army lay still, (ch. xiii. xx. xxxi. xxxii.) and therefore, they needed such a person as Hobab, well acquainted with the desert, to direct these excursions; to point out the watering places, and where they might meet with fuel, &c. &c. See some valuable observations on this subject in Harmer and Dr. A. Clarke.—Bagster.

Ver. 23. Went before them.—This expression has led some commentators to conclude, that occasionally (as in this instance) the ark went before the camp, guided and guarded by the sacred cloud. We know it did so in passing Jordan, Josh. iii. 6.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. The fire of the Lord.—Harmer thinks this intends the fiery wind, called Samiel; and Thevenot mentions the death of 20,000 men in one night, by means of these fiery winds. The term is, however, generally meant of lightning, and the sense suggested in the exposition seems best to agree with the idea of its being quenched, or sunk; i. e. it went out without spreading farther.

Ver. 5. The fish, which we did eat freely, (or gratis.)—It is probable that the Hebrews were permitted, in the earlier part of their time in Egypt, to fish in the rivers. Dr. Pococke says, that in Egypt, "in the hot season, (June,) the people scarcely eat any thing but fish, with pulse and herbs."—The cucum-

The Lord, however, heard it: his ears, which are ever open to the sighs of his people, are open also to the murmurs of his enemies; and their conduct was, as the Hebrew expresses it, "evil in the ears of the Lord;" and his anger was kindled, and burned "in the uttermost parts of the camp," by lightning, which is commonly called "the fire of the Lord;" that is, probably, the lightning struck their fuel, or set fire to their tents; for the supplementary words them that were, seem not only unnecessary but improper. The tents were on fire, and having no water at hand in the wilderness, they cried unto Moses; Moses prayed unto the Lord, and the fire was quenched; and the place was called Taberah, that is, a burning; but no sooner were they pardoned, than they began again to murmur, unless we are to suppose that these were another party; it is probable, however, that the mixed multitude chiefly resided on the outside of the camp, (as they belonged to no tribe,) and were con-

bers, &c.—Madlet, describing the vegetables which the modern Egyptians use for food, tells us that melons, cucumbers, and onions, are most common. Apianus describes the Egyptian cucumber, Kethe, "as about a foot in length and as differing from the common European sort by its leaves being smaller whiter, softer, and rounder; its fruit larger, greener, smoother, softer, sweeter, and more easy of digestion." The other articles here named grew in Egypt to great perfection, and formed great part of the food of the common people. Jovett, in his "Christian Researches," says, "Extensive fields of ripe melons and cucumbers adorned the sides of the river, (Nile;) they grew in such abundance, that the sailors freely helped themselves."

Ver. 6. Our soul is dried.—By soul is here and often meant, the animal frame, which, in the heat of the wilderness, might naturally enough lead them to desire cucumbers and melons; but their cry was for animal food, not vegetable, which shows that their complaints arose chiefly from a discontented mind.

Ver. 7. The colour thereof.—Hebrew, "The eye thereof, as the eye of bdellium." See Exod. xvi. 14, and exposition. The eye of a pearl is properly the centre, or focus of the rays of light. For a farther account of manna, see Exod. xvi., exposition, and notes.

Ver. 11. Afflicted.—[The complaint and remonstrance of Moses in these verses serve at once to show the deeply distressed state of his mind, and the degradation of the minds of the people. The slavery they had so long endured had served to debase their minds, and to render them incapable of every high and dignified sentiment, and of every generous act.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. My wretchedness.—[Two of Dr. Kennicott's manuscripts read, "their wretchedness." The Jerusalem Targum has the same, and adds, by way of explanation, "who are thine own people."]—Bagster.

they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.

18 And say thou unto the people, <sup>b</sup> Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the <sup>c</sup> ears of the LORD, saying, Who shall <sup>d</sup> give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the LORD will give you flesh, and ye shall eat.

seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the LORD came <sup>k</sup> down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that <sup>l</sup> when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease.

26 But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the Spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle: and <sup>m</sup> they prophesied in the camp.

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp.

28 And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, My lord Moses, <sup>n</sup> forbid them.

29 And Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake? <sup>o</sup> would God that all the LORD's people were prophets, and that the LORD would put his Spirit upon them.

30 And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel.

31 ¶ And there went forth a wind from the LORD, and brought <sup>p</sup> quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it <sup>q</sup> were a day's journey on the other side, round about the cerned, if not in murmuring themselves, at least in exciting others, whose discontent seems to have arisen from various causes. Some lusted for flesh, and others for fish, and still others for cucumbers and melons. These were dainties certainly not to be expected in a wilderness; but they were travelling to a better country, a land of corn and wine and oil, and therefore ought not to regard temporary inconveniences. Besides, they lived on angel's food—they had bread from heaven, sweet as the taste of fresh oil; and olives were always reckoned among their chief delicacies. But who were this mixed multitude? it may be asked. If we turn back to Ex. xii. 38, we shall find that, literally, "all were not Israel that were of Israel." There was "a great mixture," as the Hebrew phrase is, which the Chaldean expounds, "many strangers." "Egyptians and others," (says Ainsworth,) who were moved by God's works showed in Egypt, to go out with Israel." Their motives, however, seem not to have been of the purest kind. As many afterwards followed our Lord "for the loaves and fishes," so these followed Israel, expecting, probably, to live by miracle, without labour, and in abundance; and when they found their mistake, they not only murmured among themselves, but excited discontent among the Israelites: they fell a lusting; and when the Israelites saw it, they fell a weeping, and cried like children, and said, "Who shall give us flesh to eat?" But had they no flesh? Certainly they had flocks and herds; but Moses was probably sparing of these, and reserved most of them for sacrifice, which might, in great measure, cause the umbrage. It is certain, however, they were not wholly debarred from flesh, for when an animal was offered for a peace-offering, the blood and the fat only were offered to the LORD; the breast and the right shoulder were given to the priest, but the rest of the carcass was to be eaten by the offerer and his family or friends. (Levit. vii. 15—19.; xxii. 30.)

At length the complaint reaches the ears of Moses, and his eyes witness their distress, which completely overwhelms him.

Ver. 19. Not one day, &c.—[About a year before this, the people had been thus fasted for one day, (Exod. xvi. 13.) but now such plenty was to be afforded them for a whole month, and they should use it so greedily, that at last they should entirely loathe the food for which they had so inordinately craved.]

Ver. 25. Prophesied.—[By prophesying here we are to understand their performing those civil and sacred functions for which they were qualified; exhorting the people to quiet and peaceable submission, and to trust and confidence in the providence of God.]—Bagster.

Ver. 31. Quails.—[That the word selav means the quail, we have already had occasion to observe; to which we subjoin an authority which Ludolf, when Maunderell visited him at Francfort, recommended this to him as a subject of inquiry when he should come to Naplosa, (the ancient Sichem,) where the Samaritans live. Maunderell accordingly asked their chief priest what sort of animal he took the selav to be. He answered, they were a sort of fowls; and by the description, Maunderell perceived he meant the same kind with our quails. He was then asked what he thought of locusts, and whether the history might not be better accounted for, supposing them to be the winged creatures that fell so thick about the camp of Israel. But by his answer, it appeared he had never heard of such an hypothesis.]—Bagster. "There are no birds of passage which arrive in greater, and at the same time more unaccountable numbers, than quails. They assemble together on the sandy shore of Egypt, in very large flocks. It is difficult to imagine how a bird which, being so heavy in its flight, cannot fly to any distance, and which, in our flocks, we see alight almost as soon as it has taken wing, should venture to traverse a pretty great extent of sea. The islands scattered over the Mediter-

He "heard the people weeping throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent." Jehovah was angry, and Moses was displeased—not only with the people, but with the LORD also, and ventures to remonstrate with his Maker. He had been commissioned to carry the people into Canaan, but it was only in dependence on Divine Providence. The people were crying to him on every side for meat, and for variety of food, until he was confounded and overwhelmed; and instead of crying to the LORD in prayer, as he had been wont to do, his spirit sinks into despondency, and he thinks he does well, like Jonah, to be angry and to grieve (Jonah iv. 9.) and, therefore, as in a former instance, (Exod. xxxii. 32.) prays to be taken out of his troubles, if they were not removed. Before we proceed farther, is not here a mirror in which we may see our own hearts? How soon do we complain of our burdens when we feel their pressure! We forget that we are sinners, when we complain of sufferings. We should rather say with the prophet, "Wherefore doth the living man complain?" (Lam. iii. 39.) or with the evangelical poet:—

"Amidst his wrath compassion slines;
His strokes are lighter than our sins;
And while his rod corrects his saint,
His ear indulges their complaints." Watts.

Ver. 18—35. Though Moses was not to be justified in his peevishness and impatience, "the ear" of God "indulged his complaints," and granted him relief. It appears that, before this, in consequence of the advice of Jethro, Moses had appointed coadjutors in his judicial capacity, to hear and determine disputes among the people; but they were merely secular officers, and not being endowed with the prophetic spirit, were probably thought lightly of, and never consulted but on concerns of a private nature. In the case before us, in particular, it is evident they had not been applied to, since Moses alone was "for the people to Godward;" that is, in all cases relative to matters between God and them. (See Exod. xviii. 19—26.) In judicial reanean, and the vessels sailing along its surface, serve them indeed for places of rest and shelter, when the winds become boisterous, or contrary to the direction of their route. But these asylums, which the quails have not always sufficient strength to reach, and the distance of which is frequently fatal to them, likewise prove to them places of destruction. Too much exhausted to fly, they suffer themselves to be caught, without difficulty, upon inhospitable shores: they are also easily taken by the hand upon the rigging of ships; and when excess of fatigue prevents them from rising to that height, they strike with violence against the vessel's bulk, fall back, stunned by the shock, and disappear in the waves. Whatever may be the danger of the long voyage, which these birds do not seem destined; whatever losses these bodies of feeble travellers may sustain in the course of the passage, there still arrives so great a multitude in the environs of Alexandria, that the number to be seen there is truly incredible. The Egyptian fowls catch them in nets. During the first days of their arrival, such quantities are for sale in the markets of Alexandria, that three, and sometimes four, were to be purchased for a medine, or about fifteen or sixteen deniers."—Savary's Travels in Egypt. Compare the exposition of Exod. xvi.; also the note on ver. 13, of that chapter.—Let them fall.—This word (Ncpal) is of very extensive meaning in 1 Sam. xxx. 16, it is rendered "spread abroad." The sense appears to be, that they were so spent with their journey, and the force of the mighty wind that brought them, that they hovered round the camp, not being able to rise above two cubits (between three and four feet) from the ground. Sol. Jereph says, "they flew as high as a man's heart;" so that there was no difficulty in gathering them in large quantities; and, when killed, the Israelites spread them abroad on the sands to dry, as they still do."—A day's journey.—Hebrew, "As it were the way of a day."

camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.

32 And the people stood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered <sup>a</sup>ten homers: and they spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp.

33 And <sup>a</sup> while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the LORD was kindled against the people, and the LORD smote the people with a very great plague.

34 And he called the name of that place <sup>a</sup>Kibroth-hattaavah: because there they buried the people that lusted.

35 And the people <sup>a</sup>journeyed from Kibroth-hattaavah unto Hazeroth: and <sup>a</sup>abode at Hazeroth.

CHAPTER XII.

1 God rebuketh the sedition of Miriam and Aaron. 10 Miriam's leprosy is healed.

AND Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the <sup>a</sup>Ethiopian woman whom he had married: for <sup>b</sup>he had <sup>c</sup>married an Ethiopian woman.

2 And they said, Hath the LORD indeed spoken only by Moses? hath he not <sup>a</sup>spoken also by us? And the LORD <sup>c</sup>heard it.

3 (Now the man Moses was very meek, above matters it appears, also, that every "great matter," every cause of considerable difficulty or importance, was brought to Moses; so that he might well complain of being overwhelmed, between the cares of government and the murmurings of the people. HE, therefore, who "knows our frame, and remembers that we are but dust," (Ps. ciii. 14.) was indulgent to his complaint; but instead of taking him out of an office for which he had been so eminently fitted, appointed him coadjutors, whom he endowed with the same spirit, to qualify them for the situation. These being appointed, the spirit of prophecy was poured upon them, and they began to prophecy—perhaps in some Psalm of praise, "and did not cease," say our translators; but others, with more apparent propriety, "they added not;" so it is said, (Deut. v. 22.) "These words [the ten commandments] the Lord spake, and he added no more." On this occasion, two men, whose names had been put down for elders, but who (for some unknown reason) did not go to the tabernacle, were found prophesying in the camp; when Joshua, then a young man, and servant to Moses, and full of zeal, ran to tell his master, and cried, "My lord Moses, forbid them." Noble, indeed, was the reply of the Jewish legislator; "Enviest thou for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that he would put his spirit upon them!"

The conduct of Moses, however, in his remonstrance with the Lord, is not <sup>a</sup>so unexceptionable. It seems as if he had thought the Lord had made a promise that he could not fulfil. What! (as if he had said,) dost thou know there are 600,000 footmen to eat flesh for a month together? Shall the flocks and herds be slain for them? Shall the fishes of the sea be all collected for them? No, Moses, they shall be fed on birds! "And the Lord said unto Moses, thou shalt see whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not."—"And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea," in such vast multitudes, that the people gathered night and day, until at last they were so gorged with them, that they produced a pestilence; thus God can punish as well by plenty as by scarcity; and it often happens, that those things for which men have lusted, become their torment and their death. Whence come gout, and scrofula, and bilious complaints? Come they not even of luxury, debauchery, and intemperance? and is not every church-yard with <sup>a</sup>as a kibroth-hattaavah, as containing "the graves of lust?" He gave them their request, and sent leanness into their soul." (Ps. cvi. 15.) Alas! how often has this been the case with us!

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1-16. Miriam and Aaron's sedition.—Before we enter on this history, it may be proper to notice an objection urged by Paine, and others, against Moses being the author of this book, because he speaks of himself as "very meek." It has been answered, that pagan authors have done the like; but we do not wish to place him on a level with them.

Ver. 34. Kibroth-hattaavah.—Margin, "Graves;" Ainsworth, "Monuments of lust."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. And Miriam and Aaron spake.—Hebrew, "And Miriam (or Mary) she spake, and Aaron."—An Ethiopian woman.—Hebrew, "The woman the Cushite." Cush here signifies that part of Arabia Deserta which was then called Midian.—Dr. Wall.

Ver. 3. The meekest man upon earth.—Supposing these to be the words of Moses, and rightly translated, it has been remarked, that in Homer, Ulysses calls himself the wisest of the Greeks, and Achilles represents himself as the most valiant, &c. See Orient. Cusit, No. 728. As to the meaning of the original, the radical idea, as given by Parkhurst, is, "to act upon, to affect in a bad sense, to afflict, oppress, depress, humble." It produces its effect as all the men which were upon the face of the earth.)

4 And <sup>c</sup>the LORD spake suddenly unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three unto the tabernacle of the congregation. And they three came out.

5 And the LORD came <sup>a</sup>down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth.

6 And he said, Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the LORD will make myself known unto him in a <sup>b</sup>vision, and will speak unto him in a <sup>c</sup>dream.

7 My servant Moses is not so, who is <sup>a</sup>faithful in all my <sup>b</sup>house.

8 With him will I speak <sup>a</sup>mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the LORD shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not <sup>m</sup>afraid to speak against my servant Moses?

9 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against them; and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; and behold, Miriam became <sup>a</sup>leprous, white as snow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, she was leprous.

11 And Aaron said unto Moses, Alas, my

It is better answered, that "the words are a parenthesis, most probably inserted by another hand; and are to be considered either as a reason why he did not reply to his enemies, but the Lord; or else they are insinuated as an answer to the charge of his enemies, and imply, that so far from assuming an authority to which he was not deputed, his disposition was rather to withdraw, even when his call was most evident, as appears in another instance." (Exod. iii. 11-13. iv. 10-13, &c.) It is doubtful, however, whether meek be the proper meaning. "I am doubtful whether or not, in this case, the original term may not intend a weakness, rather than a virtue, and imply that Moses was timid and mild, even to a fault." Moses appears in several instances to have laboured under great depression of spirits, as upon his first call to be the liberator of the Israelites. So in the chapter preceding this, his reasoning with the Lord on the impossibility of feeding the Israelites with flesh, can only be accounted for from his labouring under a depression of mind, which led him to magnify difficulties in a case where none could possibly occur: for, "Is any thing too hard for Jehovah?" (Gen. xviii. 14.) Again, in the instance now before us, when his brother and sister both murmured and conspired against him, he says nothing to either, but prays for them. It is true that, in some few instances, he discovered irritability, and a hasty temper; but this is often the case with persons labouring under nervous affections, as seems to have been the case with Moses. But in neither of these suppositions have we any solid objection to Moses being the author of this book.

The sacred history is so concise, that, at this distance of time, it is often difficult to ascertain particulars. The quarrel before us seems to have originated in some words between Miriam and Zipporah, the Ethiopian woman whom Moses had married; an imprudent match, as it should seem, but contracted at a time when Moses had no idea of the elevated and important sphere in which he was called subsequently to move. That Miriam was first and principally in fault, Ainsworth infers from the Hebrew verb being feminine; though, by the next verse, it is evident they were both in fault, and were, therefore, both called up to judgment. The insinuation was, that Moses took too much upon him, the Lord having spoken by them also: but the Lord condescends to state, that he had distinguished Moses by a degree of intimacy and familiarity (so to speak) with which no other prophet had ever been favoured. "Wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?" And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them, and the cloud arose from the tabernacle, in a manner that indicated the Lord had taken his departure. And "Aaron looked upon Miriam, and, behold, she was <sup>a</sup>leprous, white as snow." Astonished and alarmed, he cried to Moses, who, though the insulted party, with all the affection of a brother prayed for her, and she was healed; but banished seven days sound does an echo in reply; hence it is often used in the sense of answering. When used to express humility, it is in the sense of being humbled by injury or oppression; so it is applied to humbling a woman by defilement, as in the case of Dinah, Gen. xxxiv. 2. See also Deut. xxi. 14; xxii. 24, 29. Dr. Clarke, who takes the word in the sense of oppressed, or overburdened, refers to the complaint of Moses in the preceding chapter, (ver. 11-14.) "Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant? Wherefore layest thou the burden of all this people upon me?" Moses, then, so far from assuming improper authority, was, at times at least, the most depressed man of the age. After all, however, the words appear to be a parenthesis.

Ver. 10. Leprous, white as snow.—This was the sorest species of leprosy See Exod. iv. 6. Levit. xiii. 18, &c.

lord, I beseech thee, lay not the sin upon us, wherein we have done foolishly, and wherein we have sinned.

12 Let her not be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half consumed when he cometh out of his mother's womb.

13 And Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, heal her now, O God, I beseech thee.

14 ¶ And the Lord said unto Moses, if her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? let her be shut out from the camp seven days and after that let her be received in again.

15 And Miriam was shut out from the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

1 The names of the men who were sent to search the land: 17 their instructions: 21 their acts: 25 their relation.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them.

3 And Moses by the commandment of the Lord sent them from the wilderness of Paran: all those men were heads of the children of Israel.

4 And these were their names: Of the tribe of Reuben, Shammua the son of Zaccur.

5 Of the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat the son of Hori.

6 Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

7 Of the tribe of Issachar, Igal the son of Joseph.

8 Of the tribe of Ephraim, Oshea the son of Nun.

9 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the son of Raphu.

10 Of the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel the son of Sodi.

11 Of the tribe of Joseph, namely, of the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi the son of Susi.

13 Of the tribe of Asher, Sethur the son of Michael.

14 Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi.

15 Of the tribe of Gad, Geuel the son of Machi.

16 These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Oshea the son of Nun, Jehoshua.

17 ¶ And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain:

18 And see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many;

19 And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strong holds;

20 And what the land is, whether it be fruitful or lean, whether there be wood therein, or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. Now the time was the time of the first ripe grapes.

21 ¶ So they went up, and searched the land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath.

22 And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron; where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmaj, the children of Anak, were. (Now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the brook of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the brook of Eshcol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence.

25 And they returned from searching of the land after forty days.

26 ¶ And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Pa-from the tabernacle, to humble her before the congregation. Thus terminated a sedition which threatened the most serious consequences, both to Moses and the Israelites. The former, by leaving his cause in the hand of God, was safe; and the offenders, through his intercession, were humbled and forgiven.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—33. Spies sent to search the land of Ver. 12. As one dead.—By this it appears that the whiteness was as dead flesh. See Lev. xiii. 4, 5, &c. Thus is she held forth as a warning to others. See Deut. xxiv. 9.

Ver. 14. Spit in her face.—Rather, "Spit before her." Sir John Chardin remarks, that spitting before any one, in speaking of his actions, is, through the East, an expression of extreme detestation. See Deut. xxv. 9.—Harmer, vol. ii. p. 510.

Ver. 16. Hazeroth.—[The exact situation of this place is unknown. Dr. Shaw computes it to be three days' journey, i. e. thirty miles from Sinai. From this passage, it appears that the wilderness of Paran commenced immediately upon their leaving this station. Calmet observes, that there is a town called Hazor, in Arabia Petrea, in all probability the same as Hazerim, the ancient habitation of the Hivites, (Deut. ii. 23.) and likewise, according to all appearances, the Hazeroth where the Hebrews encamped.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 3. Paran.—[The wilderness of Paran, says Dr. Wells, seems to have been taken in a larger, and in a stricter sense. In the larger sense, it seems to have denoted all the desert and mountainous tract, lying immediately upon their leaving this station, and extending westward, to the land of Edom eastward, the land of Canaan northward, and the Red sea southward. And, in this sense, it seems to have comprehended the wilderness of Sin, and the wilderness of Sinai, also, the adjoining tract wherein lay Kibroth-hataavah and Hazeroth. In this sense, it is probably understood in Deut. i. 19, where, by "that great and terrible wilderness," is probably intended the wilderness of Paran in its largest acceptation: for, in its stricter acceptation, it seems not to have been so great and terrible a wilderness; and is taken to denote more peculiarly that part of Arabia Petrea which lies between mount Sinai and Hazeroth west, and mount Seir east. The Arabs give the name of Wadi Faran, or the Valley of Faran, to a valley which extends, for the length of a journey of a day and a half, from the foot of mount Sinai to the Arabian Gulf. In the rainy season it is filled with water, and the inhabitants are obliged to retire to the hills. Part of it is far from being fertile, but serves as pasture for goats, camels, and asses; but a part of it is said to be very fertile. In its neighborhood are the ruins of an ancient city; and there are also found inscriptions in unknown characters.]—Bagster.—All those men were heads.—Not of tribes, (compare ch. vii.) but, perhaps, of hundreds, or of thousands. See Ex. xvii. 21, 24.

Ver. 16. Oshea.—This name should be written Hoshea, (or Hosca; it is the Canaan.—The Israelites were now arrived at the wilderness of Paran, on the south border of the land of Canaan: and two questions here naturally arise.

1. Were they justified in sending out spies to search the promised land? By comparing Deut. i. 19—24, it appears, (1) That Moses had issued an order previous to this, to "Go up and same as the prophet's.) which signifies a saviour; and by adding a letter (jod) from the incommunicable name, it became Jehoshua, or Joshua. This adding a letter of Jehovah's name was intended to express peculiar favour, as in the cases of Abraham and Sarah.

Ver. 17. Southward.—Hebrew, "By the south;" meaning, by the south of Canaan, on the borders of which they now were. So Chazkunt.

Ver. 20. Fat or lean.—That is, whether the soil were rich or poor.—Now was the time of first ripe grapes.—That is, our August.

Ver. 21. So they went up, &c.—[The spies having left Kadesh-barnea, which was in the desert of Paran, (see ver. 25.) they proceeded to the desert of Zin, (or Zin) all along the land of Canaan, nearly following the course of the river Jordan, till they came to Rehob, a city situated near mount Libanus, at the northern extremity of the Holy Land, towards the road that leads to Hamath. Thence they returned through the midst of the same land, by the borders of the Sidonians and Philistines, and passing by mount Hebron, entered famous by the residence of Abraham formerly, and by the gigantic descents of Adam at that time, they passed through the valley of the brook of Eshcol, where they cut down the bunch of grapes, mentioned ver. 23, and returned to the camp of Israel, after an absence of forty days.]—Calmet.—Wilderness of Zin.—Not the same as "the wilderness of Sin," Ex. xvi. 1.; that was near Egypt; this, on the borders of Canaan.

Ver. 22. Hebron.—Then called Kadesh-barnea, is here mentioned as a place of high antiquity, even more ancient than Zoan, called by Pagan authors, Tanis. Here Moses wrought his miracle, Psalm lxxviii. 12, 43; and the inhabitants boasted both of their wisdom and antiquity, Isa. xix. 11, 13; xxx. 4. See Calmet.

Ver. 23. Brook.—Margin, "Valley." The same places that in the dry season were "valleys," in the time of the rains and floods, became "brooks." This was the dry season, and should be therefore rendered "valley," both in this verse and the next.

Ver. 24. Eshcol.—That is, the cluster of grapes. A learned traveller says, "At the distance of only six miles to the south, is the rivulet and valley called Eshcol, celebrated in Scripture for producing very large grapes. In other parts of Syria, also, I have seen grapes of such an extraordinary size, that a bunch of them would be a sufficient burthen for one man."—Mant's Travels.

Many eye-witnesses assure us, that in Palestine, the vines and bunches of ran, to <sup>r</sup> Kadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and showed them the fruit of the land.

27 And they told him, and said, We came unto the land whither thou sentest us, and surely it <sup>a</sup> floweth with milk and honey; and <sup>a</sup> this is the fruit of it.

28 Nevertheless, the <sup>a</sup> people be strong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover, we saw the children of <sup>a</sup> Anak there.

29 The <sup>a</sup> Amalekites dwell in the land of the south: and the Hittites, and the Jebusites, and the Amorites, dwell in the mountains; and the Canaanites dwell by the sea, and by the coast of Jordan.

30 And <sup>a</sup> Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well <sup>a</sup> able to overcome it.

31 But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.

32 And <sup>a</sup> they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, saying, The land through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of a <sup>a</sup> great <sup>b</sup> stature.

33 And there we saw the giants, the sons of <sup>a</sup> Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own sight as <sup>d</sup> grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

possess the land;" saying, "Fear not, neither be discouraged." (2) That the people first proposed to send out spies to search the land. (3) That Moses, suspecting no evil in the measure, gave it his sanction, and selected those whom he considered as proper persons. (4) That, however, nothing was done in the business without consulting the Lord in the usual way, who gave also his sanction to the measure. From all these considerations, it does not appear that the people sinned in sending to search the land. But then,

2. Wherein consisted the sin which provoked the Lord to lead them forty years through the desert? As concerns the spies, it appears that they gave a good report of the produce of the land, but a false one as to the climate, and an exaggerated one as to the strength of the inhabitants, whereby the people were discouraged, and threatened to murder Joshua and Caleb, and go back to Egypt. The produce could not be disputed, because they brought specimens with them; not that the bunch of grapes, though doubtless very large, was so heavy as to require two men to bring it, (as the Jews pretend;) but this was the most convenient way, to prevent the grapes from being damaged; and, besides, it is probable that the figs and pomegranates were suspended on the same branch: the fruit was, however, unquestionably admirable. But the latter part of the report was inconsistent in itself, and evidently intended to discourage the people, and prevent their going up. It was inconsistent, because we know that the land was small, and the people were very large (so that the Israelites were but like grasshoppers, compared to them): it seemed, therefore, more likely that the people should eat up the land, than the land the people. The expression, however, (ver. 32.) to eat up, or consume, was probably meant to insinuate that the climate was unhealthy; for had it meant only that the people destroyed one another, as some understand it, this would rather have been an encouragement to attack it. The insinuation was, however, false, as the representations of the size of the people were exaggerated. "All the people (say they) are men of great stature," such persons, however, are seldom strong in proportion to their height: and if they were, what avails the height of their enemies, or the strength of their walls, when the arm of the Lord was engaged grapes are almost of an incredible size. Stephen Schultz relates, "At Beit-jin, a village near Ptolemais, we took our supper under a large vine, the stem of which was nearly a foot and a half in diameter; the height about thirty feet, and covered with its branches and shoots, (for the shoots must be supported,) a hut of more than fifty feet long and broad. The bunches of these grapes are so large, that they weigh from ten to twelve pounds, and the grapes may be compared to our plumbs. Such a bunch is cut off and laid on a board, round which they seat themselves, and each helps himself to as many as he pleases." Forster, in his Hebrew Dictionary, (under the word Eshcol,) says, "that he knew, at Nurnburg, a monk of the name of Acacius, who had resided eight years in Palestine, and had also preached at Hebron, where he had seen bunches of grapes, which were as much as two men could conveniently carry."—Orient. Lit. No. 290.

Ver. 29. And the Canaanites.—"There were two hordes of Canaanites; one eastward by Jordan; those the Israelites destroyed; another westward, by the sea; these, I think, they never quite extirpated. But they were those whom the Greeks afterwards called Phœnicians."—Dr. Wall's Crit. Notes.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 The people murmur at the news. 11 God threateneth them. 13 Moses obtaineth pardon. 26 The murmurers are deprived of entering into the land. 36 The men who raised the evil report die by a plague.

AND all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people <sup>a</sup> wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel <sup>b</sup> murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness!

3 And wherefore hath the LORD brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us <sup>c</sup> return into Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron fell on <sup>d</sup> their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

6 ¶ And <sup>e</sup> Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes:

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is an exceeding good land.

8 If the LORD <sup>f</sup> delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with <sup>g</sup> milk and honey.

9 Only <sup>h</sup> rebel not ye against the LORD, neither <sup>i</sup> fear ye the people of the land: for they on behalf of Israel? We should never count on difficulties when we are following a divine command. Unbelief, like the sluggard, cries, "There is a lion in the way, a lion in the streets;" but "The righteous," believing in the divine promises, "are bold as a lion;" "Out of weakness they are made strong, wax valiant in fight, and turn to fight the armies of the aliens."

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1–25. The people murmur and rebel, and are excluded from Canaan.—Of a generation so prone to murmuring, we cannot be surprised to hear that they were excited to disobedience by such a report; but that, after the miracles they had seen, and with the pillar of cloud before their eyes, they should dare to accuse the Lord of bringing them into the wilderness to perish, is, indeed, the height of impiety, and might well provoke him to discard, and even to destroy them. But the pleading of Joshua and Caleb is truly tender and affecting. "If the Lord delight in us," say they, "then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land, for they are bread for us: their defence"—the providence that hitherto had shaded and protected them—"is departed from them, and Jehovah is with us:"—our shade on our right hand—(therefore) "fear them not." Thus the Christian, under all his trials, encourages himself "in the Lord his God!"

"True Christian fortitude," says Bishop Hall, "teaches us not to regard the number or quality of the opponents, but the equity of the cause; and cares not to stand alone, and challenge all comers; and if it could be opposed by as many words as men, it may be overborne, but it cannot be daunted: whereas popularity carries away weak minds, and teaches the safety of erring with a multitude. Caleb saw the giantly Anakims, and the walled city, as well as the rest; and yet he says, 'Let us go up and possess it': as if it were no more but to go, and see, and conquer. Faith is courageous, and makes nothing of those dangers wherewith others are quelled. It is very material with what eyes we look upon all objects. Fear doth not more multiply evils than Faith diminisheth them; which is, therefore, bold, because either it sees not, or contemns that terror which fear represents to the weak. There is none so valiant as the believer."

Ver. 33. The giants.—See note on Gen. vi. 4. They were doubtless banditti, who, by their ferocity as well as size, spread terror all around them. So the Patagonians, when first discovered, were reported perfect monsters; but when measured, proved little more than six feet high, generally; we have seen one from Ireland, between seven and eight feet high; and Dr. A. Clarke says, he knew one man eight feet six inches.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 4. Let us make a captain.—Margin, "Let us give a head." In Nehemiah we read they did so, ch. ix. 17.
